Oddly enough, we do not have to look far from these shores, to the Channel Islands, Scotland, Ulster and even the Isle of Wight during Cowes week, where people are allowed to purchase alcohol in public houses at most hours of the day. It has not led to increased problems on the streets and an increase in offences of drunkenness.

But flexible hours are only one issue. My hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) referred briefly to clubs. I wish to discuss the present law on clubs and the experiences of one cricket club in the midlands.

I have no interest to declare. I do not follow the sport of cricket; it is much too fast-moving for my taste. But the Leicestershire county cricket club has been able for more than 30 years to serve alcohol to its patrons during cricket matches. Over that period of 30 years there has never been any suggestion that the club has broken the law or that it was not running the licensed bar in a proper manner, and it has never been necessary to call the police because of riots outside or inside the ground due to drunkenness, as I am sure the local police will confirm.

After supplying alcohol for 30 years, this year, without warning, the cricket club was refused a licence and it has not been able, following its practice for this long period, to serve alcohol to its patrons during all cricket matches.

That has not happened because of a sudden change in the law. Perhaps there has been some other change. Could it be that in Leicester there is a new clerk to the justices or a different constitution of the licensing committee or a different police inspector with responsibility for licensing matters? Those are the only possibilities which could account for the odd, and some would say perverse, decision by the Leicester bench this year not to grant the cricket club its usual special licences.

This is an area of law which I ask my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary to look at in the not-too-distant future. Quite apart from the need for more flexible hours of opening, there is confusion and worry about what is a special occasion. The High Court has attempted to provide guidelines — in my view, not with a great deal of success. One recent case, Regina v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner, ex parte Maynard, made an attempt. In that case, the judge said that for an extension of permitted hours under section 74(4) an applicant must establish that the occasion upon which the application is based is a special occasion; secondly, that it is related to a national or local event; and, thirdly, that those who are to benefit by the extension of hours will be participating in some form or other.

The subject of that case was an application by a cinema owner who wanted to serve alcohol during the showing of a closed-circuit television presentation of the welterweight boxing championship of the world, taking place in America. The judge said that there was no element of participation and it was not a national or local event.

That has not satisfactorily clarified the law. What would happen on a similar occasion when a British athlete was taking part, as for instance on an occasion such as the World Cup? The courts are in some doubt as to what the law is. It cannot be a satisfactory state of affairs to allow that to continue.

Two years ago in Derbyshire, some 14 clubs were obliged to go dry for a time, not because they had broken the licensing law or because they had had problems which necessitated the attention of the police, but merely because those responsible for running the clubs had forgotten to post an application by a certain date. Is that a satisfactory state of affairs?

I understand that the organisation and methods branch of the Home Office is engaged in a survey involving a sample of magistrates courts, mainly with a view to establishing the scale of fees that would recover administrative costs. I understand that it has been suggested that, for new on or off-licences, the fee should rise from £12·50 to £125, and for the issue of a private members club registration certificate the fee should rise from £6·50 to £125. I hope that that review will also look generally at the working of the law. As I understand it, although courts have the power to grant club registration certificates for up to 10 years, since 1982 some decision seems to have been taken, perhaps by the Justices Clerks Association, that those certificates should be restricted to three years. Although Parliament has said that the courts can grant certificates for 10 years, for some reason the magistrates now seem to be creating extra work for themselves. Should licensees and clubs have to bear the cost of that extra work? Without over-egging the pudding, our licensing law is in a mess and many archaic provisions need looking at with some urgency. Twelve years ago, the Erroll report recommended drastic changes which are not necessarily being advocated today. Many of my hon. Friends have said that, by and large, public demand and the views of the trade could be accommodated by a smaller change than is suggested by the Erroll report.

I know that the Government have taken it upon themselves as a major policy task to review unnecessary restrictions, red tape and bureaucracy. Apart from looking at other areas such as the shops legislation, our licensing law needs to be looked at urgently because of the sense of injustice and frustration that is felt not ony by customers but by those who need to operate within the law and to apply to the courts for extensions from time to time. The law is not satisfactory, and I hope that the Government will give some commitment to review it at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. James Hill (Southampton, Test): This has been a most interesting debate so far. I want to recall to the memory of the House the private Member's Bill that I managed, more by luck than judgment, to get through both Houses — the Licensed Premises (Exclusion of Certain Persons) Act 1980. That Bill simply dealt with excessive drunkenness which led to vandalism and which could lead to violence in public houses.

The Bill provided that a man who had been arrested for violence in a public house would be brought before the magistrates and made subject to an exclusion order, banning him from the public house in which he created the damage, or from a series of public houses in that area. If he appeared again in that public house or series of public houses, the landlord could still serve him drinks but, on receipt of a simple telephone call, the police would then be at liberty to enter the public house and take him into custody. He could then be charged the next day and a further exclusion order, a fine of up to £200 or, in the most severe cases, a custodial sentence of up to two months could be imposed.

I want to remind the Home Office of that Act because, in the main, magistrates are not using it in the manner in which it was intended. It is not pertinent for publicans to have to go before the magistrates before they will serve an exclusion order. It is implicit in the Act that the magistrate has the power to exclude such people and I hope that a guideline will be sent out by the Home Office re-emphasising what I think is an important piece of private Member's legislation.

It has been a theme of the debate that magistrates in many areas—it does depend on the area—are most reluctant to grant exceptional licensing hours for whatever cause. I mentioned in an intervention earlier the horror felt in the city of Southampton which had been chosen to host the international fair of the tall ships. A local club owner wished to set up in a medieval square in the centre of Southampton a continental-style bar with umbrellas outside, where wine could be served between 3 pm and 5 pm. That would seem to all hon. Members to be perfectly reasonable. It was an international event, which attracted nearly 1·5 million people to the city of Southampton. That club owner was trying to create a more holiday like appearance in the city but his application was turned down out of hand. It was said that he could have appealed to the courts but there is never time for that. The magistrates made their decision and there was no time for the club owner to appeal.

I hope that a second guideline will go out to the magistrates from the Lord Chancellor's Department asking them to be flexible in agreeing to special events. I do not doubt that many a Conservative dinner dance breaks the law from time to time by not having a licence to serve drinks. Today's debate provides us with an opportunity to re-emphasise such points. I hope that the Minister will give many of us a satisfactory reply.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. David Mellor): We have had a thoughtful and lively debate. Some people seem to think that a thoughtful debate must be dull, but they would not think so if they had listened to today's debate. It is true that it has not been as well attended as some might have hoped, but the speeches have been of a uniformly high standard, and I am glad to have a chance to make my own contribution.

During my five and a half years in the House I have detected increasing pressure for change. It is therefore right that we should have the opportunity to discuss the issues today, and I am accordingly grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward), who spoke with great eloquence and good sense. He was too modest to tell us, but for the past week or two he has been suffering from a very painful and debilitating eye condition which makes it difficult for him to read. Notwithstanding that handicap, he made an eloquent speech and our appreciation of it must be even greater knowing the difficulties under which it was made.

It is invidious to name names after I have genuinely welcomed the debate and have thoroughly enjoyed listening to all the speeches that have been made, but it would be wrong not to point to my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine). In a very full public life he has devoted himself to the cause of alcohol and alcohol policy. Even if from time to time we disagreed with some of his points, he spoke in a way that we all respect, because we recognise that that is a view that needs to be heard and considered—and it will be.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) was right to point to the importance of people with expertise in the trade being available to advise the House. He spoke of his own expertise, which is considerable. Again, I think that we all enjoyed and needed the professionalism that he brought to his contribution. One noticeable thing about this new Parliament is the breadth of experience now represented on the Benches on both sides of the Chamber. I am sure that it adds to our ability to wrestle with some of these difficult issues. They may not be the biggest issues to which the Government have to address themselves, but they are difficult.

No hon. Member made that point more clearly than the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley). However he had spoken today, I was going to say that I very much welcomed him to his new responsibilities. Indeed, this is the first opportunity that I have had to welcome him. I particularly welcome him in the light of his speech, which was of striking eloquence. It was not necessary to agree with every inference that he drew to feel that what he had to say was of the first importance. His speech was plainly based on great experience and thoughtfulness arising from his work as a probation officer and the specialist work that he has done in dealing with the consequences of alcohol abuse and pressing for the need for alcohol education. He made a very important and worthwhile contribution, and I am sure that I was not alone in enjoying it. It gave rise to thoughts that make me unashamed of the fact that I shall be unable to resolve some of the issues raised today.

A considerable area remains for continued debate and thought, but the debate has revolved around the question of flexible opening hours. I do not criticise it for that. At a later stage there may well be a case for a more full-scale debate on overall alcohol policy. Such a debate would not involve me so much as my colleagues at the Department of Health and Social Security, but if someone were minded to stimulate such a debate I am sure that it would be very worth while.

I do not seek to criticise my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood if I say that he chose to fix his gaze on a narrower point, because ultimately very few of us in any area of policy can make a great march forward on all fronts, tackling every problem at a stroke. I know that those who called for that did not intend it to be so, but it is often a good argument for delay to suggest that everything must be tackled at once. Very few subjects are susceptible of that treatment, but provided that the surrounding facts permit it, I can see no objection to moving forward on this one front if the arguments lead in that direction. A piecemeal approach is not to be condemned in what is essentially the practical job of regulating regulations.

Particular attention has been focused on the provisions of the Licensing Act 1964, which governs permitted opening hours of on-licence premises in England and Wales. My hon. Friends the Members for Kingswood and for Gillingham, together with my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) and others, focused on the licensed trade's view that public houses as we know them will not survive unless licensees can vary opening hours to meet demand. I have considerable sympathy with those views. The Home Office receives many representations from local licensed victuallers' associations, restaurants and hotels, the leisure and entertainment industry and from hon. Members telling us that the time is now right for change. Indeed, there are more people now saying that than ever before in my experience. I accept, however, that my experience is more limited than that of my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point.

We have also received representations from those who hold the opposite view and fear that any liberalisation of the law will lead to an increase in the already high incidence of alcoholism and alcohol abuse. Both sides of the argument will be heard and debated when we consider whether, and how, our licensing laws should be revised.

In support of the call for longer or more flexible hours reference is constantly made — and has been this morning — to the recommendation of the Erroll committee, which published a report in 1972 suggesting that licensed premises should be allowed to open between 10 am and midnight without an afternoon break.

We have heard that the catering, entertainment and tourist industries believe that our restricted hours seriously interfere with their conduct of business. Many hon. Members have said that the extended opening hours in Scotland, brought about by the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976, have led, not to increased drunkenness, but to more responsible and leisurely drinking.

The essential difference between the English and Scottish provisions on permitted hours lies in the discretion given in Scotland to the licensing authority to vary the general permitted hours of opening. The prescribed hours of opening in both countries are broadly similar. They allow public houses to open on weekdays between 11 am and 10.30 pm or 11 pm with a break of two and a half hours in the afternoon. The hours on Sundays are shorter, but broadly the same.

As has constantly been said, in England and Wales the power of the licensing justices to grant regular extensions is tightly circumscribed. As a general rule, early morning and afternoon extensions may be granted only in the vicinity of markets, and extensions beyond the evening terminal hour are available only where the sale of drink is ancillary to the provision of food or music and dancing.

Some special arrangements are permitted and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) rightly says, that gives rise to bitter controversy. An example of that is the regrettable problems that have arisen with the Leicestershire county cricket club. It is a case that illustrates that hard cases make bad law. I hope that the people of Leicester, all of whom surely have an interest in the maintenance of a successful and profitable cricket club, will come together and reach a sensible conclusion. That was certainly the wish that I expressed when, a few months ago, I met a deputation of hon. Members from both sides of the House and representatives of the city of Leicester and of Leicestershire generally.

In contrast to England, the licensing boards in Scotland have, since 1976, had a much wider discretion and can grant extensions for any part of the day in respect of individual premises if they consider that desirable. As we have heard, that power has been widely used to permit Scottish public houses to open during the afternoon break and late at night, especially in the larger towns and cities. I am pleased to accept that the first indications—and this has been borne out by speeches today—of the effects of the 1976 legislation have been encouraging. The forecasts that longer opening hours in Scotland would result in dramatic increases in drunkenness and drink-driving offences have proved to be inaccurate. Instead, the available statistics point to no significant adverse effects.

I must, however, add a note of caution. It would be dangerous to assume that the reduction in drunkenness offences north of the border is attributable directly and specifically to the change in the licensing laws. As the hon. Member for Hammersmith said, other factors may be at work. It is important that we should look at all the available evidence and not simply at selective statistics which, at face value, appear to prove a case one way or another. The balance of the statistics appears to the casual reader to go in the direction that the majority of hon. Members have suggested.

When advocating, as I do, the need for a word of caution, I must point out that convictions for being drunk and disorderly do not necessarily tell the whole story. A factor which I have not heard mentioned this morning is the increasing practice of prosecuting authorities—it is one which the Home Office applauds—to caution rather than to bring those accused of drunkenness before the courts. That factor needs to be borne in mind when we consider any alleged drop in the number of those who are drunk and disorderly in our streets.

It seems that there is no one fact yet known which is conclusive. It is not escapism to say that there is a need to look further. When emotions are raised, as they so plainly are in this debate, we need to bear in mind that not all the facts adduced are necessarily open to only one interpretation.

I think of the famous temperance lecturer, the high point of whose address against the demon drink was to produce at the right moment a glass which she filled with water and then another glass which she filled with gin. From a pocket came a matchbox containing two worms. With a theatrical flourish one worm was dropped in the water and the other in the gin. Both worms wriggled for a while and predictably enough the one in the gin expired rather more quickly than the one in the water. Just as it did so she pointed to the sky and asked, with a dramatic gesture of which even my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point would be proud, "What does this prove?" At that point someone at the back, perhaps more like my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood, said, "If you have worms, drink gin." Statistics can be dangerous and on present evidence I do not think that a case has been made out fully one way or the other.

I have been asked again this morning to consider the Erroll committee's report. One of the main reasons why the committee's recommendation to introduce longer opening hours has not been implemented is the concern of successive Governments that the various indicators of alcohol misuse continue to rise significantly. Concern about this growth has over the years prompted a number of influential bodies to examine the problem in detail and to consider ways of controlling it. I shall give one or two examples. In 1977 the Expenditure Committee, in its report on preventative medicine, and the Advisory Committee on Alcoholism, stressed that extreme caution should be taken over any relaxation of the licensing laws. In 1979 a special committee of the Royal College of Psychiatrists urged that there should be no further relaxation of the broad range of licensing provisions.

The obstacle in the past — my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point and the hon. Member for Hammersmith have made it clear that it still remains—was the serious problems caused by alcohol misuse. In the very week that the British Medical Association has held a conference on alcoholism, it would be wrong if I were not to say that some disturbing and troubling statistics have been given. Professor Kendell, professor of psychiatry at the Royal Edinburgh hospital, was quoted in the newspapers as saying that there was "abundant evidence" that the ill effects of drink were linked to consumption. Between 1950 and 1976, British annual consumption of pure alcohol per head almost doubled from 5·2 litres to 9·7 litres. Drunkenness convictions doubled, deaths from liver cirrhosis increased by 60 per cent. and hospital admissions for alcoholism increased by some 2,500 per cent. Professor Alan Maynard, professor of health economics at York university, claimed that the social cost of alcohol abuse from sickness absence, unemployment, treatment costs to the NHS, accidents and crime was an absolute minimum of £1·6 billion a year. He said that premature deaths from alcohol-related disease and accidents were between 5,000 and 8,000 a year.

We do not have to accept all those statistics as being wholly accurate, or the last word on the matters to which they relate, to recognise that the problem of alcohol in our society is one to which we must all give careful consideration, not least when we are planning any change in the law.

Sir Bernard Braine: We need not accept that the statistics reflect the position exactly, but will my hon. Friend concede that they show a worsening position over the years?

Mr. Mellor: I am sure that there is no doubt that the problem of alcoholism has been worsening year after year. We must ask ourselves whether changing the licensing laws would make any difference. The hon. Member for Hammersmith identified certain problems that are bound to be caused when a socially acceptable drug is at large in the community.

That takes me back to the point that I made earlier, which I think commanded some support. Provided that one were satisfied that the indicators of alcohol abuse would not be altered by a change in the licensing laws and thereby made worse, there would be no reason why a responsible Government could not make progress or allow progress to be made. We must be careful to ensure that we have the proper indicators to enable that decision to be taken.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Ryman) is not in the Chamber. As ever, he was provocative in his statements. There was a great deal of sense in his contribution, which was strongly backed up by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton. We must not consider just whether we should look at the effects of alcohol abuse on people's health and the cost thereby caused to the community. I am troubled, as is the hon. Member for Hammersmith—we have looked at the same figures and considered the same cases — at the impact of drink on crime. We are all scarred by our experiences, some of which we would rather not have had, but we have to profit from them. Just as, I suspect, the hon. Member for Hammersmith is scarred and troubled by his consideration of crimes of violence when sitting in court and seeing the disinhibiting effect of alcohol—in many cases it has a gross effect—so I am troubled, after 18 months in the Home Office, by reading a dozen files a week on murderers and life sentence prisoners and noting the impact of alcohol on them.

The hon. Member for Hammersmith gave a cautious estimate that alcohol was involved in 50 per cent. of murder cases. I seldom read a file in which the influence of alcohol is not pointed out as a material factor in the crime. Even allowing for the fact—the hon. Member for Blyth Valley made this point only too clearly — that some people will want to touch up the effect of the impact of alcohol to minimise their criminality in the alleged offences, I am still deeply troubled by the number of crimes of violence actuated by drink. Some argue that if drink had not been consumed people would not have behaved in a particular way. I think that some people are predisposed to violence, come what may. It seems that the ability that some people have to resist violence is reduced by alcohol, and that is a problem.

Equally, one notes the effect of throwing people who have been in pubs out on to the streets. They then go to fast-food restaurants, queue up and become argumentative about their place in the queue. The number of acts of serious violence occurring during the period immediately after the pubs close might show — a number of experienced police officers have said this to me—that a more phased removal of people from places of drink to their homes might reduce, not increase, crime.

That is why I unashamedly say to the House that there are pointers going both ways. No hon. Member can stand up in this debate and say that there are not perfectly valid reasons for standing on either side. This is not one of those black and white issues. If we could be assured that longer opening hours would not lead to an increased incidence of alcoholism and alcohol-related problems, our way ahead would be much clearer. That is why we are taking care to observe the effects of permitted hours in Scotland and why I do not apologise to my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point for the fact that that experience has been available for eight years. Eight years is not that long a period during which to assess the long-term changes.

If, as we hope, the report of the carefully commissioned survey undertaken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland into the effects of the 1976 legislation is available by next summer, we shall have taken a material step forward. The survey is being conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. It will follow the line of those undertaken in Scotland between 1976 and 1978, of which some details have been mentioned. It will be possible, building on that earlier careful research, to compare the results and have a better idea of what trends have emerged. Although the trends might be clearer, it is likely that, as with the temperance lecturer who made what she believed was a clear argument, much might be open to another view.

Mr. Lawrence: It would be most helpful, apart from concentrating the mind, if my hon. Friend could say when he believes the Government can introduce recommendations based on those studies.

Mr. Mellor: I cannot predict that. I shall develop the Government's line on this, and if my hon. and learned Friend will bear with me I shall tell him as much as I can today, although I suspect that it may not be as much as he would wish. I have tried to show why it would be difficult for anyone to do that at present.

It would be foolhardy to predict the results of the survey, but it may make the approach clearer and may convince not only the Government but those who, for perfectly reputable reasons, are opposed to flexible hours that it is safe to contemplate the relaxation of our laws. I should be happy if that were the case, but such an important change can be based only on a firm foundation of evidence, not on a wish and a prayer.

There are further complications. Although it is true that the licensed trade in general favours greater flexibility of opening hours, sections of the trade favour different systems of flexibility. Not all support the adoption of the Scottish system, and some view with alarm the prospect of running a pub for 12 or more hours a day without a break. Others favour flexibility within the present maximum of nine or nine and a half opening hours on weekdays, leaving the choice of hours to the licensee. There are some who wish the law to be revised on the lines proposed by Erroll, thus enabling licensees to open at any time of their choice between 10 am and midnight. My hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood conceded that there was no unanimity in the trade.

The licensed traders and associations representing hotels and restaurants are considering how the law should be amended; not just saying that they agree that the law should be amended. I hope — if my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham is involved my hope may become an expectation — that at the end of their deliberations they will reach a unanimous view which they can demonstrate has widespread support. As so often in the past on other issues, the trade has weakened the impact of its proposals because it appears to be hopelessly divided on key issues. To coin a phrase, a public house divided against itself cannot stand — [Interruption.] I am glad that the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) entered the Chamber to hear that, which will have given him some pleasure.

In deference to the arguments advanced by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton, may I say that the views of others involved in the present arrangements must be carefully considered. Licensing justices have wide responsibilities and great experience of the law, so their views must be taken into account. My hon. and learned Friend was right to mention the police, who have to enforce the law. They have a view which I should like to see more focused. So far we have had helpful, but spasmodic, indications from one or two distinguished policemen. It would be helpful to know the overall view of the police, particularly on sensitive matters such as the impact on crime.

Mr. Soley: I accept many of the points that the Minister has made about the problem of getting agreement among the various groups involved. However, I should be more encouraged if he would agree that that division between the groups shows the need for an alcohol policy. The thrust for such a policy must come from the Government, because it will not be pressed in a coherent way by outside groups.

Mr. Mellor: It would be unfair to say that the Government do not have an alcohol policy. However, we do not have the feeling of omniscience which perhaps comes more readily to others. We do not feel that, by taking the reins in our own hands, we can solve some fairly deep-seated social difficulties that may affect only a small minority, but are deeply troubling.

A shoemaker must stick to his last, and my job is to discuss the licensing laws. I try to set them in context and to take an informed and educated view of the overall alcoholism problem. The sort of debate which the hon. Member for Hammersmith has in mind cannot take place in the absence of Ministers from the DHSS, who have to make provision for the impact on our health system of growing abuse of alcohol. I do not say that there is no answer to the point made by the hon. Gentleman, but perhaps this is not the forum for it. It would be no bad thing if the House broadened the debate and allowed the various views to be canvassed.

To sum up, there is no irremediable obstacle to changing the law on opening hours. The case for change has many sympathisers within the Government, but there are two reasons why we have no immediate plans to introduce legislation to revise the present permitted opening hours. First, we need to be satisfied that longer or more flexible hours will not have harmful consequences. The evidence is not yet available, but I hope that it will be before long. The key is to establish that flexible hours would be at least neutral in relation to alcohol abuse. To move before we are satisfied of that would not be responsible or sensible.

Secondly, there is no obvious agreement on what system of flexibility should be adopted in England and Wales. As I said before, the door to change is not bolted and barred; it stands enticingly ajar.

Mr. Hayward: By leave of the House, I shall reply to the debate. I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for his comments and particularly for what he said about the problem that I have experienced in the past week and a half. I assure the House that my blurred vision has nothing to do with excessive consumption of alcohol. It is caused by an eye infection. That problem has made preparing for the debate more difficult than it might have been; it has been particularly difficult to read, for example, the counter-arguments that have been put so ably by my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine).

I know what difficulties arise from excessive alcohol consumption. My hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point and the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) made clear the difficulties that this country, the western world and eastern Europe face from excessive alcohol consumption.

I was surprised that no reference was made in the debate to the fact that excessive consumption of alcohol may be partly attributable to people's increased affluence. They can now direct parts of their income towards leisure and social activities that they were previously not able to enjoy. In that connection, I referred to shops and supermarkets, and as much as anything else increased affluence is a reason for the increase in alcoholism.

It is important to recognise that at no stage in the debate has any hon. Member — I am not intentionally misinterpreting my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point—said that he is against some form of change in the licensing laws in England and Wales. Many hon. Members said that they wished that more Members had been present for the debate. It is significant that there have been no contributions from Scottish Members of Parliament to say that what the House did in 1976 was wrong. At the end of the debate in 1976, my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor), then representing Glasgow, Cathcart, said that, while he opposed the measure, he hoped that he would be proved wrong in his experience. Comments have been made for and against in terms of the statistics available, but it is significant that no Scottish Members of Parliament have told us that what the Chamber did in 1976 was wrong.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): I had not intended to intervene. I am not a Scottish Member of Parliament, but a Scot who is a Member of Parliament. I was a member of the Edinburgh licensing court at that time and have had some interest in the problem. There would be great resistance, particularly from the police, if there were any attempt in Scotland to go back to what is now the situation in England, because the incidence of "drunk and uncatchable", as we used to call it, has dropped significantly since the opening up of the licensing laws in Scotland.

Mr. Hayward: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that contribution, which is particularly important given the experience that he cited. I also referred to the experience of the Glasgow licensing authorities. However, as my hon. Friend the Minister said, the evidence needs to be carefully analysed. I hope that what I have heard today—as with statistics, it is always a matter of interpretation—shows that there would be no reasonable barrier to introducing legislation, even if the statistics proved neutral. I hope that that means that some legislation will be put before the House in the next parliamentary Session of 1985-86.

At the same time, I also hope that at some stage the House will have the opportunity to debate alcohol policy, as the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) said. A long time before I came to the House, I had the opportunity of listening to the hon. Gentleman talking about alcoholism at St. Andrew's hospital in Northampton. I recognise the authority with which he speaks on this subject, and his many years of involvement.

As the Minister did, we should recognise the growing pressure for change outside the House. We should recognise that the current anomalies need change and that there will always remain statistics about which we can argue. My hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point referred to a series of statistics, many of which I am well aware of—in fact, I have read the book from which he quoted. However, he did not show that, although many of the problems were caused because people consumed alcohol in pubs, many others were caused late at night, probably as a result of alcohol bought and consumed elsewhere. That is an important factor to bear in mind.

In seeking to withdraw my motion, I hope and believe that it would be worthwhile, in everyone's interest in England and Wales, if a Bill were brought forward in the next Session of 1985-86. I say that in the knowledge that, at whatever stage of the debate I had withdrawn the motion, we, unlike the rest of the population, would be able to adjourn for a drink. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

North Devon (Regional Aid)

1.4 pm

Mr. Tony Speller (Devon, North): I beg to move,

That the House accepts the need for regional aid in north Devon.

Having been a Member of the House for six years, I find it a rare privilege to be answered by a Minister who entered the House at the same time and a particular pleasure for me that it is the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier). We have much in common in that we both come from areas devastated by the economic depression, neither of which has been helped by the Government's latest round of cuts in assisted area status. I know, therefore, that I have a sympathetic audience in the Minister even if there are not many other people here.

Of all the unkind cuts made by the Government, perhaps the unkindest of all is the treatment of areas such as north Devon. I do not suggest that north Devon is somehow strange or different from other areas—I find it beautiful and nicer than other parts of the country—but it shares the problem of lack of infrastructure with many areas in the south-west and other areas on the periphery of this country.

First, I must congratulate the Lobby correspondent of the Western Morning News, who managed to predict with about 95 per cent. accuracy the contents of the Government's statement a week before it was made. That was useful in that we were forewarned—although we were not, alas, forearmed, as the Government have the arms. Nevertheless, it is a continuing source of aggravation to Back Benchers that our friends and advisers in the press always seem to be able to obtain information that we lack, whether it be a matter of a few hours earlier, which I understand, or a matter of days, which I do not accept.

Interestingly, I have a question on the Order Paper today for a priority written reply in relation to flooding a few days ago in north Devon. Flood works will be deeply affected by the loss of assisted area status because the half of Barnstaple still to be protected will lose the possibility of grant from the EEC. My question was a simple one about flood warnings and I gather that a reply is now hastening to me from the corridors of power across the way to those occupied by this somewhat frustrated Back Bench Member to the effect that my question will be answered "as soon as possible"—presumably, once this debate is over and I have made various points about the problems of areas such as north Devon.

The people of north Devon do not hold out a begging bowl and do not expect their Member of Parliament to do so, but I wish to describe some of the problems that already exist and some of those which will occur as a result of the grievous changes made by the Government.

Until 1979, the whole of my constituency had development area or special development area status. I was happy to be elected in that year. Since then we have lost, first, development area status and now assisted area status. It would be unreasonable to expect my constituents not to see a connection from the fact that there was a change of Government and then a change in status for the area. I join them in that feeling.

In July this year, I received a letter from the Under-Secretary of State for Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark). With his usual courtesy, bless him, he notified me that the towns of Barnstaple and Ilfracombe were to be merged for the purposes of unmployment figures. Unemployment in Ilfracombe rises to more than 35 per cent. at some times of the year and in the current year has not fallen below 20 per cent. At present, it is a rather sad seaside town, with no railway connection and no decent road connection with the areas from which tourists come. For example, it takes longer to drive from Ilfracombe to Gawick than to fly from Gatwick to Majorca.

[Mr. Tony Speller]

There are problems of distance and lack of infrastructure. Nevertheless, development area status has not merely been reduced to intermediate area status—it has been taken away altogether. I mention my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Employment because Plymouth, where unemployment is lower than in north Devon, has retained assisted status. That is good luck for Plymouth. I note from the current unemployment figures, a copy of which I received today, that whereas unemployment increased by two in my hon. Friend's constituency last month, it increased by 258 in mine. Plymouth, an excellent city of which I am extremely fond, has good roads, inter-city rail, an airport and a seaport. With its two additional unemployed, for whom I am truly sorry, it is to retain area status. My part of the world has higher unemployment, no decent roads, a passing railway service, no airport and no seaport and has lost its status. It is not difficult to understand the Government's logic —it is physically impossible.

What employer or what man setting up a factory in my part of the world will say, "I will opt for north Devon because the area is good"—it is good—"because it is beautiful"—it is beautiful—"because it has a good coastline"—it has a beautiful coastline—when roads, rail and infrastructure it has not? "No," he will say—and I do not blame him—"I will go to Plymouth, where I can get some assistance and where the infrastructure can be improved by the use of European development funds." I must tell the Government, through my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, that I have decided on a one-man strike against EEC legislation. If north Devon is no longer to receive EEC funds, the hon. Member for Devon, North will no longer attend the House after midnight as we go through the several litres, metres or kilos of documents. I rather look forward to that because it is the only silver lining that I have seen in a black and bitter week.

I am not singling out Plymouth—I shall pick on other areas. When I look around the United Kingdom I see the destruction of many industrial areas. That destruction is largely self-inflicted. I am sorry for my friends in the midlands and am glad that they now have some recognition, but I must observe that they had a motor cycle industry, a motor car industry and many others. They no longer have them. That is not my fault but, frankly, it may well have been theirs. I am glad that areas such as Merseyside are getting assistance, but they refused the container ships and their problems are largely of their own making.

That is not the case in the west country. We have had our industrial revolution. It was the change from the days of my youth when every parish and village was full of farm people—people who worked on farms and people who worked in firms that supplied farms. A Devonshire village now has no farmers, as farmers live on the farm. It has very few farm labourers, because there are very few farm labourers. It has the second home, which is usually empty and not contributing greatly to the rates, the commuter, who is welcome, and the retired who have come to live among us and create new industry. They are also welcome arrivals.

We did not complain, cry and seek aid because agriculture went through the trauma of losing almost all its labour. Ever now, agriculture, probably the most efficient industry in Britain, has been hit by the imposition of milk quotas. I realise that this is not the time or the place to deal with agricultural matters, but it is fair to mention them when considering development areas. Areas such as Devonshire and parts of Cornwall, Dorset and Hampshire have lost considerably recently because of agricultural problems arising from population and, now, milk quotas. I do not doubt that such areas will lose later because of other quotas. However, we have not hung out the begging bowl. We have got used to things and got on with life.

We can only get on with things, however, when there is something physical to get on with. I have mentioned our industrial revolution and the depopulation of the countryside, but there are many more factors. Our part of the world inevitably has the problem of the Good Lord and water. Three months ago I was joining my constituents in prayers for rain. One week ago I visited some of the 400 homes in Barnstaple, Ilfracombe, Lynton and Instow, where I live, where we had floods. I know that the Government have no control over rain, although successive Ministers have paraded around in that connection. I hope never again to see my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), the Minister with special responsibility for rain, doing his "Singing in the Rain" act with a damp umbrella on a cracked desert masquerading as a reservoir. If we are to have reservoirs, we have to have cash. If we are to have cash, a quantity of it must come from European funds. If we lose status, we lose access to those funds. I took the trouble recently to talk to the various county and district council authorities.

Water is always a problem with us. I appeal to the Government to remove the restrictions on the external financing limits, at least for the South-West water authority.Our charges for water services may increase by 10 per cent. this year. They will not increase by the expected figure of inflation or less, which the water authority sought, but by 10 per cent. or more because of Government restrictions on new works which the authorities need to do. The South-West water authority must raise the cash for investment in essential new works, such as flood prevention schemes and the Roadford reservoir, directly from charges. In other words, we must finance reservoirs and flood protection schemes on a year-on-year basis. No industrial system finances from current income works which will last 50 or 100 years, yet we must do that.

Not only are many vital new works and improvements required, but there are the requirements of European Community directives and part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Those of us who are strong conservationists are aware of the almost total absence of good control on pollution in rivers and estuaries. The Government place the responsibility for all such matters on the water authorities, which are then denied the finance for the work.

In the parish of Lappford, I experienced the ultimate humiliation of a Member of Parliament. People told me that the water pressure was not sufficiently high. As an ex-member of the water authority, I was happy to go to my friends there and ask them to increase the pressure. The water authority did so, and the pipes burst. Such are the problems when one applies a palliative or a piece of Elastoplast to a wound that requires surgery.

The Government decide how we shall pay for things. With 400 homes flooded and perhaps £100,000-worth of goods damaged in the Mill road area of Barnstaple, the water authority tells me that it receives no regional aid from Government because public bodies are excluded from the programme, and that only areas designated by the Government as regional aid areas are treated by the EC as appropriate areas for EC regional development fund grants. The following day, my hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) made his statement, which said, "Sorry, you no longer have access to these grants".

Because the Government have decided to reduce the number of areas in the south-west which at present are designated assisted areas, the amount of grant which we can receive from the EC will also be reduced. At present, the amount from the regional development fund allows the South-West water authority to increase the level of its capital investment programme above that which it would otherwise be able to spend—that is, within the level of the external financing limit fixed by the Government. If the EC grants are reduced and there is no corresponding increase from the Government—which is what I am asking for—the authority must reduce the level of its capital programme and my constituents will continue to suffer from floods. Their answer will be that it is the Government's fault. That is indeed the truth. It is time that the Government realised that all the petty faults together build a massive fault which may crack the foundations of the Government, not of the water authority.

North Devon, which is a large rural constituency, has one mile of dual carriageway. It is a nice piece of dual carriageway outside an industrial estate. It was built when we induced manufacturers to come to our area with the promise of roads. I now pay tribute to the Government, perhaps for the only time in the debate, and especially to my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker), who hopes to speed up the north Devon link road construction. I am grateful to her. She is a Minister who clearly understands the problems of hon. Members on the periphery. I trust that she will not need EC money to complete the road. If so, we shall then have the marvellous example of 20 miles of motorway going towards South Molton and a few miles from Bideford towards Barnstaple, with a great gap in between.

At present, it is not possible for a bus or a heavy duty lorry to drive from the motorway at Tiverton or Exeter to my constituency at Barnstaple without breaking the law. The vehicle is so big that it must cross the centre line, and the centre line is a solid line. What is the driver to say when the police stop him for crossing the line and his vehicle is wider than half the width of what is laughingly described as an A road? I have A roads—the A361, for example—which anywhere else in the country would be B or even unclassified roads.

We have a rail link from Exeter to Barnstaple, but no longer a link from Barnstaple to Bideford. The bit between Bideford and Barnstaple would have made and would still make a most beautiful extension to the national coastal footpath. Once past the Somerset and north Cornwall coastline there is a gap between the Braunton area and Bideford. Sadly, the railway line is no longer used, but the Countryside Commission, using Devon county council as its agent and using money obtained in this case by means of a grant under the derelict land arrangements, intended to purchase and turn what at present is a disused railway line into an attractive walkway and cycle path for the benefit of the public. We do not know whether we shall get it now. I doubt it, and I suspect that my doubts will be realised.

Earlier in my remarks I made a brief mention of Ilfracombe, that delightful but somewhat downcast town. It has high unemployment. It has two or three good firms and I know that my hon. Friend knows the good ones that we have and that we seek to keep. With the help of a harbour development group of local citizens, North Devon district council and Devon county council, I have been working for two years to try to get a form of development scheme which would improve the harbour and produce a marina. There is no safe harbour along the north Somerset, north Devon and north Cornwall coastline. One is needed, but harbour developments in an area with a low rateable value inevitably need cash from the Government, and that means cash from the EEC.

The district council—a very good council but a poor one in terms of rateable value—has itself provided the cash necessary to employ consultants, and they reported this week. I have not yet seen the final report, but I understand that it recommends various ways in which a town full of good spirit but equally full of unemployment can rise again and become a marina, a port, a small business area and perhaps provide facilities for roll-on/roll-off transport. All these have been given the kybosh by the announcement two days ago of what is to happen to our assisted area status.

North Devon is a tourist area. The Minister of State frequently refers to the tourist "industry", but we get no industrial assistance and no industrial grants. The numbers employed in the tourist industry are good, and growing, but no one in the Government ever seems to consider that the only genuine indigenous job creator is the catering industry. It takes people at all levels of expertise. It is not necessary to employ a senior wrangler to feed a washing-up machine. A senior manager, of course, has to be very good. The catering industry, possibly alone in the country, has not so much ridden the recession as surfed through it, so that here in London and down in my part of the world there are good hotels, excellent restaurants and hard-working people running good boarding houses getting no grants but surviving despite the lack of roads and other infrastructure.

We have just had a debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on our licensing laws. I spoke to licensed victuallers in Barnstaple only last week. All of them told me that many people go overseas for their holidays because they do not understand why, at three o'clock on a hot sunny afternoon such as some we had this year, it is impossible to buy a glass of lager. They do not wish to turn the world into a world of drunkenness. They simply point out that our young people do not want to take holidays where these ridiculous and petty restrictions apply, with no apparent sign, according to the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, of any increased drive by the Government to help the tourist industry, as they could so easily by taking a good look at the licensing laws as they apply to our seaside resorts.

So Ilfracombe is hit on one side by loss of status and on the other by the lack of any initiative to reform our licensing laws.

It may already have been said that Britain's licensing laws are based on the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act of 1915. Its purpose was to get munitions girls back to the factories in 1915. Nobody said, "Thou shalt not drink." They merely said, "Thou shalt go back to work." In true British fashion, we still have this lame duck of legislation, which makes sense to no one except perhaps those who framed the Sunday trading laws. That is another example of complete illogicality which hurts our minor enterprises and smaller businesses.

I am pleased to see here my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, knowing the good work that he does for small businesses. He has been to my constituency, as has his predecessor. He always has a good reception and people keen to improve and develop, but they say that if they are not to be given a grant, grants should be taken away everywhere. Let us not have the silly business where one side of the road is given status and the other side is not.

My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Sir P. Mills) has a speaking engagement but he has asked to be associated with my general points on the economic problems of north Devon. By sheer chance, the reservoir that is to be built at Roadford in north Devon happens to be in a parish which comes under the Tavistock travel-to-work area. Therefore, with any luck, we shall get the reservoir simply because so many hundreds of years ago somebody drew a parish boundary in the right place. Otherwise, we should have had no water. Each time we have a drought, people say that it will be better next time, but it never is. That divine parish draughtsman of several hundred years ago may be our salvation, at least in respect of our reservoir.

My motion simply states that north Devon needs some form of regional aid. Assisted area policy has worked in north Devon because of the grants, despite the lack of infrastructure. We can manage with one or the other, but not without both. Extra jobs have been created. Since the Barnstaple region became a development area, there has been an increase in employment of 139 per cent.—6,154 jobs. That is a large number of employees for a small country area. That may have happened over 15, 16 or 17 years, but none the less these are jobs for local people who can stay with us rather than always having to go away to seek work.

Much of the service industry sector services jobs brought in by our industrial areas. They have increased by 89 per cent.—13,772 jobs. Altogether, 20,000 jobs may have been created as a result of development status in an area with a relatively small population. My constituency has only 63,000 people, which shows how significant that increase is, even when shared, as it must be, with the north Devon coastline area represented by my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West. All that was achieved with no infrastructure worth looking at.

I must be honest—as, I trust, all hon. Members are—and say that not all the unemployment in my constituency is involuntary. Perhaps in Plymouth, and I do not doubt in Torbay, and perhaps even in Exeter where unemployment is low, there is a certain element which believes that it is nicer to be unemployed in the west country than elsewhere. We understand that. There is always someone who will say that since the allowance is the same throughout the country it is better to take that allowance in nice Ilfracombe than in less nice parts of the country. I do not mean "less nice" in any personal way, but climatically, economically and, perhaps, psychologically.

We locals do not have that feeling in Devonshire. We are strong, resolute and perfectly prepared to fight our corner and to build our jobs. But, at some stage, the Government must lend a hand, even if it be in basic areas such as infrastructure. Infrastructure includes not only roads and railways but electricity. North Devon has high-tech industries that complain to me that power flickers, not terribly, but just enough to throw a computer programme, perhaps for a whole day. It may not matter too much if there are no roads for a small high tech factory, but the power supply is important. We are always told that the power supply is going to be improved. Indeed, the CEGB and the South-West electricity board are excellent authorities. That is our problem—we do not have any complaints against the various statutory undertakings, but they have a complaint against the Government.

In almost every other respect, I am proud and honoured to support the Government. But I am talking about areas that are so far away that those who represent suburban constituencies may realise that they exist only when they visit them for a holiday weekend or week. They may then complain "Oh you can't wash your car. They're short of water. How funny! We're not short of water in London." They may also say, "Oh, there's a problem somewhere, and currently it is the Okehampton bypass. That's funny! We have jams in London but they've hardly got any cars in Devonshire."

Those are fair comments, because although Devonshire has relatively few cars, it sometimes cannot take the summer surge. If that happens, the surge will not come the following summer, because people have better things to do than to toast themselves on the yet-to-be built Okehampton bypass, or at the end of the Tiverton road or further down at Exeter.

Devon county council is another good authority. One cannot blame all these good authorities, and that makes it difficult. I asked the county council what the loss of assisted area status would mean. Its reply was that much major infrastructure work remained to be done in north Devon, such as the north Devon link stage two and the Barnstaple and Bideford bypasses. Those are all Government schemes that would, on the face of it, be eligible for EEC money.

On the county side, the Barnstaple urban relief road and the Roundswell industrial estate are both expensive projects on a county basis. The Bideford to Barnstaple coastal footpath/cycle track comes under derelict land grant. But the county council tells me that loss of assisted area status might lower its priority for that grant.

The rules of the European regional development fund had just been changed so that infrastructure projects outside an assisted area might be eligible for help if doing the work in a non-assisted area helps an assisted area. But

I am afraid that I cannot do anything about that, because the nearest assisted areas to me are probably across the Severn, in Wales. There is no way that helping to ease the floods in north Devon will help an assisted area somewhere else in the country.

So even when we tinker—and how we tinker—with the way such things should be done, we do not do so constructively. When the Government get round once again to looking at development and assisted areas, they should accept that much of the grant has been wrong grant and has gone to purchase machines rather than jobs. If the system had been completely scrapped, and if grant had been based upon job creation, there would have been some logic to it. There are too many factories in which expensive machines are installed at the expense of the taxpayers' money and of jobs in the local area. One packing machine might do the work of six packers. I could accept the Government working as they have done, if the misery had been equal misery, but that is not so. Once again, it is take from X, give to Y and perhaps next year it will be reversed. It is not unlike our 10-year change of constituencies, when all of a sudden and for no apparent reason a Member of Parliament loses an area that he knows and loves — and in which he trusts there is some affection in return—simply because the figures do not quite work out right.

Back Benchers such as me, who totally support the Government in our national and international policies, in our policies on law and order and almost all Government policies, suddenly find themselves going from being total loyalists to being, frankly, virtually insubordinate. Party loyalty towards the Government is based on mutual trust between people who hold relatively the same viewpoint. We come from areas as wide apart as Scotland, Manchester and Devon. But we are like-thinking people and expect to be treated as we would treat others. That is not happening with regard to regional aid.

I come from an area on the periphery, and I am also insubordinate over student travel grants. A student who lives in London and goes to the LSE has no great problem with travel costs. But my goodness, if a student in Instow or Ilfracombe is at college at the other end of England or even in Scotland, he will have huge problems. The excuse is that this evens things out. It does not. It simply means that someone no longer has to do the arithmetic to give parity and fairness across the board. Parity and fairness have gone out of the window. There should be fairness for all.

I must tell the Government that the respect and trust of ordinary Conservative Back Benchers is being hard strained. If such Members as I feel loyalty is strained, there are others—perhaps less steadfast—who could be over-strained.

I asked the North Devon district council for its views. It said that everything depended on some form of aid or on the expedition of infrastructure and utility works. The council may send deputations and impolite letters. I shall happily pass on such letters to the Government, and add my own comments. The council does not understand how one area of one county can be singled out for such ill treatment. We want to catch up with everyone else in basic infrastructure to give our area a chance to prosper under conditions of fair competition. We say this often, but it appears not to be heard either in the House or in our party committees.

I am always lucky in raffles. At a licensed victuallers dinner recently I won a bottle of Long John whisky. The problem was that the gentleman presenting it to me was, I think, the local chairman of Bell's whisky. I do not care in what bottle the aid comes. I do not care whether aid comes from European funds that have been laundered on their way from our pockets into the European pockets and then via heaven knows how many bureaucrats back into a water authority or derelict land pocket, but we do seem to make such a hard job of it.

It is the poor devils at the end of the line who receive the rough treatment. In my father's generation — my regiment is the Devonshire regiment—it was always bad for the foot sloggers at the end of the road. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister has Royal Marines connections; I believe that they have better quality boots now and do not have to walk as far. However, it was always the same —if one is in the trench, one does not understand how the staff work. The lines of communication were not there then and I suspect that they are not there now. I know that my hon. Friend's area is also suffering. There can be no unkinder cut than that given by a Minister to his own patch —as one of my former colleagues in Scotland learned to his cost during the last election. I support the Government in general and, in the past, supported them in toto. If they expect that support to continue, they must give help to those of us who stand in the slit trenches during the long early hours.

I look forward with great interest to what my hon. Friend will say. No doubt it will be an interesting and genuine recital of the good aspects of my constituency. I shall leave it to him to say those good things because he is aware of them and I want him to become more and more aware of them because of what he is seeking to do for small businesses.

If I paint a black picture, it is because the clouds over north Devon are black and I cannot see any silver lining. That is unfair both to the Government and to my constituents. We have many excellent businesses that will continue to survive and prosper, but it is my duty as a constituency Member of Parliament and as a supporter of the free enterprise system to say, "Either free enterprise for all and goodies for all—or goodies for none."

I view with considerable sorrow the general direction in which matters are moving at this time. I am aware, of course, that other Members in other constituencies have similar problems. If my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State cannot help today, I look to him for help tomorrow or the next day. If he or his ministerial colleagues cannot provide that help, he and they should remember that, if the men in the trenches ever turn round, they can do immeasurably more harm to the staff than the staff would wish.

1.40 pm

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): I support my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller). My perspective is similar to his. There are, of course, certain differences. I hesitate to say that I might have as much experience of another Member's constituency as I have of my own but I, too, am a Devonian born and bred. Perhaps I can pay no higher tribute to my hon. Friend's constituency than to say that many of my ancestors chose to be buried in it. There is no greater praise than that. I assure my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State that they died a considerable time ago. They were not driven to an early grave by the effect that deprivation of status might have had upon them.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary will appreciate that if I had been called when the announcement of deprivation status was made earlier in the week, my remarks to my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry might not have been especially supportive. That is probably fairly obvious and needs no stressing.

I had the opportunity some weeks ago of taking a delegation to meet my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary so that we could put our submissions to him. We presented our case in very much the same way as my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North has submitted his. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary dealt with the delegation in an exemplary fashion. The delegation and I were left in no doubt that he had a complete grasp of the constituency problems and of the implications if there were to be a deprivation of status. It is bad enough to lose assistance that has previously been enjoyed but there is some consolation in knowing that the person who is charged with having to make that unhappy decision is aware of all the facts and figures and the implications. Cuts are bad enough and they become even worse if they are made by someone who does not know what is going on. The delegation was treated in an exemplary fashion and it will come as some small consolation to its members to know that its submissions were listened to and taken on board. I have no doubt that when the delegation left my hon. Friend's office the issue was considered afresh, even if in the end the provisional view had to be confirmed.

I read a profile of myself recently in a book that is being produced by a journalist, Mr. Roth. To some extent it was like reading one's obituary. One of the benefits of the resurrection means that we can come back and sneak into the back of the church during the funeral to hear what is said about us from the pulpit. I was able to read the profile of myself. I was described as being a liberal when it came to advocating the interests of my profession and as an ultra loyalist in terms of my party. That might make some of my hon. Friends table an early-day motion at once to show an independent cast of mind.

I felt no hardship when I read that I was an ultra loyalist in my party. I know the party for which I stood at the election and I know the reservations that I had about it. It is no hardship to me to say on every occasion that offers itself that I present myself as a Conservative. Indeed, I am proud to do so. Against that background, later remarks in my contribution to the debate will cause me some sadness.

Whose fault is it that we find ourselves in the present situation? My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North has described himself as a loyalist. He is not, of course, an unthinking loyalist. What is it that has brought us to the Chamber to make speeches that contain criticism of the Government? What is this action which means that even my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State approaches this matter with great sadness?

It would have been tempting when the announcement was made to have laid into the Government and accused them of incompetence and everything else in sight. We have been slightly more cautious than that. We can be acquitted of the charge of currying favour with our supporters. I suspect that one of the propositions that I could advance, which would command universal acceptance on both sides of the House, is that the Government are not especially prone to going around currying favour with their supporters. Whatever else regional aid is in this context, it is certainly not the politics of the pork barrel.

If one were give to cyncism or undue levity, one might point out—bearing in mind what dairy quotas have done for the farmers in my constituency, the effects of the rates restriction and what may yet be done if saner counsel does not prevail in dealing with student grants—that, in the Government's view of what is impartial, this was a bold move. The removal of regional aid from my constituency of Teignbridge and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North has the benefit of making sure than any other Conservative Member who has not been affected by some of the Government's other actions is at least caught up in this unhappy net. Whatever else the Government are accused of doing, the charge of currying favour with our supporters in this matter cannot be levelled at them. I shall put the matter beyond any doubt and say that it certainly cannot be said in this respect that the Government will curry favour with any of their supporters.

The reason we find ourselves in this unhappy position is rather like the reason given by the Irishman who said, "I would not have started from here anyway". My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State has had to grapple with the task of being obliged to institute a system which, frankly, does not begin to make any sort of sense. The moment one is left to work an unsatisfactory system, one gets into no end of trouble. My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North referred to the incongruity of the way the system works. He might have used the phrase "passing the parcel". I recall one of the better episodes of "Candid Camera" where a team of officials, dressed up to look like the men from Whitehall so that they could carry some authority, strongly persuaded people on one side of a bridge to haul up buckets of water, walk along from the bridge and pour the water out on the other side. Apparently, the allegation was that the two sides of the river were not balanced and that action would take care of the problem. It was comforting to see something of the British character—when required by officials to perform that task, the people got on and did the job properly.

That aspect lies at the heart of an episode of regional aid. We have inherited a system and, for the time being at least, we have to work it. Instead of trying to work out which industries are viable and how money can be used and — I hope that I can say this without being unnecessarily contentious — ascertaining what labour relations are like, we have a system that is crude almost beyond belief. We look at the unemployment statistics and say, "If unemployment is high enough, you get your grant, and if it is not, you don't." What is the sense in taking the grants from the constituencies of Teignbridge and Devon, North when Merseyside, which in terms of public money is one huge, yawning plug hole, receives the money because of its unemployment levels, irrespective of how that unemployment occurred?

What is so unfair and what concerns me greatly is the fact that what has happened to my constituents and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North is not their fault. I would be happy, if the rules permitted, to spend the next two or three hours extolling the people of my constituency, their character, their work rate, labour relations and the rest of it. Like my hon. Friends constituents, they are not in the begging-bowl business.

My constituents are not squealing. They do not regard jobs as something from which to strike. There is nothing wrong with the work rate or work ethic of my constituents, but because, lucky things, in some towns in my constituency unemployment is only 15 per cent. they cannot compete with other areas in the misery stakes.

I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North will agree that we are being forced to take part in a system under which the rewards do not go to the deserving or to those who make the best of things; the fruits of victory go to those who, in the extreme case, will not help themselves. That is not a sensible way of conducting our affairs.

Where is the sense, in terms only of the Exchequer, in the fact that, in the past, the need for grant was identified and the grant, whether for development area status or for intermediate status, was given. Then the rules are changed, the music stops and the money is removed. What is the point of pump-priming if one stops halfway through priming the pump? Were it not for the exemplary work and ingenuity of Teignbridge district council, taxpayers' money would not have produced the benefit that it should. The pump has been primed, but now it is to be cut off entirely. Again, that makes no sense. It is important to remember that my constituents are not in the begging-bowl business. Some schemes in my constituency are not entirely viable, and regional grant makes all the difference to them——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Paul Dean): Order. The hon. Gentleman understandably wishes to talk about his constituency, but in fairness to the motion and to the Minister I should tell him that the motion relates to north Devon. I am sure that he will use his ingenuity to direct his remarks to north Devon.

Mr. Speller: Does my hon. Friend agree that the conditions in Teignbridge and north Devon, which are about 40 miles apart, are almost identical? We in north Devon welcome his association with the constituency, but we regret the fact that, although his ancestors are buried there, none of his living relatives are voting there.

Mr. Nicholls: I am grateful for your help, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and for that of my hon. Friend, who is an experienced Member of the House, and I shall try to keep within the rules of order.

The heart of the problem is that the system that we are being asked to operate does not make sense. My hon. Friend said that one way of proceeding would be to remove grant entirely; that makes perfect sense. Another approach to the problem would be to give grant to everyone, but that would mean a return to the original position, which does not make sense. One must concede — I do so more readily now than I might have done earlier this week— that if the present system must be operated, it should be operated properly, effectively and on the basis of obtaining the maximum value for money. A most unhappy aspect of the way in which the system has evolved is the idea that to solve the problem one should continue to hurl money at it, without analysing its ingredients.

For example, we do not use the synthetic indexes to the extent that we should. My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North is nodding. He would concede that if the synthetic index for his constituency had been considered more carefully, one factor that could have been given much weight is not only the median levels of unemployment, but the fluctuations that occur in seasonal industries. However, that suggestion would only tamper with a system that is fundamentally wrong.

What can be done? A number of points occur to me. It may be that the Minister will be able to help me with some of them. On the other hand, he may want to answer them by way of correspondence. It concerns me in particular that, once one is deprived of one's status, one is precluded not only from national grants but from European grants, except in the rather arcane way that my hon. Friend described. Before this week, he and I might have conspired together to assist each other or our other regional friends. That cannot happen now. It must be a source of particular grievance that one is left out of the European side as well as the national side.

My hon. Friend may also be able to offer me some guidance about article (9) (c) of the Co-operative Development Agency and Industrial Development Act (Commencement) Order 1984. That article sets up certain transitional arrangements under which the old arrangements will continue for a period of four months. A week is said to be a long time in politics. In terms of the way the system operates, four months is a very short time. I can imagine schemes, common both to my hon. Friend and myself, whereby, a degree of flexibility — I am not suggesting two or three years; politics is the art of the possible—in the transitional arrangements would be of great help to us both.

One can make the point, when trying to find the cloud with a silver lining, that if the whole system of regional aid is bad—it certainly is—one can state the obvious by saying that if one does not have a grant, or if it is taken away, one is in a much worse position than an area, region or constituency which has it. One can go further and say that there is now sufficient evidence that, even if one is in receipt of grant, in the long term, as an area, it will do one no good in the end. The one crumb of comfort I can extract from this unhappy state of affairs is that the worst situation of all—it must be the situation in which some of my hon. Friends and Opposition Members will find themselves — is that an adjacent area is receiving aid while one's own area is not. That, in a nutshell, points up the vice of the system. It points up the incongruity in a way which cannot be bettered. What happens when one side of the road receives grant while the other side does not?

Opposition Members will think that, to an extent, it serves me right, but when I was vice-chairman of the property services committee of the East Devon district council, where we were on the eastern side of the river Exe, industrialists asked us why they should move to our constituency. My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North must have had the same experience. The industrialists could point to the area of Teignbridge, in which I did not live at the time, and say, "Over there we should be in receipt of a large range of grants. Why on earth should we stay here?" It was difficult sometimes to answer that question. There is a certain grim irony in the fact that I am now a member of the party of a Government which has to operate a completely unsatisfactory, illogical and damaging system. In Teignbridge my grant was taken from me.

It is a truism that good cannot come out of evil. Perhaps it can be said, if one looks at the matter dispassionately and tries to distance oneself from constituency interests, that the Government have made the best of a very bad job. What I hope, in terms of good coming out of evil, is that if in the long run what we have gone through this week and will have to justify to our constituents means the end of this wretched system and heralds a more sensible system under which good is done to the regions, in that sense, good may yet come out of evil.

1.59 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. David Trippier): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on his good fortune in the ballot, which has given us the opportunity once again to debate the problems of his constituency, particularly those of Ilfracombe. I thank him for his kind words about me. He has always been a very active, vociferous and able advocate on behalf of his constituents, and he demonstrated that skill to us all today.

I know that my hon. Friend and his constituents will be disappointed that north Devon is losing its assisted area status. I should also like to express my sympathy to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls). I understand the points that he made and recognise some of the problems that he identified.

It has been a difficult week for several of us. My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North correctly referred to the fact that I was in a somewhat embarrassing situation as a Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry with shared responsibility for regional aid. No doubt it will be interpreted as my having reduced the aid in my constituency. These are difficult times, and tough decisions have to be made. It may seem stranger, as it would not take a very bright Member to discover in Hansard that in about 1980, as a Back Bencher, I was fighting for assistance in my constituency because it was heavily affected by the recession, due to its overdependence on the two traditional industries — textiles and footwear. I shall refer to that later.

We have considered the situation in north Devon seriously. We considered that the position in Ilfracombe and Barnstaple did not merit their continuing to receive preferential treatment over the rest of the country. The withdrawal of assisted area status also involves losing access to the European regional development fund. As my hon. Friend demonstrated, that could affect the necessary improvements to the infrastructure of the area. I know that there is considerable importance attached to that—not only in north Devon but in other parts of the country that are losing their assisted area status—but the European regional development fund quota section can be used only to support member states' own regional policies in their defined "aided areas". In the United Kingdom these are, of course, the assisted areas. However, as far as the areas that are losing assisted area status are concerned, I can assure my hon. Friends the Members for Devon, North and Teignbridge that the European Commission will accept applications for the European regional development fund quota section until March next year and will consider them for aid where the majority of the expenditure is completed within one year of the announcement made on Wednesday by the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont).

My hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North referred to the object of the Ilfracombe harbour project, which of course would be to improve the economy of Ilfracombe and local employment prospects. Clearly, any cost-effective measure which increases employment opportunities would be welcome, but I remind my hon. Friend that other developments in the area are generating new jobs. For example, Pall Europe has announced plans to expand its Ilfracombe factory and, when that work is completed, to add another 140 jobs to the 100 already existing. Coutant Electronics plc is extending its premises in Ilfracombe, due for completion in April 1985, and is looking to create 25 jobs by the end of 1985, and more the following year. Expansion plans by engineering company J. and S. Marine could lead to the creation of 65 new jobs at Barnstaple. L. S. and J. Sussman Ltd. of Barnstaple has taken on 33 extra workers over the past year or so. Hobarts is celebrating 25 years at its Barnstaple factory with the opening of a new £180,000 extension, heralding job security for its present 175 employees and the prospect of a steady increase in staff over the next few years.

Some of these enterprises will have benefited from regional assistance, and undoubtedly such assistance has had an influence in encouraging industrial development in north Devon. It must be gratifying to my hon. Friend that the area is now better placed, relative to some other parts of the country, to build on its current assets. However, just as it would be foolish to view the future complacently through rose-coloured spectacles, so it would be equally wrong to regard regional assistance as the only means of helping industry.

I remind my hon. Friend of the other forms of financial aid available from the Department, notably under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. I am glad to record that some companies in north Devon have already taken good advantage of that facility, and I hope that more will do so in the future.

Mr. Speller: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for mentioning the other forms of aid available. I wonder whether, with his special responsibility for small businesses, he might see fit to produce some fairly simple literature. Some ministerial literature is difficult for Members of Parliament, and perhaps even for more intelligent people in trade, to understand. I should very much welcome the availability of more information so that those who are losing aid in one respect can be made aware of alternative sources. I approve of the system to which my hon. Friend referred, as it is clearly directed at good, sensible, job-creating work. I welcome that, but I hope that he will let us have more information which we, in turn, can pass on in the hope that that may be the beginning of the silver lining.

Mr. Trippier: My hon. Friend makes an important point. I think that he is referring to the repackaging exercise which I have recently completed, which will simplify the literature from the Department targeted at the very important small firms sector. With your permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and relating it to north Devon, I should like to deal with that in more detail later. I hope that the information that I have to give will be of some comfort to my hon. Friend.

I assure my hon. Friend again that any projects put forward for possible assistance under section 8, which is available nation-wide, will be given most careful consideration by me and my colleagues. The Government can also help by the provision of counselling assistance through the Department of Trade and Industry small firms service based in Bristol and various forms of assistance to the small firms sector. Area counselling offices are situated in Barnstaple and South Molton and, in the past 12 months, more than 70 counselling sessions have been held. In the same period, more than 100 small businesses have been seen at the clinics held in Barnstaple and Bideford. Advice is provided to individuals considering setting up in business, as well as to established businesses.

With regard to local enterprise agencies, financial support has been offered by the Department to the North Devon Enterprise Group to provide a further source of advice to small businesses. This will complement the good work already done by the North Devon Manufacturers' Association, which I know is very active in the area.

In stressing the importance of local enterprise agencies, perhaps I may relate my comments to the situation in 1980 in my own constituency, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North referred. In the teeth of the recession, between 1980 and 1982, most travel-to-work areas experienced almost a doubling of unemployment. At that time, my constituency was the worst affected in the United Kingdom. Unemployment quadrupled, perhaps largely because of overdependence on the traditional industries of textiles and footwear. I thought that, short of sitting at my desk in the House with my head in my hands, the only way forward was to encourage indigenous growth. All hon. Members can hope that some large company will come and set up in their area—my hon. Friend will be no exception—but we could wait a long time for that. It is perhaps better to get on with the job of encouraging indigenous growth.

I had the opportunity one Friday afternoon, with several Conservative colleagues, to visit the first-ever enterprise agency, which was set up in St. Helens. It was on that model that the North Devon Enterprise Group has been built. I met for the first time an interesting and impressive character called Mr. Bill Humphrey, whom I have always regarded as the patron saint of enterprise agencies. He offered what I can only describe as a hand-holding service for small businesses. It was the first time that I or my colleagues had seen large industry become involved in the small firms sector.

Anyone who knows St. Helens knows that Pilkington Brothers is St. Helens, and that St. Helens is Pilkingtons. It had, unfortunately, had to lay off many people in order to remain competitive, but felt under a moral obligation to the community. As Bill Humphrey put it to me, perhaps Pilkingtons would make those people redundant today, but it would see them in the town centre the following weekend. Pilkingtons decided to do its best to encourage the start-up of small businesses by encouraging those who had been made redundant to establish small businesses and by encouraging existing small businesses to expand. In about 12 months, 150 small firms had been started and they employed about 250 people.

That was the most dramatic thing that I had seen since becoming a Member of Parliament and I tried to graft the experience on to my constituency. North Devon, I think wisely, has done the same. Industrialists in larger companies have recognised their moral responsibility to the community. As we need small firms and their employment potential, I am pleased to announce that there are now 228 local enterprise agencies in the United Kingdom. I opened the 228th in Aberdeen the other week. As the House knows, I have set a target of 300 in three years. It is now clear that we shall achieve that target. The enterprise agency is vital to north Devon for one reason. The failure rate of small firms—the news hits my desk—is one in three in the first 12 months. I am sure that my hon. Friend agrees that, unfortunately, north Devon is no exception.

Mr. Speller: This is an opportunity for me to ask my hon. Friend about just one case. Through his organisation we have the enterprise allowance scheme, which pays £40 a week to someone who is trying to start up a small business. The case concerns a young married couple. The wife has taken the allowance to start a small business making wedding dresses of natural fabrics such as cotton and silk. Because the husband was unfortunately made redundant recently, the £40 enterprise allowance is now treated as part of their income and is therefore deducted from his unemployment benefit, on which he keeps his family. Perhaps the best laid plans of Ministers can "gang aft agley", as they say in Aberdeen, when one side does not talk to the other. Perhaps Ministers could examine this matter, as it seems illogical that when a Minister pursues an excellent idea to enable people to get off the ground the beneficiary has the ground cut from beneath his feet when misfortune strikes a second member of the family.

Mr. Trippier: I am sympathetic to that point and I should like to examine it carefully. As my hon. Friend rightly said, the matter is one for the Department of Employment, but we have an important input into the enterprise allowance scheme because we mobilise the small firms service, for which I am responsible. I should be most grateful if my hon. Friend would write to me with details. I shall be only too pleased to take it up.

I referred earlier to the importance of the North Devon Enterprise Group. I wish it every success. In case anyone doubts the importance of enterprise agencies, I shall give the House some startling figures. The failure rate of small firms is one in three for the first 12 months. In areas where there are established enterprise agencies the failure rate is one in 12, that is about 8 per cent. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

When I had the privilege of visiting my hon. Friend's constituency, I saw an exercise in self-help. The community was pulling itself up by its boot straps. I also saw the attention which the area paid to its small business men, who are very important people. The difficulty in north Devon and in many other parts of the United Kingdom is that too many people set up in business thinking that they know it all and consequently do not seek advice. They are then surprised when they go out of business in a relatively short time. I wish to use this occasion as an excuse to encourage people to take advantage of the small firm services, which is available nation-wide, and to get in touch with their enterprise agencies, which offer an effective hand-holding service. That way the failure rate can be improved.

My hon. Friend will no doubt welcome the fact that I wish to urge large firms in Devon in general and in north Devon in particular to recognise the importance of paying small firms' bills on time. I receive more lobbying on that matter than on any other.

With regard to the 64 schemes in the Department of Trade and Industry which are targeted on industry, we have unwittingly built up our own bureaucracy. Although it sounds impressive at a general election to say that we have built up 64 schemes, we are in danger of confusing the people whom we seek to help. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend about that. We have therefore just completed a repackaging exercise. The 64 schemes will be concertina-ed into four coherent packages which will cover schemes for regional assistance, exports, advisory services and support services.

For the first time we can set an example to industry in marketing our own products. In the past we did not set a good example generally. I also appreciate that Governments are fond of acronyms. There are many schemes with acronyms, such as CADCAM, CADTES, MAPCON, which mean very little to those whom we hope will be the recipients and beneficiaries of them. I also agree that because of the bureaucracy we need to scrap the considerable number of application forms that exist. I have introduced a communality of application forms, which will be shorter and written in plain English.

It is important for me to use this occasion to get the message across about the link between industry and education. We may not have concentrated as much attention as we should on the importance of bringing together industrialists and educationists. The Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry responsible for small firms is also responsible for industry education. That is one of the more frustrating jobs for which I am responsible. From 15 May 1985 we shall have another local enterprise week. The previous week was well supported in my hon. Friend's constituency. The theme for next year will be industry-education links. I am anxious to involve institutions such as further education colleges, which most communities have, and polytechnics and universities, where they exist.

At school level the idea is to try to get through to 13-year-old children the importance of wealth creation, which is even more important than wealth distribution.

Finally, on small firms, it is important to emphasise that we have still too much bureaucracy in terms of the constraints on such businesses. We are in danger of strangling them. When I visited my hon. Friend's constituency, I received this message loud and clear.

Recently I have completed an exercise whereby we have produced some flow charts. On one we have identified 45 different regulations which have to be checked and in many cases complied with by anyone considering setting up in business on his own account. On another flow chart we have identified 54 regulations which have to be checked and in many cases complied with by anyone contemplating employing only one person. It is a surprise to me that we have 1·3 million small firms when I look at those two charts. They are a tremendous disincentive to people whom we are encouraging to set up and employ others. We have decided that an efficiency exercise will be conducted on those charts. We hope that the results will be known by the end of January.

In north Devon the Government provide support for the area's tourist industry. This takes the form of promotional activity and advisory services provided by the English tourist board, assisted by the non-statutory West Country tourist board, and of selective assistance for tourism projects via the national scheme administered by the ETB under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. Since August 1982, when the scheme was first extended to the whole of England, grant offers totalling £138,200 have been made to 18 tourist projects in north Devon.

Then there are the various schemes operated by other Government Departments. Under the youth training scheme the Manpower Services Commission estimated a need for 873 places for the youth training scheme in north Devon in 1984-85. Already more than this number—880—have been made available from a wide range of sources. These include 200 places on a broad-based scheme put together by the North Devon Manufacturers Association. This reflects the recognition by the association of the importance of attracting young people into manufacturing and confidence in the future of the employment they can offer.

There are three main agents with community programme schemes in the north Devon area. First, there is the Ilfracombe and District Industrial Development Committee, which has many schemes, including conservation and environment, youth, community and information schemes. Secondly, we have the Bridge Community Agency, which runs a skill swop centre, a welfare benefit campaign and several archaeological digs and environmental projects. Thirdly, we have the Council for Christian Care, which runs schemes mainly involving the tidying-up and restoration of church grounds and property.

English Estates has pursued an active policy of advance factory construction in north Devon.

Mr. Speller: My hon. Friend may not be aware of it, but in addition to the excellent bodies of which he has spoken the work of the Dartington North Devon Trust has been huge in our part of the world.

My hon. Friend also mentioned the Ilfracombe and district industrial development scheme, which proves my point when I say that we are prepared to help ourselves. But we need a little water in the pump with which to prime it.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for listing these good organisations, and with the North Devon Manufacturers Association we are well equipped for the training of our youth. Finding jobs for them once they are trained is the problem.

My hon. Friend also referred to the tourist boards. By a sheer coincidence, I believe that I am the only qualified caterer in the House, which is probably why I am not allowed near the Services Committee. It is of some interest perhaps that the West Country tourist board does the investigation under my hon. Friend's scheme, but that the actual verdict comes down from the English tourist board. It is hard to explain to a hotelier in Ilfracombe why, when he saw a pleasant man or woman from the West Country tourist board in Exeter, rather a long time later he gets a yes or no from London from someone who has not seen the scheme but has only dealt with it on paper. There might be room for a little slimming down there, not least because of the sheer misunderstanding caused when a person sees Mr. Smith from Exeter and the decision comes from Mr. Jones in London. Queries cannot be raised with the person who has made the decision, because he has never been seen.

Mr. Trippier: I hope that my hon. Friend will forgive me for saying that I shall have to look into the tourist board matter. That is the responsibility of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry. I shall certainly do that.

I accept entirely the difficulties created when assistance available under regional policy goes to a firm which is operating on one side of the street, whereas a factory on the other side gets nothing. One must examine carefully the purposes of regional policy. Its purpose is to try to remove the disparities in levels of unemployment in the United Kingdom. I appreciate that, no matter which Government are in power, when the dividing lines for regional policy are set the Government will make as many enemies as friends.

The White Paper on regional policy said that we would look at things other then levels of unemployment, and that may be of some comfort to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge. We said that we would look at other matters such as over-dependence on traditional industries, obsolete infrastructure, and peripherality or distance to markets. Those have been looked at carefully, together with others, and we have put them in a synthetic index.

The most important point that I can make is that when we are using that synthetic index all those travel-to-work areas which go above the line will be assisted areas and those below it will not. I appreciate my hon. Friend's disappointment, but I am sure he will readily understand the difficult decisions which Ministers at the Department of Trade and Industry have had to make.

English Estates has pursued an active policy of advance factory construction in north Devon. On Mullacott Cross industrial estate all but one of the 11 units are occupied and the 19 units in Barnstaple, which are all small, are all now occupied.

Parts of north Devon, including Ilfracombe, continue to receive special support from the Development Commission through the coverage of the rural development areas. This means that small businesses can receive special concessions from the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas on premises, business advice and finance.

I am aware that there is considerable interest in north Devon in the north Devon link road. Stage 1, from the M5 to Tiverton, is now completed and the road is open. Stage 2A, from Tiverton to Newtown, was the subject of a public inquiry between January and March 1984. The inspector's report is now with the Departments of the Environment and Transport and a decision will be given as soon as possible. Draft orders were published in November 1983 for stage 2B, from Newtown to Barnstaple, and I understand that it is going to public inquiry on 15 January 1985.

Also of interest in north Devon are the Barnstaple and Bideford bypasses. The former has just been the subject of a public inquiry while work has already commenced on the latter.

As my hon. Friend mentioned, north Devon, as with many parts of the south-west and indeed the United Kingdom, suffered from problems of drought last summer. Part of the problem will be resolved when a more secure supply can be provided upon completion of Roadford reservoir. Outline planning permission was granted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 30 March 1983, but a number of reserved matters were retained for approval by him. Those include landscaping, access, and siting and design of buildings. These must come up for approval by 30 March 1986.

The South-West water authority is currently preparing an application on detailed matters and its submission is imminent. When dealing with this application, it is anticipated that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will also cover other related matters still outstanding, such as the appeal on the demolition of listed buildings. In the meantime, until Roadford reservoir is completed, problems may still exist on the Mullacott Cross industrial estate, where there have been difficulties in maintaining the pressure of the water supply——

It being half past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Local Radio Stations

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Archie Hamilton.]

2.30 pm

Mrs. Angela Rumbold (Mitcham and Morden): Contrary to popular belief among my colleagues, my purpose is not to bring a single case for special pleading about the licensing of local radio, but to ask my hon. Friend the Minister to look urgently at the present system of regulation and licensing in local, independent radio to see whether it fits the principle of encouraging market forces to determine what can be allowed.

There is more and more interest in that matter and increasing pressure is being brought to bear on the issue. The present situation, in which several pirate radio stations are operating outside the law—which, I hasten to say, I in no way condone—must surely indicate that there is something wrong with our licensing procedures. Obviously, the answer to illegal action is to act vigorously, and the Independent Broadcasting Authority is urging the Government to close such illegal stations, but when I read the reasons given by the IBA for the crackdown I found myself wondering whether the IBA was more interested in shouting "Foul" because those independent local radio stations which it has licensed cannot compete as a result of the huge and over-bureaucratic regulations which the IBA imposes.

I am sure that there will be some agreement between my hon. Friend the Minister and myself if I say that when providing a service in the commercial world the first consideration is a proper endeavour to satisfy the customer. At the same time, however, no commercial operations can afford to work unless there are some simple rules within which they operate. Therefore, when looking, for example, at the situation of local independent radio in London today, we note that guidance is needed to prevent overlap in the spectrum; to avoid interference with essential services such as ambulance, fire and police, and even defence. Having said all that, we should look at the constraints that exist, laid down by the IBA, and try to see why only Capital and LBC can operate in London, with 8 million people to serve.

First and foremost, I maintain that the financial arrangements are prohibitive. If the independent radio stations are to compete in the true sense of the word, to raise revenue on a per capita basis of the listening population, and to add on additional levy to the Exchequer on top of the transmitting equipment fees, quite obviously precludes all but the most financially "secure" of operators from entering the independent radio field. In other words, radio stations such as Capital have a clear run because they take in so much revenue from advertising because, in turn, competition is strictly limited.

Regulation of content is another bone of contention, and it is the nub of my concern that the Government should look again at the whole operation. As the newspapers have found, there is a growing demand for local information. By "local" I mean local communities within 10 to 15 minutes' drive of each other. Therefore, in London it is not local to announce to an audience in Mitcham and Morden that the coming Saturday will see the advent of Christmas fayre at a certain church hall in Chingford, or vice versa. However, it is local news to point out that certain primary schools are holding their Christmas pantos on certain days and that the funds raised will go to local charities. That is of considerable interest to local communities. It is also helpful to broadcast information for different groups—whether the young, the elderly, the disabled, ethnic minorities or even local business men who, in addition to benefiting from that, would also be paying for it.

I wish to discuss the allocation of space in the spectrum. The radio spectrum is a resource owned by the country and it has a finite capacity in each area—although at a far higher level than the present broadcast usage in the United Kingdom. It is proper and generally agreed that a licence fee should be charged. I want to suggest a new approach. Fees could be based on a simple multiple of transmitter power and the number of hours on the air. At 50p per watt and 20p per hour, a women's institute or a scout group could broadcast four hours of programmes every Sunday evening over three miles for £21 a year. A music station broadcasting for 12 hours a day, every day, for 15 miles would pay £22,000 a year. I believe that 12 hours a day should be the maximum, as that would discourage stations wanting a 24-hour service.

Providing the channels for that would be a simple engineering decision. On VHF, the entire 200-channel-wide band from 88 to 108 MHz is allocated by international agreement to FM broadcasting. There is no adequate reason why Britain is uniquely unable to join the remainder of the world and use the whole band. Twenty channels, perhaps from 106 to 108 MHz, should be designated for new, unprotected broadcasters.

The position is more complicated for medium wave, as certain channels are already used that are scattered over the whole band. The solution is to allow unprotected broadcasters to operate on any frequency that is three or more channels away from BBC or IBA stations, with published coverage maps of the area in question. More power is needed for a similar coverage to VHF and a power tariff on one tenth would reflect that.

Equipment of adequate specification can be assured through the same procedures that have been established for local citizens band transmitters. Stations would pay on their transmitter output power, leaving the siting, aerial design and choice of channel—all of which determine coverage achieved—to the competence and ingenuity of each station. Every hour, the station should announce its licence details, revealing such particulars as, "This is XYZ radio on 107 VHF, using 10 watts from North Hill lane, licence No. 123, for three hours every evening." Such arrangements would allay the understandable fears among established broadcasters that their prominence and quality of signal coverage will be at peril when new stations are legalised.

Being an unprotected broadcaster means that there will be no assurance of the coverage available—unlike the position for the BBC and IBA stations. The more stations that come on the air in one locality, the smaller will be the coverage of each service. It is a familiar feature in other kinds of radio communication. The time has now come for it to be accepted in specialist, small business, ethnic and voluntary broadcasting. A start on that must be made immediately by the issue of some experimental licences.

The last point of argument lies in the content of output. I am constantly asked whether I want endless pop music on independent radio. My answer—and I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will agree with me—is that the stations are not for me to regulate; they are there for the consumer. Ultimately, the market will dictate listening requirements.

The notion that the Government or their appointed bodies can continue closely to regulate local broadcasting will survive for only as long as the idea that printing presses should be allowed to produce only the Bible and approved texts. While equipment has become cheaper and smaller, there has been no movement in licensing provisions in Britain. There is no clear thought from the various lobbies that would prove flexible enough to cope with potential demand.

On news and magazine stands there are all sorts of offerings from all sorts of publishers. The more titles that we have, the less the prominence of each one. Part of radio will eventually be the same and the need now is to devise a licensing procedure to allow orderly progress.

I ask the Minister seriously to consider the possibility of making a start by issuing some experimental licences in the London area as soon as possible on the basis of the suggestions that I have outlined.

2.40 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. David Mellor): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) for having raised on the Floor of the House the interesting issue of local community broadcasting and for giving me the opportunity to outline the Government's views. As my hon. Friend is aware, my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Mr. Shaw), the Minister of State, Home Office, is the Minister with responsibilities for broadcasting. He has ministerial and parliamentary engagements in the north of England today, and as I was engaged in a debate on licensing earlier it seemed that I should reply for the Government in this debate. I hope that she will accept my apologies for a substitution which, I hope, is not entirely distasteful to her.

I shall outline briefly the basis on which our broadcasting services have developed. It has been the policy of successive Governments—it has been endorsed by Parliament on many occasions and by various committees of inquiry, most recently the Annan committee—to entrust broadcasting to independent but publicly accountable authorities, and under these arrangements only the BBC and the IBA are licensed by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 to operate transmitters for broadcasting. This approach is not a matter of tradition. The two authorities act as trustees of the public interest and are accountable, through my right hon. and learned Friend, to Parliament, which is important. Certain obligations are placed on the broadcasting authorities, including the requirement to be impartial in matters of controversy and requirements as to the content of material that they broadcast.

People are rightly exercised—we still hear a good deal of this—about broadcasting standards whether on radio or television. In the United Kingdom we have been able to maintain high standards to the point that most of us have experienced the envy of many overseas visitors about the quality of our broadcasting services. I suggest that that has been achieved only because of the bipartisan policy that I have described. The existing framework has served us well and should not be lightly cast aside or undermined, even though it allows for expansion. Of course, expansion is something to which successive Conservative Governments have been devoted.

We do not regard the existing arrangements as fixed or immutable. There is some scope for the development of local broadcasting services of the sort for which my hon. Friend has been asking. Nor do I think we can regard the present arrangements as providing just a cosy duopoly for the two broadcasting authorities.

In independent local radio, companies compete with one another for the independent local radio franchise for a particular area. Once the IBA has awarded a contract, the contractor faces competition for audiences from BBC local and national radio, other ILR stations and television. There is competition for advertising from local newspapers and the ever-increasing number of free sheets with which my hon. Friend and I are familiar in south-west London. There are no fewer than four free sheets circulating in the borough in my constituency.

Audience figures testify that the pressure on local radio has increased with the introduction recently of breakfast television. It seems likely to increase further as we contemplate other great broadcasting developments, such as independent national radio, which interest many, satellite and cable services and community radio, with which my hon. Friend is primarily concerned.

I have referred to some of the obligations that are imposed on broadcasting authorities. I do not think that we can get away without various obligations being imposed for as far ahead as we can see. It is necessary that independent stations should have to meet the engineering and other standards that are laid down by the IBA as well as meeting the standards of broadcasting quality to which I have referred.

It is important, when understanding the ability of the offical ILR stations to compete, to recognise some of the other constraints under which they operate. In addition, they have to pay substantial sums in royalties to the copyright authorities and comply with agreements on the amount of recorded music broadcast. On the other hand, pirate operators observe no common standard, pay no royalties and frequently plagiarise news broadcasts in an endeavour to give themselves broader appeal. However much one is aware of the fact that one or two pirate operators want to regularise their position, one starts by having to say that it is not surprising that their much lower overheads permit them to offer advertising at a much lower rate than an ILR station. One can understand why the legitimate broadcasters do not always consider that to be fair competition, indeed, far from it.

Against that background, I ask my hon. Friend to look cautiously at the periodic appeals by pirate operators to an ethos of opportunity and a free market, because those appeals need to be looked at more closely. As my hon. Friend knows, the Government are committed to free enterprise and competition. I think that we can say that we have done more than most to create a climate in which free enterprise and competition can flourish and to encourage the development of new small businesses. We are committed also, however, to the rule of law. We are committed to a framework of responsible broadcasting which requires rules and someone to enforce them. We do not subscribe to notions of competition that are unfair as well as illegal.

The question of competition cuts both ways. Some 51 independent local radio stations are in operation, and it is open to all the pirates to compete for those franchises. I think it is fair to say that they have not chosen to do so, even though many ILR stations were founded by small business men and are not just part of a much larger set-up.

My hon. Friend rightly stressed local needs. I think that they are important. A point made in favour of licensing pirate operators is that they fulfil local ethnic or other specialist needs. What constitutes a local need and whether it is being met are plainly in the eye of the beholder. Although my hon. Friend has been scrupulously fair in not promoting one station, I know that she has one station in mind which operates from her constituency. I know that station well because many people in my constituency listen to it and make it clear to me that they enjoy it. It gives me no pleasure to have to be critical of that radio station, but I know that my hon. Friend understands, just as I hope does any sensible person outside Parliament who is hearing this debate, that no Government Minister can do other than deprecate the position of a service outside the law.

Those who take the law into their own hands must expect to pay such penalties as are imposed. There can never be a position, however free and easy one may wish to be in the interests of the widest community involvement in a radio station, where there is not firm regulation of the air waves. The air waves are an important intrusion into people's homes, with a capacity for evil as well as good. There must be regulation if standards are to be maintained. I keep returning to that point, but I think it is the answer to the suggestion that just a lot of stuffy bureaucrats are preventing the flourishing of small stations which, as seen by the very fact that so many people listen to them, are plainly meeting a need that the other stations do not meet. I believe that there is more to the matter than that.

I turn to the vexed question of licensing. The operation of a radio station without a licence is, as my hon. Friend knows and has properly been made clear, a criminal offence against the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949, because it is likely to cause interference to other users and can deprive some people of the services they now receive. It is also a deliberate departure from the regulations on broadcasting which Parliament has, at the instigation of successive Governments, established under the international radio regulations, which have the status of solemn treaties between Governments. All broadcasting stations require international clearance, and the Government have an obligation to do what they can to prevent illegal broadcasting. To that extent, we have no choice but to take an attitude that is opposed to the existence of pirate stations.

Moreover, as my hon. Friend knows, the radio spectrum is a scarce resource, and the pirates have pre-empted frequencies that are in many cases earmarked for future use. It cannot be an excuse that there is room for more, because the heart of what I am saying is that further frequencies can be permitted only in the context of planned and properly regulated growth. That is why the Government do not believe that it would be sensible or fair to issue pirate broadcasters with licences to broadcast. To do so on the basis suggested by the pirate broadcasters would be progressively to undermine the broadcasting structure that has evolved over the years.

That does not mean that the Government are dismissive of community radio. I shall say something of how we see its future, and try to answer the question whether there is a prospect of a new tier of broadcasting on a local or community basis. I am glad to tell my hon. Friend that the Government envisage much scope for progress in that direction, although I would not want my remarks to be interpreted as implying that pirate stations will necessarily be legitimised.

For some time, the Government have been alert to the case for developing community radio. The term is generally used to describe two possible concepts. The first is what might be called neighbourhood broadcasting, which is what my hon. Friend had in mind when she made the valid point that London is more of a region than a community and that there are great differences between what happens in Putney or Morden and what happens in east or north London. The Government envisage low-powered transmitters, broadcasting to localities and perhaps financed and run by the local communities.

The second concept is of stations broadcasting across a wider geographical area, which appeal to a community of interests, such as an ethnic group or the devotees of a type of music who do not hear enough of what they like on existing more broadly based stations.

The issues involved in community radio were first explored in a report of the Home Office local radio working party, which was published in 1980. The working party noted that community radio raised important issues of broadcasting policy, and that if it were to develop it would also raise difficult questions of resources, through the need for additional frequencies and for a regulatory framework. Since then, however, other developments—DBS and cable, provision for which was made in the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984—have had to take priority. I make no apology for that. We do not have the manpower to deal at one go with all the possible innovations in a fast-developing area of broadcasting. We must have priorities, and it would have been difficult not to give cable priority at that time.

The spectrum of frequencies available for radio broadcasting on VHF will increase following the international VHF band II planning conference which is now taking place in Geneva. In preparing our proposals for that conference, we have taken account of the possible needs of community radio, with the aim of avoiding the spectrum restraints that could otherwise apply in the future. Although many of the new frequencies will not become available until 1990 and thereafter, we shall at least be able to give some thought after the conference to the range of services that it might be possible to accommodate in the increased spectrum.

Some community radio enthusiasts may question whether we should have a regulatory framework. My hon. Friend must agree that there should be a basis for the allocation of frequencies—perhaps with provision in appropriate cases for time sharing—and for choosing between competing applicants if, as seems possible, there are insufficient frequencies to accommodate all those who wish to broadcast. If there is no means of deciding those matters, the result will be nothing short of anarchy of the airways, in which those who have the most powerful transmitters will dominate. That cannot be right.

Other questions that must be determined are how the stations should be financed and whether, if they are profit-making, there should be limits on the amount of profit.

Should there be conditions about transmitter power and, if so, who should enforce them? What are the implications for the existing broadcasting structure?

Those matters cannot be lightly pushed to one side. They merit careful thought and it is more than an excuse for inaction to raise them. We want to make progress on them. There is a genuine commitment to that—the same commitment which has made the Government innovative on broadcasting matters. A Conservative Government introduced independent television, a Conservative Government gave the go-ahead for independent local radio and a Conservative Government plan an independent national radio station. We have a proud record of innovation on which we want to build.

We intend to begin our consideration of the means by which community radio can be developed at about the turn of the year, when we shall know the outcome of the Geneva conference. That will give us a basis for planning for the future.

My hon. Friend made her case with typical cogency, moderation and good sense. I hope that I have responded in kind and that she will not be disappointed when I say that the Government cannot license pirate stations as they stand. I hope that my hon. Friend will accept that the reasons that I have outlined are fair.

However, I am sure that my hon. Friend will be encouraged by my view, which picks up some of the points in her speech, that the way forward is to look to the development of community radio as a way of encouraging the development of community identity. However, it must be an orderly development. The Government will seek to remove the obstacles and create the opportunities for community radio stations to develop.

We look to those with interest and enterprise to explore the potential for community radio. Provided that the illegal broadcasters meet the criteria for community radio—we shall try to make them as light as possible, consistent with the maintenance of standards—it will be open to them to apply in the same way as any other group. However, I cannot, on behalf of the Government, offer them preferential treatment, and I do not think that they could expect it merely because they have pre-empted frequencies.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at four minutes to Three o'clock.

WALES

Social Care

14. Mr. Hooson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest information on the number of social workers employed by Welsh local authorities and the amount of Welsh Office grants to voluntary organisations involved in social care; and how these figures compare with those in 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Social work staff including trainees and welfare assistants numbered 1,249 in September 1979 and 1,418 in September 1983. The whole-time equivalents were 1,202 and 1,359, respectively.

Grant aid to voluntary organisations was £1·53 million in 1983-84 compared with £538,000 in 1979-80.

Drug Abuse

15. Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he plans to meet the problem of drug abuse in North Wales.

18. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance he has offered to area authorities and other local authorities in Wales to combat drug abuse.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 9 February 1984, my right hon. Friend has extended the purposes for which the Welsh Office central reserve for NHS psychiatric services may be used to include schemes to combat drug misuse. This is in addition to the record levels of resources we are already providing for the NHS in Wales. Authorities have also been reminded of the continued availability of joint finance for schemes to combat drug misuse which are provided by social services authorities, voluntary organisations and other service providers. Bids have been requested by 21 December this year and any assistance would begin from April 1985.

Bus-Rail Substitution

17. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how the rural passenger will benefit from the bus-rail substitution proposals contained in "Local Choice in Public Transport."

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: No bus substitute service would be introduced before the existing statutory procedures governing the closure of the rail service concerned had been completed. Where a bus substitute service was introduced it would offer a good quality, attractive, guaranteed and, where necessary, subsidised alternative to the closed rail service.

Council Property Sales

19. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many sales of public sector dwellings have been completed in Wales (a) under the right-to-buy provisions and (b) under voluntary provisions since May 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Between May 1979 and 30 June 1984, Welsh local authorities, the Cwmbran Development Corporation and Mid-Wales Development sold 36,038 dwellings under the right-to-buy provisions and 4,466 under voluntary provisions. In addition, we estimate that 800 properties have been sold by housing associations under the right-to-buy or through voluntary or co-ownership arrangements.

Common Agricultural Policy

20. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is aware of any proposals to alter the arrangements for the sheepmeat régime or the variable beef premium in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The present arrangements for both the sheepmeat régime and the variable beef premium will be considered as part of the overall 1985-86 common agricultural policy price fixing negotiations.

Milk Quota Scheme

22. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest assessment of the impact of the milk quota scheme on farmers in Wales and in the Vale of Glamorgan, respectively; how many farmers in each case have submitted reports and claims which have been deemed of special need; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Some 4,500 special case applications have been submitted in Wales of which 56 came from the Vale of Glamorgan. It is too early for accurate analysis of the results of these cases. The effects of the implementation of milk quotas will depend on decisions taken by individual farmers.

Torfaen (Investigation)

23. Mr. Abse asked the Secretary of State for Wales when the present investigation into the significantly higher rate of children born with congenital disabilities in Torfaen will be completed; whether the investigation includes a survey of the statistics of early termination of pregnancies prompted by detection of abnormality; and whether he will present the results of the investigation to a public inquiry set up to review the environmental hazards caused by the burning of poly-chlorinated biphenyls at the Re-chem International factory.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None of the evidence at present available substantiates the suggestion that the operation of the Re-chem plant creates environmental hazards or harm to health. The figures so far published for congenital malformations at birth among babies in Torfaen are comparable with rates for the rest of Wales, although the rate for Gwent as a whole is lower than both. The Department is examining in greater detail the incidence of the most serious abnormalities in Gwent and elsewhere so as to put the Torfaen figures into their context. This work will inevitably take time but is being given priority, and the results will be published. Meanwhile, the position is being continuously kept under review, and, should the need for additional work be indicated at any time, it will be done.

Coal Industry Dispute

16. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the effect on industries in Wales of the miners' strike.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The coal mining industry and its related industries are clearly badly affected. Other industries throughout Wales are generally continuing to operate without serious difficulty, but there may be injurious effects upon business and retailing in coal mining areas. It is time that the National Union of Mineworkers brought this costly and damaging strike to an end, in Wales and elsewhere.

Bypasses

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to build a bypass at Fishguard and Goodwick during the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: We are satisfied that the A40 trunk road is basically adequate for the traffic it now has to carry, but we shall keep the need for improvement under review.

Unemployment (Teifi Valley)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to combat the high unemployment in the Teifi valley in mid-Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My hon. Friend the Minister of State convened and chaired a meeting earlier this year of a wide range of bodies and individuals concerned with encouraging new employment opportunities in the Teifi valley. The meeting produced useful ideas for assisting development in the valley, many of which are now under way. These include improved business advisory services, promotion of the valley as an employment and tourism centre, additional funding for social and community developments and the appointment of a secondee from the private sector to look afresh at the needs and opportunities of the area. These initiatives are in addition to the programmes of assistance to the area from Government, statutory agencies and European sources.

Small Businesses

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales, what measures his Department has taken to encourage the setting up of small businesses in Wales during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) on 30 October 1984, at column 887. The measures referred to in that reply represent a continuation and development of the range of assistance given by my Department, the Welsh Development Agency, Mid Wales Development and the Wales Tourist Board during the last five years to encourage the setting up of small businesses in Wales.

Wine Production

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present level of wine production in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information is not available.

New Jobs

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many new jobs have been created in Wales and in the Vale of Glamorgan, respectively, in each of the last four years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive information on jobs created is not available. However, since 1 May 1979, projects for which offers of selective financial assistance have been accepted or which were allocated Government-financed factories promised over 67,000 jobs in Wales as a whole. For the same period the figure for the Vale of Glamorgan district is 1,150.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list those Welsh local authorities whose provisional expenditure targets for 1985-86 have been increased by five per cent. or more, by 10 per cent. or more, by 15 per cent. or more and by 20 per cent. or more, showing for each authority the percentage overspend or underspend on target and on grant-related expenditure bugeted in 1984-85;

(2) if he will list the Welsh authorities with the smallest increase or largest decrease in their expenditure target between, (a) 1984-85 and 1985-86 and (b) 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Expenditure targets for the years 1982-83 to 1984-85, and provisional targets for 1985-86, were, following consultations with the Welsh local authority associations, largely determined by reference to previous year's spending and not the previous year's targets. In addition, adjustments for changes in the level of the national insurance surcharge on local government employees and the increased role of the Manpower Services Commission in funding parts of the further education service are only reflected in the appropriate year. Thus, it is not possible to make meaningful comparisons between targets for successive years. The largest decrease in target between 1982-83 and 1983-84 was £178,000 for Taff Ely borough council. The largest decrease from the 1984-85 target to the 1985-86 provinsional target was £982,000 for Torfaen borough council. The additional information requested for those authorities whose provisional expenditure target for 1985-86 was 5 per cent. or more greater than their 1984-85 target is set out in the following table:—

	Percentage increase 1984-85 to 1985-86 target	Percentage difference between expenditure and:
Gwynedd	5·2	+1·6	−1·4

Block Grants

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total claims on block grants at original budget stage in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85 for Welsh authorities, showing for each year the percentage over or under claim.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total block grant claims £ million	Percentage over claims Per cent.
1981-82	728·6	4·58
1982-83	814·9	3·15
1983-84	811·5	1·12
1984-85	807·6	1·08

In no year was there an underclaim.

Rates

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total paid in (a) domestic and (b) non-domestic rates in Wales, showing domestic rates net of rebate in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

Year	Domestic rates*	Non-domestic rates
1981-82	148·3	232·4
1982-83	173·8	240·6
1983-84	149·5	243·0
1984-85	171·8	264·8

*Excluding domestic rate relief and rate rebates. In 1981-82 and 1982-83 that part of rate rebates paid as part of supplementary benefit is not separately identifiable, and so has not been excluded. Domestic relief was reduced from 36p to 18½p in 1982-83.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many projects in Wales to date are covered by urban development grants; how much public expenditure is involved in the current financial year; and how much is committed in future years.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Since the introduction of the urban development grant scheme in April 1982, 28 projects throughout Wales have been the subject of grant aid approvals or offers in principle. On current estimates the grant aid involved would be about £5 million in the present financial year, with £3 million remaining committed for 1985-86.

Local Authorities (Fees and Charges)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total Welsh local authority income from fees and charges for each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Total income received by Welsh local authorities from fees and charges, including council house rents, in 1981-82 and 1982-83 was as follows:

Year	£ million

Figures are not yet available in sufficient detail to provide information on income from fees and charges in 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total payment of rate support grant to Welsh local authorities in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

1981-82	745,035,999
1982-83	796,416,998
1983-84	815,587,897
1984-85	*803,350,000

* Estimate.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total paid in rate rebates in Wales for each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is as follows:

1981-82	11·719
1982-83	18·231
1983-84	38·662
1984-85	*43·200

* Estimate.

The figures include rate rebates paid in respect of supplementary benefit recipients under the housing benefit scheme. The latter was introduced partially in November 1982 and fully in April 1983.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Secretary of State (Disciplinary Powers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his powers to discipline or otherwise rebuke the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such statutory powers; the Commissioner is appointed by Her Majesty the Queen and holds office at pleasure.

Metropolitan Police (Computers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the private acquisition by a Metropolitan police police officer of a computer for use in Bethnal Green police station, indicating what information will be held on the computer, who will have access to it, and who now owns the computer; and whether any other privately-purchased computers are being used by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a constable working in a unit in Bethnal Green charged with analysing burglaries with a view to improving the deployment of police officers, has used a microcomputer, which she owns, to assist her work. The computer holds information about the type of premises burgled, the time of the burglary, the method of entry, the property stolen and other relevant details, but does not hold personal data about victims. Only her colleagues in the unit have access to the computer.

I understand that there are eight other privately-owned computers in use in the Metropolitan police for statistical and administrative purposes.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is intended to replace the Metropolitan police "C" department computer with new hardware.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the matter is under consideration.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the criminal information system for the Metropolitan police will be operational.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police is currently considering its operational requirement for a computerised crime reporting system and final decisions have not yet been taken to procure such a system.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Metropolitan police "C" department computer has been used during the current miners' strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the computer facilities dedicated to "C" department have continued to be used normally during the period of the current dispute; no special modifications have been made because of the dispute.

Extradition Treaties

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many countries there are with which the United Kingdom does not have an extradition treaty.

Mr. Mellor: There are 77 countries with which the United Kingdom does not have an extradition treaty or any corresponding arrangement under the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to conclude extradition treaties with countries with which there is presently no treaty.

Mr. Mellor: We are currently holding discussions with a view to concluding an extradition treaty with Spain.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals sought by the police are known to be resident in countries with which the United Kingdom has no extradition treaty.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Citizenship

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government intend to revise the British Nationality Act to allow British citizenship to residents of St. Helena.

Mr. Waddington: There are no plans to do so.

Mr. James Farrell

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet completed his investigation into the case of James Farrell now in Her Majesty's prison, Long Lartin, South Littleton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Police inquiries into certain aspects of this case are still in progress. Once the results of these inquiries are available, the review of the case will be completed as soon as possible.

Prostitution

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of money owing for the non-payment of fines at the South Western magistrates' court for offences concerning prostitution as on 31 October.

Mr. Mellor: The total amount of fines outstanding at the South Western magistrates' court as at 30 September 1984 was £428,000. Part of this sum consists of fines in respect of which the time allowed for payment had not expired. Information in respect of fines outstanding for particular offences is not available.

Probation Committees

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which existing local authorities will provide the servicing for the probation joint committees in metropolitan county areas in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan counties.

Mr. Mellor: Following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils, the duty to meet the expenses of probation committees in the metropolitan counties will pass to the district councils; it will be for each of these probation committees to make such arrangements as it sees fit for the provision of specialist services by outside organisations, which could include one or more of the district councils in the area.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan counties, the successor probation committees will be empowered to determine their own budgetary requirements without reference to or consultation with all the metropolitan districts in their areas.

Mr. Mellor: Following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils, the duty of probation committees in the metropolitan counties to consult local authorities on their proposed expenditure in support of probation officers will be revoked. But each of these probation committees will be required to co-opt a member of every district council in the area, and to furnish copies of its annual estimates to those councils; and it will be open to a district council or the probation committee—as it now is to the county council or that committee—in the event of disagreement on the provision for expenditure in support of probation officers, to seek a determination by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on whom the responsibility will fall for determining the numbers of local authority representatives to be co-opted on to probation committees should Cmnd. 9063 be implemented; and what are his proposals for governing the composition of such co-options.

Mr. Mellor: The Government propose that, after the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils, probation committees in outer London and the metropolitan counties should be required to co-opt one member from each of their constituent borough or district councils unless the Home Secretary has by order specified that a greater number should be co-opted from any particular council. The procedure to be followed by a probation committee in co-opting will be specified in an order to be made by the Home Secretary; consultations are being held on the details of the arrangements.

Police and Fire Services

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that police and fire service operational manpower numbers within metropolitan areas will be maintained at least at their present levels after March 1986 should Cmnd. 9063 be implemented.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Decisions on the levels of operational manpower will be taken by the new joint authorities subject to existing statutory requirements and to the transitional precept and manpower controls described in paragraph 6.6 of Cmnd. 9063.

Stoke Heath Youth Custody Centre

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will order an inquiry into the running of the Stoke Heath youth custody centre following complaints sent to him by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside;

(2) if he is satisfied with the supervision at the Stoke Heath youth custody centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Member has written to my right hon. and learned Friend about the health of an inmate at Stoke Heath and we will reply to his letter as soon as we can. If he has any further points to put, we will naturally look into them. But we see no need for an inquiry into the establishment.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the death of the young prisoner in the Stoke Heath youth custody centre, details of which have been sent to him by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside.

Mr. Mellor: Stephen McLachlan died in Stoke Heath youth custody centre during the night of 9-10 July 1984. His death was the subject of an inquest held on 5 September 1984 at Market Drayton. The jury's verdict was that he died of natural causes and that the cause of death was aggravated by self-neglect.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have received injuries at the Stoke Heath youth custody centre in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information in this form is not routinely collected and is therefore not readily available.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged in connection with the current dispute in the mining industry; how many have been finally dealt with by the courts; how many have been fined; and how many have been sentenced to imprisonment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Between 13 March and 13 November inclusive 6,655 people were charged with offences in connection with the miners' dispute and 3,049 of these cases have now been dealt with by the courts. Of the 2,404 convicted, 1,584 have been fined and 49 have received custodial sentences.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details, by police force area, of the total number of arrests to the latest available date in connection with the coal strike, and provide a breakdown of arrests by offence charged with outcome of trial and those still awaiting trial.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report the following information on the mining dispute: (a) the number of arrests in each police area, (b) the number of those arrested who were released without being charged and (c) the charges laid and the number of persons charged with each offence listed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information available centrally about the number of arrests made in each police force area in connection with the miners' dispute relates to the period 13 March to 13 November inclusive and is as follows:

Police Force area	Number of arrrests
Clevaland	58
Cumbria	25

Of the 6,655 people charged during this period, 3,606 cases have not yet been resolved; 645 of the cases dealt with resulted in acquittals, and 2,404 in convictions.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been sent to aid other forces from each force in England and Wales for each week of the mining strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there have been from other areas in each aided force for each week of the mining strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in each force in England and Wales have been placed on stand-by in their force areas for each week of the mining strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of metropolitan police district support units that have been sent to aid other forces for each week of the mining strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner tells me that officers serving in district support units of the Metropolitan police have been sent on mutual aid to other police forces on only one occasion. This was on the night of 18-19 June, when 93 officers drawn from district support units attended at Betteshanger colliery, Kent.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the numbers of metropolitan police vehicles employed each week in policing the mining strike in aided force areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of (a) uniformed police and (b) Criminal Investigation Department and Special Branch officers who have been sent each week to aid other forces during the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The table gives, to the nearest 100, the maximum number of uniformed officers deployed to aid other forces during each week of the dispute.

Kerb Crawling

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the Criminal Law Revision Committee has yet reached any conclusions on the need for changes in the law relating to kerb crawling; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the policy advisory committee on sexual offences has yet reached any conclusions on the need for changes in the law relating to kerb crawling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Criminal Law Revision Committee, advised by the policy advisory committee on sexual offences, submitted a report on "Prostitution in the Street" which was published in August (Cmnd. 9329). The report recommends the creation of a new offence to deal with the nuisance of kerb crawling. As I said in a reply to a question from the hon. Member on 14 November, at columns 258-59, we welcome the committee's recommendation and, although there will be no early opportunity to give effect to it in Government legislation, we would support a Bill introduced by a private Member for that purpose.

Metropolitan Police (District Support Units)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of district support units in each of the metropolitan police divisions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is one district support unit for each of the 24 districts of the Metropolitan police.

Police Support Units

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of police support units (or their equivalents) for each police force in England and Wales in 1981 and 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police support units are not maintained on a permanent basis. They consist of 23 officers drawn together from normal operational duties to make a unit as and when required.

Mr. Mohammed Siddique

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 12 November, Official Report, column 71, whether Mr. Mohammed Siddique was interviewed by the governor or deputy governor of Winson Green prison before 12 November in connection with his wish to grow a beard.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that the statement that Mr. Siddique had not applied to the governor for permission to grow a beard, whilst correct when the reply was prepared was no longer correct when the reply was sent to the hon. Member on Monday 12 November. Following an application to the governor, Mr. Siddique was granted permission to grow a beard on Sunday 11 November.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any restrictions on the clothes which may be worn by men on remand in Winson Green prison.

Mr. Mellor: The prison rules provide that an unconvicted prisoner may wear his own clothing if it is suitable, tidy and clean. Convicted but unsentenced prisoners on remand are required to wear prison clothing, and so are unconvicted prisoners who do not have suitable clothing of their own. These provisions are followed at Birmingham prison. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, I should be glad to look into it.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Mr. Mohammed Shafi Malik was not allowed to visit Mr. Raja, who is on remand at Winson Green prison on 31 October.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Malik's name was accidentally omitted from the list of Mr. Raja's approved visitors maintained at the prison gate lodge and he was not, therefore, admitted to the prison. Apologies have been made to Mr. Malik and Mr. Raja, and the list of approved visitors to Mr. Raja has been brought up to date.

Fire Services

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria by which he measures the efficiency of the service provided by local authority fire departments.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Fire authority performance of statutory duties is inspected by Her Majesty's inspectorate, particular attention being paid to observance of nationally recommended standards of fire cover.

National Community Service

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will give consideration to the introduction of a form of national community service for school leavers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply.

Minimum age school leavers are already guaranteed the offer of a full year's training and work experience under the youth training scheme, and the scheme offers places for 17-year-old leavers as well. In addition, the voluntary projects programme and the opportunities for volunteering scheme run by the Department of Health and Social Security provide opportunities for young people to undertake work of benefit to the community. While all these schemes are kept under regular review, we have no immediate plans to extend the range of measures available.

North Cornwall (Swimmers)

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were drowned off the beach at Porthowan in each of the last three years;

(2) how many people were drowned off the coast of north Cornwall in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Information available centrally about deaths from drowning is collected through death registration by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The amount of detail available is dependent on information supplied by Her Majesty's coroners.

In the years 1981 to 1983 no drowning deaths were identified as occurring off the beach at Porthowan. Thirteen deaths occurring off the north Cornish coast were registered in this period—five in 1981, five in 1982 and three in 1983. These include one known suicide and two deaths probably involving falling from cliffs.

SCOTLAND

Home Insulation

Mr. Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing in constant prices expenditure by local authorities on insulation of their housing stock for each of the last five years; and if he is satisfied that the inclusion of grants for such expenditure in the general allocation has not resulted in a fall in expenditure.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

	Cash	At 1983-84 prices
1979-80	4·2	6·1
1980-81	3·7	4·5
1981-82	2·5	2·8
1982-83	2·1	2·2
1983-84	2·3	2·3

I have no reason to believe that the inclusion of funds for the insulation of local authority houses in their allocation has been the sole, or even the most significant factor in this pattern of expenditure. Since 1980-81, when resources for this purpose were included in the HRA-block allocations, the pattern reflects decisions by local authorities in allocating the resources available to them. Over this period, expenditure has not dropped markedly in relation to the number of houses still without insulation.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show for each regional authority (a) provisional outturn expenditure in 1983-84 and (b) planned expenditure in 1984-85 and 1985-86 on (i) highway structural maintenance, (ii) highway routine maintenance and (iii) highway capital.

Mr. Ancram: Information available to me on regional authorities' current highway expenditure does not identify separately expenditure on structural and on routine maintenance, and includes expenditure on road lighting and road safety measures. Provisional outturn expenditure in 1983-84 is set out in the table. An estimate of current expenditure by each regional council in 1984-85 appears in "Rating Review part I: Estimates of Income and Expenditure 1984-85"; published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, of which a copy is available in the Library. No comparable estimate is yet available for 1985-86.

The table also shows provisional outturn capital expenditure in 1983-84, allocated provision for local authority roads and transport projects in 1984-85, and provisional allocations intimated for 1985-86. Each regional and island council has discretion to determine the distribution of expenditure within its overall allocation.

M. D. Sudjic (Appeal)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects a determination of the appeal by M. D. Sudjic undertaken by the service committee appeal hearing on Wednesday 18 April.

Mr. John MacKay: The decision on this appeal is likely to issue about the end of this month.

Co-operatives

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of (a) registered workers' co-operatives and (b) community co-operatives in Scotland; and how many people they employ.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest figures available to my Department indicate that approximately 92 Scottish co-operatives have been registered. Of these, it is estimated that 43 are workers' co-operatives and 39 community co-operatives or community businesses, employing 363 and 931, respectively.

Rent and Rate Rebates

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in Scotland during the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84 received (a) rent rebates and (b) rates rebates.

Mr. Ancram: Rent rebates and most rates rebates have been since 1 April 1983 a part of the housing benefit system which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member. The amounts of rates rebates on accommodation for disabled persons and on all property in enterprise zones, both of which remain my responsibility, are shown below, but no figures for the number of persons, households or premises are held centrally.

Corstorphine Hill

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will give favourable consideration to the request from Edinburgh district council that Corstorphine hill be designated as countryside.

Mr. Ancram: Such a request reached my Department on 15 November and is now under consideration. In reaching a decision on the request, my right hon. Friend will take into account my hon. Friend's views.

Western Relief Road

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland where and when the Parliamentary Commission on the proposed Western relief road will sit; and whether interested bodies in Edinburgh will be able to make representations to the commissioners in due course.

Mr. Ancram: The inquiry by commissioners will be held in the Lothian regional council chamber, Parliament square, Edinburgh, and will open at 11 am on Thursday 22 November 1984. Those bodies which objected to the proposed order in the manner, and within the time, prescribed in general orders made under the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act 1936, will be heard by the commissioners. No other bodies are entitled to be heard although the commissioners do have a discretion to hear them.

Hepatitis B

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which hospitals in Scotland are designated to receive cases of acute hepatitis B; and what is the geographical catchment area for each one;

(2) if he will list, for each of the last five years, the number of acute hepatitis B cases admitted to each hospital in Scotland which is designated to handle such cases.

Mr. John MacKay: Hospitals are not specially designated for the reception of such cases. Figures are not readily available for 1979, but the numbers of discharges from Scottish hospitals with a primary or secondary diagnosis of viral hepatitis B for the years 1980 to 1983 are given in the table.

Electricity Output

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of electricity output in Scotland came from nuclear power in the year before the coal dispute started; and what percentage is now coming from such stations.

Mr. Allan Stewart: For the 12-month period prior to November 1983, 39 per cent. of electricity output in Scotland came from nuclear power; and for the period from November 1983 to August 1984, the latest date for which published data is available, the figure was 36 per cent.

Residential Homes

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to introduce legislation to give local authorities additional powers to detect any unregistered premises offering nursing care to the elderly and to enable those authorities to take action against those registered establishments which fail to meet the requisite standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Health boards are already empowered to enter and inspect any premises which they reasonably believe to be used as a nursing home and to cancel the registration of establishments which fail to meet the requisite standards. Failure to comply with the requirement to register or the conditions of registration is punishable on summary conviction by a fine. Additional powers do not seem necessary.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details, by police force area, of the total number of arrests to the latest available date in connection with the coal strike, and indicate the number of arrests by offence charged with, the sentences on conviction and the numbers still awaiting trial.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the hospital site at Port Stanley has yet to be cleared.

Mr. Raison: The site will be cleared when work on the new hospital facility begins. It would be uneconomic to do so earlier.

Ethiopia

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will change his policy towards Ethiopia and make British funds available for its longer term development as well as for the present humanitarian needs.

Mr. Raison: We are helping long-term development through the waiving of aid debt and through a limited programme of technical co-operation which concentrates on education. The Commonwealth Development Corporation and British voluntary agencies, through the joint funding scheme, can also operate in Ethiopia with support from the aid programme. British funds are also, of course, channelled through the European Community, which has a substantial development programme in Ethiopia.

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the assessments by (a) the ambassador and (b) the international and voluntary organisations on the needs and on the possibilities for effective assistance against famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: Communications with our ambassador are confidential, but we regularly receive and respond to his recommendations on what we ought to supply. It is for the organisations that the hon. Member has in mind to decide whether or not to publish their assessments.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will send the report on St. Helena by Sir Neil Marten to the island Governor so that it can be made available to members of the Legislative Council.

Mr. Raison: No. Sir Neil Marten visited St. Helena as my personal representative and therefore reported personally to me.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the amount of food aid from the United Kingdom to Ethiopia fell from £5,194,000 in 1982 to £2,510,000 in 1983.

Mr. Raison: The figures quoted reflect the level of calls on our bilateral food aid by the world food programme for use in development projects in Ethiopia, as well as 1,500 tonnes of cereals supplied direct in 1982. The figures do not include food aid provided by the European Community.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Germany (Property Claims)

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the recent accord between the East German Government and the Government of Finland in respect of payments by the East German Government to Finnish subjects who owned property in East Germany in 1945, he will take further steps to press the claims of British nationals with similar claims.

Mr. Renton: We understand that the agreement between Finland and the German Democratic Republic which was initialled on 3 October 1984 dealt with some 30 claims which Finnish citizens had made against the German Democratic Republic. We have held six rounds of detailed talks with the East German authorities since 1980 on the more than 300 British claims against the German Democratic Republic. The East German authorities have recently accepted our invitation to a plenary session of discussions on these claims in the first half of next year. We trust that this will contribute to an early settlement of the claims.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annual average wage of a farm worker in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: The minimum basic monthly wage—based on a 40-hour week—as agreed between the Falkland Islands Sheep Owners Association and the General Employees Union in October 1984 is as follows:

Minimum Basic Wage	£
1. Foreman	311·13
2. Head Shepherd (outside house)	299·47
3. Head Shepherd (settlement)	283·38
4. Handyman	283·38
5. Mechanic	283·38
6. Cook	290·72
7. Cowman/Gardener	276·04
8. Shepherd (outside house)	271·71
9. Shepherd General	254·19
10. Trainee Shepherd	250·88
11. Tractor driver	255·44
12. Leading hand (labourer)	257·84
13. Farm Labourer (18)	240·97

Based on these figures the average annual wage is £3,284·80. In addition, long service awards are paid and employees on West Falkland receive a special allowance of £7·50 per month. There are additional perquisites including, according to employers, free housing, peat, meat and milk worth approximately £2,000 annually. There is also a quarterly cost of living review.

Mr. John Sprange

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons charges were brought against a British citizen, John Sprange, by the Berlin authorities for bringing a military device, namely a balloon, into Berlin.

Mr. Renton: The Berlin prosecutor—representing the Berlin legal authorities—brought charges against Mr. Sprange because he had reason to believe that Mr. Sprange had on 28 August 1983, infringed the law applicable in Berlin; specifically Allied Control Council Law 43. The case was heard by the Berlin court on 8 November. Mr. Sprange was fined 100 deutschmarks.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to bring about direct election to the Legislative Council in Hong Kong; and when he expects the first directly elected member to sit on the Council.

Mr. Luce: On 21 November the Hong Kong Government will publish a White Paper on the further development of representative government in Hong Kong. This will take into account public comment in Hong Kong on the proposals contained in the Green Paper which was published there on 18 July. It would be inappropriate to comment on such matters before the White Paper has been published.

Pakistan

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made representations to the Government of Pakistan about the respect for human rights in that country.

Mr. Renton: The Pakistan Government can be in no doubt about the strength of our views concerning violations of human rights wherever they occur. We have very recently reiterated our concern to the Pakistan Government about human rights issues and about certain aspects of the application of martial law in Pakistan.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why his Department's briefing on St. Helena was not sent to the hon. Member for Wrexham in time to arrive before he left the United Kingdom to visit the island.

Mr. Renton: The briefing material on St. Helena was sent by post direct to the hon. Member's private address. A copy was also sent to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, United Kingdom branch, for him. I am sorry if neither reached the hon. Member before his departure for St. Helena.

British Overseas Citizens

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he takes of the income of a member of a family settled in the United Kingdom in issuing quota vouchers to his family in India who are British overseas citizens.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

Account is not normally taken of income in issuing special vouchers to British overseas citizens heads of household. The dependants of British overseas citizens settled here are admitted by entry clearance procedures. The income of the sponsor and other members of the family in this country is taken into account in these cases only in order to ensure that the applicants would not become an immediate burden on public funds. But income is not assessed where the sponsor has become a British citizen or was settled in the United Kingdom on the coming into force of the Immigration Act 1971.

ENERGY

Coal Production

24. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the volume of coal production to date in 1984; and how this compares with production over the same period in 1983.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest published information is in Energy Trends for October 1984, which is available in the Library of the House.

Civil Nuclear Facilities

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a list of all civil nuclear facilities.

Mr. Goodlad: The main organisations involved in civil nuclear operations are the UK Generating Boards, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, British Nuclear Fuels plc, the National Nuclear Corporation and Amersham International. The principal sites of these organisations are as follows:

Central Electricity Generating Board
- Bradwell Nuclear power station
- Berkeley Nuclear power station
- Berkeley nuclear laboratories
- Dungeness 'A' nuclear power station
- Dungeness 'B' nuclear power station
- Hartlepool nuclear power station
- Heysham I nuclear power station
- Hinkley Point 'A' nuclear power station
- Hinkley Point 'B' nuclear power station
- Oldbury nuclear power station
- Sizewell A nuclear power station
- Trawsfynydd nuclear power station
- Wylfa nuclear power station

South of Scotland Electricity Board
- Hunterston 'A' nuclear power station
- Hunterston 'B' nuclear power station

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
- Atomic Energy establishment Winfrith
- Windscale, nuclear power development laboratories, Sellafield
- Dounreay nuclear power development establishment
- Springfields nuclear power development laboratories
- Atomic energy research establishment Harwell
- Atomic energy establishment Culham

British Nuclear Fuels plc
- Sellafield works
- Springfield works
- Capenhurst works
- Chapelcross works
- Drigg

Amersham International
- Amersham
- Harwell
- Cardiff

The National Nuclear Corporation and the other organisations also have other establishments for design work and administrative purposes. Civil research reactors are also operated at the following sites:
- University of Strathclyde: Scottish universities research reactor, East Kilbride
- Imperial College: consort research reactor, Ascot
- Victoria University, Manchester: research reactor, Risley
- Imperial Chemical industries: triga reactor, Billingham

In addition there are a number of firms and organisations involved in the nuclear programmes which in some cases hold small quantities of nuclear material. Similarly nuclear materials are used in small quantities for other purposes such as medicine.

Plutonium Exports (Japan)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received assurances that no plutonium exported to Japan will be used in the production of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. Article III(a) of the United Kingdom/Japan "Agreement for Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy" (Cmnd. 3853) specifically provides that materials, including special fissionable materials, obtained under the agreement shall only be used for peaceful purposes.

Laser Isotope Separation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the Central Electricity Generating Board, or any other of the agencies for which he has responsibility, are engaged in, or plan to engage in, research into laser isotope separation.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes, research is being conducted by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority into the separation of uranium isotopes by this method.

British Nuclear Fuels Limited

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of British Nuclear Fuels Limited's annual turnover is accounted for by work for the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Goodlad: Under 10 per cent. of BNFL's turnover typically derives from work for the Ministry of Defence.

Plutonium Production (Wylfa)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much plutonium has been produced at Wylfa since its inception;

(2) if he will publish a record to account for the plutonium produced at Wylfa during the first three years of its existence;

(3) how much of the plutonium exported to Japan by the United Kingdom is derived from reprocessed fuel from the Wylfa reactor.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on 9 March 1983 at column 401.

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much plutonium derived from fuel discharged from Central Electricity Generating Board reactors has been sent to the United States of America;

(2) whether any plutonium derived from eradiated fuel produced in Central Electricity Generating Board reactors has been applied to weapons use either in the United Kingdom or elsewhere;

(3) whether any plutonium sent to the United States of America has been incorporated into the United States of America military stockpile;

(4) how much of the plutonium sent to the United States of America has been used in civil fast reactor research.

Mr. Goodlad: Each of these matters has been covered in previous answers. On the export of plutonium to the United States of America I would refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on 9 March 1983, at column 401, and 5 May 1983, at column 116; to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) on 27 July 1982, at column 438; and to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's answer of 2 July, at column 36, and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement's of 25 April 1984, at column 506, to questions from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris). On the use of plutonium in the United Kingdom and elsewhere I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on 4 February 1983, at column 206. I have nothing to add.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected total of energy consumption in the United Kingdom in 1984; what was the total consumed in 1983; and what was the estimated total cost of energy consumption in 1983.

Mr. Peter Walker: Provisional figures for total energy consumption, on a primary fuel input basis, in the first nine months of 1984 was 223·8 million tonnes coal equivalent, compared with 227·2 million tonnes in the same period in 1983, a fall of 1·5 per cent. Consumption in 1983 as a whole was 312·9 million tonnes coal equivalent.

Total expenditure on energy by final users in 1983 is estimated to have been £34,980 million. Figures are not readily available for periods shorter than calendar years.

Sun Oil Company (Oil Rig)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Official Report information concerning the contents and value of contracts awarded to United Kingdom-based firms by Gotaverken Arendal, for subcontract work and services in the construction of the semi-submersible oil rig ordered by the Sun Oil Company.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No. The information is commercially confidential.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of electricity output in England and Wales came from nuclear power in the year before the coal dispute started; and what percentage is now coming from such stations.

Mr. Goodlad: In the year from November 1982 to October 1983, 15·5 per cent. of electricity generated by the CEGB was produced at nuclear stations. The latest published information is for August 1984 when the figure was 19·3 per cent. The increase is the result of the commissioning of new nuclear capacity and because the proportionate nuclear contribution is higher during the summer months when demand for electricity falls.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the total value of electricity produced by nuclear power in England and Wales in the six months preceding the start of the coal dispute and in the six months since the start of the dispute;

(2) if there have been any changes in the cost per unit of electricity produced from nuclear power stations as a result of increased output since the coal dispute began;

(3) if there have been any changes in operating costs in total per unit of output in nuclear power stations since the coal dispute began.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been no changes in the cost per unit of electricity produced from nuclear power stations since the coal dispute began. Information about the value of electricity produced by nuclear power during the past year is not readily available.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, by percentage for each of the last 12 months, the amount of electricity generated by (a) coal-fired power stations, (b) oil-fired power stations and (c) nuclear fired power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest published information on the generation of electricity by fuel is available in the October issue of Energy Trends, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of oil imports for electricity generation in 1983 and for the latest available date in 1984, indicating the country of export by percentage of shipments and the value of such at current prices.

Mr. Goodlad: This information is not available.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many units of electricity were produced from nuclear power in the six months preceding the start of the coal dispute; how many were produced in the six months period after the start of the coal dispute; and what was the figure for the corresponding six months period in 1983.

Mr. Goodlad: Electricity generation at CEGB nuclear power stations for the periods mentioned was as follows:

	Gigawatt hours
November 1982-April 1983	18,648
May-October 1983	16,507
November 1983-April 1984	19,051

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he has had consultations with the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority or the Health and Safety Commission about the effects of delaying maintenance in nuclear power stations as a result of the coal dispute; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received any representations about the effects on nuclear power stations of delays in maintenance as a result of the coal dispute;

(3) if he is satisfied that delays in maintenance at nuclear power stations do not affect the safety of those stations.

Mr. Goodlad: Nuclear power stations are required to be shut down every two years for inspection and maintenance under conditions attached to their nuclear site licences. These conditions are enforced by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and I am satisfied that in every respect these requirements are being met.

Fuel Stocks

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest available figures for fuel stocks at power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest published figures are for stocks of coal at power stations in Great Britain at the end of August. These show stocks of 15·527 million tonnes of coal. I doubt if there has been much if any reduction since then.

Coal Imports

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of the total amount of coal imported during 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and to the latest available date in 1984, giving for each year a breakdown of the countries of export.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on coal imports on 13 November at column 167.

Coal Supplies

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions staff from his Department have had with staff from other Government Departments, or with nationalised industries, over the future movement of coal supplies.

Mr. David Hunt: The movement of coal from National Coal Board sites is a matter for the NCB. The movement of non-indigenous coal is a matter for importers and the distributive trade.

Central Electricity Generating Board

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what facilities are available to the Central Electricity Generating Board for receiving long-term weather forecasts.

Mr. Goodlad: There are close contacts between the Meteorological Office and the CEGB for receiving weather data; long-term weather forecasts were discontinued four years ago.

Power Stations

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report (i) a table showing the number of power stations for each of the last 10 years (a) commissioned, (b) completed and (c) whether coal, oil, dual coal/oil, or nuclear fuelled and (ii) a list of all power stations commissioned since 1974, showing (a) dates of decision taken and coming on stream and (b) fuel used.

Mr. Goodlad: This information is not readily available.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, for the duration of the coal dispute, he will make it his practice to answer questions about its consequences for individual power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

NCB (Mining Sites)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) in respect of how many mining sites he has given permission to the National Coal Board for their sale in the last five years and to date in 1984; and if he will list the purchasers;

(2) if he will list the land owned by the National Coal Board which has been sold after his permission has been sought, other than land sold for housing purposes, in the last five years and to date in 1984; and if he will list the purchasers.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Coal Board does not require any consent from the Secretary of State for Energy before it may sell the surface land of disused mines, or any other land owned by it.

ENVIRONMENT

Rate Rebates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total paid in rate rebates in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The available information is as follows:

	Rate Rebates-England (£ million)
1981-82	339
1982-83	519
1984-85	1,106

Notes: (i) The figures include rate rebates paid in respect of supplementary benefit recipients under the housing benefit scheme. The latter was introduced partially in November 1982 and fully in April 1983. Equivalent sums paid to supplementary benefit recipients under the previous arrangements are not included.

(ii) The figure for 1984-85 is the current public expenditure provision.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total paid in (a) domestic and (b) non-domestic rates, showing domestic rates net of rate rebates, in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Estimates for England are as follows:

	Domestic Rates (£ billion)				Non-domestic rates £ billion
	*Gross	Domestic rate relief grant	Rate rebates†	Net
1981-82	4·91	0·66	0·34	3·91	5·41
1982-83	5·58	0·68	0·52	4·38	5·86
1983-84	5·96	0·69	1·09	4·18	6·27
1984-85	6·32	0·69	1·11	4·52	6·64

* i.e. before deduction of domestic rate relief grant and rate rebates.
† I refer the hon. Member to another answer I am giving him today on this subject.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the level of rates in the Huddersfield area compares with the level of rates in the south-eastern region.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1984-85, the general rate poundage in Kirklees district council (which includes Huddersfield) is 1·7 per cent. higher than the average general rate poundage in the south eastern region.

Housing (Expenditure)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the impact of proposed cutbacks in the housing budget, housing improvement grants, and the proposed halving of new building starts on decaying inner city areas and upon the construction industry.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 12 November to my learned Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Hind) at column 68-69 about the Department's public expenditure plans for 1985-86, including those for housing.

Departmental Press Release

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reason his Department's press release No. 303 of 26 June did not appear on Central Office of Information news distribution list Nos. 121 and 122; and what distribution arrangements were made for this press release.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have been unable to establish why press notice 303 was inadvertently left off the Central Office of Information news distribution list Nos. 121 and 122. However, I can assure the hon. Member that copies of the press notice were placed in the Lobby and were distributed to all national daily and Sunday newspapers, the Press Association, Reuters and the national television and radio networks. Copies were also distributed to the journals and organisations concerned with local government matters.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of expenditure by local authorities under the Housing Defects Act for 1984-85.

Mr. Gow: The Act, and a scheme of assistance in respect of prefabricated reinforced concrete houses designed before 1960, comes into effect on 1 December 1984. Local authorities will not incur capital expenditure under the Act until applications have been determined and payments have been made. Payments do not fall to be made until the reinstatement works, or stages of reinstatement works, or repurchase, have been completed. As the scheme comes into effect with only four months of the financial year 1984-85 remaining, I estimate that expenditure this year will be small.

Local Authorities (Discrimination)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering any proposals to prevent local authorities from discriminating against private companies for reasons which have nothing to do with the quality of their work.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are practical problems in tackling this sort of behaviour but we are carefully examining the options open to us.

Home Loan Scheme

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many young first-time home buyers have taken up the options available under the Government's home loan scheme (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in England, (c) in Wales and (d) in Cardiff for the years since 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We estimate that 18,000 people have benefited from interest-free loans and savings bonuses under the scheme since 1980 when the first benefits became available. I regret that figures for the take-up of the scheme are not available other than for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider increasing sums available under the home loan scheme to attract more young people to the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friends increased the house price limits for the homeloan scheme applying in England, Wales and Scotland in August of this year, but we have no plans at present to increase the benefits available under the scheme.

Water Meters

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what encouragement the Government are giving to the introduction of water meters for domestic consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I have invited the water industry to undertake a joint study with my Department and to report to the Government on the possible extension of water metering generally to households.

The chairman of the Thames water authority has agreed to head the steering group for this study, in which the water companies will participate.

I hope that the steering group will report early next year.

Flats (Marketability)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide increased protection for owners in blocks of flats whose marketability is adversely affected by planning permission.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend on 31 October at column 1040.

Rate Support Grant (Home Counties)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give consideration to the introduction of a multiplier for the home counties when assessing rate support grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend is required to determine multipliers in accordance with principles applicable to all local authorities, or all local authorities in the same class. I will consider any representations which are made, but there are at present no plans to amend the legislation in this respect.

Rate Support Grant (New Towns)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give consideration to the inclusion of a new town factor in the formula used for assessing rate support grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I discussed this issue on 9 November with a deputation from the new towns committee of the Association of District Councils. I made it clear that I remain willing to consider constructive proposals for improvements in grant related expenditure assessments for individual services provided by local authorities with new towns in their areas.

Land Purchases (Nature Conservancy Council)

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the land purchases for which the Nature Conservancy Council has given or offered support in the present financial year; and what percentage of the overall cost the Nature Conservancy Council's grant represented in each case;

(2) if he will list the applications made by voluntary bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council for grant towards the purchase of sites of special scientific interest land since April 1983, that were subsequently refused support, and the reasons for their rejection.

Mr. Waldegrave: I regret that the information is not immediately available. I shall write shortly to my hon. Friend and arrange to place in the Library the details of land purchases and applications made by voluntary bodies to the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will increase the Nature Conservancy Council's grant-in-aid so that the Nature Conservancy Council can further assist the purchase of sites of special scientific interest land by voluntary bodies.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have already announced an increase of £2·55 million in the Nature Conservancy Council grant-in-aid for 1984-85, subject to the approval of Parliament of the necessary supplementary estimate. The provision for their grant-in-aid for 1985-86 will be increased to £22·7 million, again subject to the approval of Parliament. This represents an increase of £7 million, or 45 per cent. over the original provision for 1984-85, much of which will go to assist site safeguard. It is for the Nature Conservancy Council to decide how precisely to allocate the resources available to them.

Empty Council Houses

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by authority the number of council houses empty for longer than three months, six months and 12 months at the most recent date available.

Sir George Young: Information about all vacant dwellings owned by local authorities and about those vacant for more than a year, but not for other lengths of time, is collected in English authorities' annual housing investment programme returns: copies are available in the Library.

The estimates based on the latest returns relating to 1 April 1984, are:

	Number
Vacant including those closed under slum clearance powers	112,700
of which, those vacant for more than a year	25,300

Manchester (Boundaries)

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations from the city of Manchester to extend its boundaries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The city council's leader has written to my right hon. Friend to say he considers Manchester may be too small. Any such representations should however be sent to the Local Government Boundary Commission for England. The commission will review metropolitan districts in greater Manchester as part of its mandatory review under section 48(1) of the Local Government Act 1972, though it has been directed by my right hon. Friend to defer consideration of greater London and metropolitan areas until the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1992.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it remains the policy of the Government to give overriding importance to areas that have been designated as areas of outstanding natural beauty; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's policy towards areas of outstanding natural beauty was set out in a detailed statement by my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State on 29 July 1982 at column 707-10. That remains our position.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the existing areas of outstanding natural beauty, designated by the Countryside Commission, in East Anglia.

Mr. Waldegrave: The areas are:

Norfolk coast, confirmed in 1968.
Suffolk coast and Heaths, confirmed in 1970.
Dedham Vale, confirmed in 1970.
Dedham Vale extension, confirmed in 1978.

Beach Pollution

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to require local authorities to publish the pollution figures for the beaches in their areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 13 November to his very similar question. A report containing available information on the quality of beaches and bathing waters in England and Wales was recently deposited in the Library.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline his present proposals for servicing the police, fire and public transport joint boards should the metropolitan counties be abolished.

Mr. Waldegrave: This will be for the boards themselves to determine, subject to the need to comply with the transitional manpower controls.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, should Cmnd. 9063 be implemented, a metropolitan district council will have the right to challenge a charge made upon it by the residuary body appointed by him to wind up the metropolitan county affairs.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The Bill to effect the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils, which my right hon. Friend will shortly present to the House, will make appropriate provision for the audit of the residuary bodies, for the questioning of the auditor, and for the inspection of their accounts.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bodies representative of the minerals industry interests which have indiacted their support for his proposals to transfer the minerals planning function to district councils in the event of the implementation of Cmnd. 9063.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 25 October at c. 695.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been made of the immediate direct and indirect effects in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan county councils on the numbers in employment in each of the towns or cities in which they presently have their main office complexes.

Mr. Waldegrave: No such estimate is possible at this stage.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends mineral planning and waste disposal to continue to be administered on a county-wide basis in the present metropolitan county areas if the county councils for those areas are abolished.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Minerals planning and waste disposal will become the responsibility of the metropolitan district councils following abolition of the metropolitan county councils. On land use planning (including minerals), regional strategic guidance may be issued after consultation with the district councils in each area and neighbouring county councils. On waste regulation and disposal, district councils are expected to establish joint arrangements for the co-ordinated discharge of these functions. The Secretary of State will take a reserve power to establish statutory joint arrangements if he is not satisfied that those made by district councils are adequate.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to continue the present programmes of West Yorkshire metropolitan county council and the Greater Manchester county council to find alternative uses for disused mills in the event of the abolition of these authorities.

Sir George Young: The metropolitan districts already have access to the necessary resources, including derelict land grant and the urban programme, to develop alternative uses for disused mills. In the near future, European regional development fund non-quota grants will also be available. After abolition, the authorities will be free to take over any programmes being undertaken by West Yorkshire metropolitan county council or Greater Manchester county council, if they wish to do so.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce rates equalisation schemes between metropolitan district councils in each metropolitan county, in the event of the abolition of the councils of those counties.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. I am satisfied that after the proposed abolition of the metropolitan county councils the block grant system will continue to achieve equalisation of rateable resources in the metropolitan areas.

Unitary Development Plans

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be represented at public local inquiries held to examine his strategic planning guidance on unitary development plans, in the event that the metropolitan counties are abolished.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend the Secretry of State is from time to time represented at public local inquiries into objections to local plans. He might similarly be represented at these proposed inquiries should the need arise.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional staff provisions he has budgeted for in the regional offices of his Department to handle each of the aspects of the unitary development plan systems, should the metropolitan counties be abolished (a) preparation of commencement orders, (b) drafting of strategic planning guidance, (c) servicing the regional planning conferences, (d) organising public consultation of draft strategic planning guidance, (e) considering public response to guidance, (f) drafting revised guidance, (g) ensuring that guidance is not undermined by part II unitary development plan proposals, (h) servicing any increased number of examinations in public or private inquiries, (i) ensuring consistency between district councils' interpretation of guidance and part II proposals and (j) justifying guidance at examination in public or private local inquiries.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will publish his estimates of the overall costs and savings associated with abolition with the explanatory and financial memorandum to the main abolition Bill.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends that his strategic planning guidance on unitary development plans, in the event that Cmnd. 9063 is implemented, will be challengeable at an examination in public.

Mr. Macfarlane: Where an examination in public is held in accordance with the proposals in the "Revised Proposals Paper: The Reallocation of Planning Functions in the Greater London Council and Metropolitan County Council Areas" (June 1984) to consider part of Part I of a unitary development plan, there will be an opportunity to discuss strategic guidance where this is relevant.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what manner, and by what mechanism, he intends to conduct public consultation on the strategic planning guidance he intends issuing for each district council's unitary development plan if Cmnd. 9063 is implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The "Revised Proposals Paper: The Reallocation of Planning Functions in the Greater London Council and Metropolitan County Council Areas" (14 June 1984) explains that it is proposed that such guidance will be published in draft, and there will be an opportunity for comments to be made and considered before the guidance is finalised.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the general public are given the right of objection to strategic planning guidance in unitary development plans and that there will be a right of hearing for objections before guidance is issued in its final form.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer my hon. Friend to my previous answer on the opportunity for comment on draft strategic guidance. The proposals for the adoption of unitary development plans include provision for a right of hearing at a public local inquiry for objectors to the plan.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to propose that, following the issue of a strategic planning guidance for a unitary development plan, an inspector at a subsequent public local inquiry will be empowered to make recommendations varying that guidance; and whether a district council will be empowered to make such variation irrespective of the inspector's recommendation.

Mr. Macfarlane: It is proposed that an inspector at any such public local inquiry would consider objections to the unitary development plan and make recommendations as appropriate for the modification of that plan. The powers of the local planning authority to consider the report of the inspector, to publish a statement of their decisions on each recommendations, with reasons, and to advertise proposed modifications would be the same as present powers in relation to local plans. As at present, inspectors and local planning authorities would have regard to any regional planning guidance and apply it as appropriate in the local circumstances.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional staff provision he has budgeted for in the planning inspectorate to handle the increased number of planning appeals expected by the minerals and waste disposal industries, following the transfer of their responsibilities to district councils in the event of the implementation of Cmnd. 9063.

Mr. Macfarlane: I do not expect that there will be any increase in planning appeals arising from abolition in connection with minerals and waste disposal that would necessitate any increase in the staff employed in the planning inspectorate.

Local Authorities (Famine Relief Donations)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will disregard for the purposes of penalties and rate-capping donations made by local authorities in aid of famine relief in Ethiopia and other similarly stricken countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walgrave: My right hon. Friend will consider any representations to this effect from local authorities.

Merseyside

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan county councils, he will take steps to ensure that Merseyside is provided with the same type of overall authority, with strategic powers over planning and land use, highways and traffic management, fire services, passenger transport and waste disposal, as the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We see no need for an overall authority in either Merseyside or Greater London.

Local Goverment Financing

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many external inquiries have been undertaken into local government financing since 1954.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 15 November at column 315.

Right-to-buy

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to bring mixed hereditaments, shops and related accommodation, currently in the ownership of local authorities, into the right-to-buy provisions.

Sir George Young: The Government have no proposals to extend the right-to-buy provisions to premises let for mixed commercial and residential use.

Nuclear Shelters

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government will provide sufficient nuclear shelters in all Government buildings under his control to accommodate the workers in them.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Performing Arts

Dr. John Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total grant aid to the support of the performing arts film activities in each of the two most recent years for which information is available.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Minister for the Arts.

Information on total grant aid from local authority sources is not available. Central Government grant-aid for the support of film as an art form was £9·4 million in 1982-83 and £8·2 million in 1983-84.

The figures comprise support by the British Film Institute, Arts Council of Great Britain and Scottish Films Council, excluding Arts Council support through regional arts associations.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total grant aid given to major performing arts bodies by the Greater London council and metropolitan counties in the two most recent years for which information is available.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Minister for the Arts.

According to information made available, planned expenditure on major performing arts bodies in 1983-84 was as follows:

	Budget Estimates (Capital and Revenue) £
Greater London council	9,593,000
Metropolitan county councils	3,326,000

Information for 1984-85 has not yet been forthcoming in sufficient detail.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Higher Education (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Murphy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether consideration will be given to the introduction of tax incentives to companies investing in establishments for higher education ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Moore: Tax relief is already available for payments for technical education directly connected with the donor's trade and through the deed of covenant system. I have no plans to introduce special tax incentives.

Own Resources

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate the European Commission has made about the growth in own resources over the next three years, on the assumption that the value added tax rate is increased to 1·4 per cent.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 October at c. 946. The Commission's detailed revenue and expenditure forecasts were published in June with their Preliminary Draft Buget for 1985. A copy of this has been placed in the Library of the House.

Scottish Banks (£1 Note)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Scottish banks will be able (a) to continue to produce their own £1 notes and (b) to make them available for circulation throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is a matter for the Scotish note issuing banks whether they continue to produce their own £1 notes. Note issuing powers of Scottish banks under the Bank Notes (Scotland) Act 1845 are confined to Scotland. Section 1 of the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 together with section 11 of the Bank Charter Act 1844 grant exclusive rights of note-issue in England and Wales to the Bank of England.

Film Industry

Mr. Arnold asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the tax treatment of the film industry.

Mr. Moore: No representations have been received recently about the tax treatment of the film industry.

Dentists (Taxation)

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the business expenses for dentists reorganised by the Inland Revenue as allowable against tax liability.

Mr. Moore: The basic rule on business expenses is that revenue expenditure incurred "wholly and exclusively" for the purposes of a trade profession or vocation is tax deductible. It would be impracticable to list all the expenses dentists could incur which might qualify.

(Customs Control)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether, in view of the extent of illegal importation of drugs, he will seek powers to subject yachts that enter the United Kingdom to compulsory customs control.

Mr. Hayhoe: Yachts are already subject to compulsory customs control on entering the United Kingdom under the Pleasure Craft (Arrival and Report) Regulations 1979, Statutory Instrument 1979 No 564, made under Section 35(4), 42(1) and 81(2) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

Merchant Seamen

Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates the loss of revenue to the Exchequer would be if 25 per cent. tax relief on earnings of those engaged in work overseas for more than 30 days was restored in respect of merchant seamen.

Mr. Moore: About £10 million in 1984-85 when the rate of relief has been halved to 12½ per cent and £20 million in 1985-86 and later years when the relief will have been fully withdrawn.

£1 Note

Mr. Oakes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he had before his decision to withdraw the £1 note.

Mr. Lawson: Prior to the introduction of the £1 coin the Royal Mint consulted some 80 organisations. These included bulk cash handlers such as Banks, Post Office, security companies, transport concerns, large and small retailers, and the service and vending industries.

Additionally, many Chambers of Commerce and local authorities were invited to give their views and, in recognition of the special problems of the disadvantaged, so were organisations representing the elderly, handicapped and blind.

During the last 12 months, whilst both note and coin have been in circulation, many of these organisations were consulted to assess the level of acceptance of the coin by the public.

Mr. Oakes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consult the Confederation of British Industry, the Trades Union Council, the English Tourist Board or the Federation of Old Age Pensioners as to the effects of his decision to withdraw the £1 note, with a view to reconsidering that decision before the note is withdrawn from circulation.

Mr. Lawson: No. I am satisfied that the public has grown accustomed to the coin and that an additional expenditure of at least £3 million per annum to keep the £1 banknote in circulation cannot be justified.

EEC (Budget Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Economic Community in 1986 in the light of the recent agreements on budget control and the increase in resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A projection of our net payments to Community institutions for 1985-86 was published in the Autumn Statement. Figures for later years will be published in the next Public Expenditure White Paper.

Government Trading Funds

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each central Government trading fund from the financial year of establishment (a) its historic cost financial results, (b) its current cost financial results, (c) its financial target and over or under achievement and (d) the level of financial performance in both historic and current cost, necessary to meet the statutory break-even requirements.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Block Grant Holdback

Dr. Cunningham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumption is made in table 1.9 of the autumn statement of 12 November about the level of local government block grant holdback to be incurred in 1985-86 by local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales; and what are the respective figures.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Alcoholic Drinks (Taxation)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he expects to receive the £4,000 million he estimated from taxes on alcoholic drinks in the current financial year.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no reason to suppose that the revenue from excise duty on alcoholic drinks will differ significantly from the published estimate.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax the Treasury has received in respect of alcoholic drinks to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will list separately in his answer the tax received from wines, spirits and beer; and from which taxes the revenue has been derived.

Mr. Hayhoe: For the period April to September 1984, the revenues from excise duties on alcoholic drink and the estimated revenue from value added tax, derived from consumers expenditure on alcoholic drink, were as follows:

	£ million
	Excise Duty	Value Added Tax
Wines (including made wines)	286	135
Spirits	351	185
Beer	945	480
Total Alcoholic Drinks (including cider and perry)	1,605	830

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the light of receipts to date from tax on alcoholic drinks, how much he now estimates will be received by the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Hayhoe: It would be contrary to normal practice to publish a revised Budget estimate during the course of the financial year. The estimate of £4,000 million from excise duties on alcoholic drinks therefore remains unaltered. No separate estimate is made of the revenue from value added tax for particular goods or services.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the population where the husband and wife are both working have a gross income in excess of £20,000 per year.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Authorities (Bank Interest)

Mr. John M. Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is now in a position to make a statement about the implications for local authorities of the composite rate scheme for bank interest which was introduced by the Finance Act 1984.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes. It has been our intention from the outset that local authorities would be included in the scheme but, as was indicated in the Inland Revenue Press Release of 13 March 1984, it was decided to defer the implementation date for local authorities to 6 April 1986 to allow time for further consideration of how the scheme would apply in detail in their particular circumstances.

With effect from 6 April 1986 all local authorities, other than parish and community councils, will be brought into the composite rate scheme.

The consultations between the Inland Revenue and local authority representative bodies which were foreshadowed in the Inland Revenue Press Release of 13 March have identified one particular area of potential difficulty: the impact of the scheme on existing local authority non-negotiable bonds and mortgages. Because of the terms under which these bonds and mortgages are issued, the transitional arrangement in Finance Act 1984 which excludes from the scheme certain fixed-term deposits made before 6 July 1984 cannot apply to them. It would be inappropriate for composite rate to apply where people had tied up their money in this type of investment before the scheme was announced or before its detailed implications had become widely understood. We therefore propose to bring forward legislation in next year's Finance Bill which will exclude from the scheme all local authority non-negotiable bonds and mortgages issued or renewed before 19 November 1984.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the real and nominal exchange rate of the pound sterling and the percentage change in the last quarter of 1976 and the third quarter of 1984 against the (a) US dollar, (b) Japanese yen, (c) deutschemark, (d) French franc, (e) Italian lira, (f) Austrian schilling and (g) Dutch guilder.

Mr. Fletcher: I have been asked to reply.

Data for the third quarter of 1984 are incomplete. The latest comparable information is in the table.

	Nominal exchange rates per £ sterling		Per cent. change	Real exchange rate 1980=100*		Per cent. change
	1976 (Oct.-Dec.)	1984		1976 (Oct.-Dec.)	1984

Hard Riding Hats

Mr. Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated value added tax yield on British Standard Institute approved standard of hard riding hats in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 374]: Traders are not required to make returns of the VAT charged on particular supplies of goods and services, and information of this kind is therefore not directly available. Nor is it possible in this case to provide an estimate, as the data on consumers' expenditure, on which such an estimate would be based, are not sufficiently detailed.

Book Seizures

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to which of the books seized from Gay's the Word bookshop and kept by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are obtainable in other bookshops and public libraries.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 373]: Such information based upon what is obtainable in bookshops and libraries throughout the country is not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the books seized from Gay's the Word bookshop and kept by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have been the subject of prosecutions under the Obscene Publications Act.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 373]: This information is not available. No comprehensive central records are kept of prosecutions under the Act by police forces throughout the country.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise were involved in the raids connected with Gay's the Word bookshop; and how many have been involved in reading the books.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 373]: Nine Customs officers were involved either in the so-called raid on Gay's the Word bookshop or in visits to premises connected with the bookshop. Up to 36 Customs officers have been involved from time to time in reading the books.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the books seized from the Gay's the Word bookshop; the numbers of copies of each book, together with the list of books returned; and the number of copies.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 374]: As it will take a little time to collate this information, I shall write to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

London (Heavy Lorries)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has authority to order a public inquiry into the Greater London council's proposed ban on heavy lorries.

Mr. Ridley: As I said to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) on 12 November, at column 404, I have made clear my view that for a major London-wide proposal of this magnitude a properly constituted public inquiry would provide a well established, democratic method of assessment.

I understand that the GLC transport committee will be meeting on 21 November to consider the massive response to consultation and the many hundreds of calls for a public inquiry.

If the GLC decides not to hold an inquiry, I have powers under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 to hold inquiries in connection with the exercise of my powers under the Act.

A1 (Hatfield)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from local residents regarding the road works associated with the upgrading of the A1 to motorway status at Hatfield; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Construction of this much-needed road scheme started last April. Good progress is being made and we are generally on target for completion in the spring of 1987. Inevitably, with a contract of this magnitude in an urban area, there have been a few representations from individuals affected by the roadworks, but not general body fo complaint. My Department is maintaining close links with local people to ensure that any problems are dealt with swiftly. Steps have also been taken to minimise disturbance from construction noise and to keep traffic flowing as smoothly and as safely as possible.

Greater London Council (Cycling Co-ordination Groups)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to replace the Greater London council's cycling co-ordination group after the proposed abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Chalker: Under our proposals, traffic management, including catering for the safe movement of cyclists, will become a statutory duty on the London boroughs. We are continuing our discussions with them over the way in which these duties will be discharged. Whether they will wish to take on any of the existing GLC staff will be up to them in the light of the resources they already possess.

Tourist Facilities (Signposting)

Mr. Spence asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the experiment in Kent and Nottinghamshire with regard to the signposting of local tourist facilities in rural areas will be completed and ready for implementation.

Mrs. Chalker: The tourist signposting experiment has already begun in Kent, with the first signs erected in east Kent in late summer this year. Further signs will be erected in the remainder of Kent in time for the next year's tourist season. Detailed proposals from Nottinghamshire are expected shortly and it is hoped that the first signs will be erected there next year. Public reaction to the signs will be monitored, and the results of this will have to be assessed before any conclusions can be reached. This is expected to be in 12 to 18 months' time. It will then be necessary to consult interested organisations before any tourist signs can be implemented on a national basis.

Mr. Spence asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals for the signposting of local tourist facilities in national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no specific proposals relating to national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, but traffic signs for tourist attractions generally are prescribed in the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1981. It is up to the local highway authority to decide, in conjuction with the appropriate tourist board, whether or not a particular tourist facility in any area should be signed. My Department has already issued advice on ways of reducing the environmental impact of directional traffic signs.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the revenue collected in the recent campaign in Hampshire to combat vehicle excise duty evasion; and what were the costs of mounting the campaign.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is too early to assess the results of the Hampshire campaign. To date, over 500 reports of apparently unlicensed vehicles have been received from the police, with more expected. It will be some months before action on all these, including prosecutions where appropriate, is completed. An assessment of the increase in voluntary relicensing as a result of the advance publicity will be available in the new year. I shall write to my hon. Friend when this information is to hand. The cost of the campaign is expected to be about £50,000 excluding police and court costs.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to seek a renegotiation of the US-UK air service agreement to allow American carriers rights of access to Manchester international airport; and if he is prepared to grant People's Express additional traffic rights on the basis of the service operating to Manchester.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Mr. Montgomery) on 31 October 1984, at column 1111.

Orange Badge

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of people currently in possession of an orange badge; and what this number was in March 1983.

Mrs. Chalker: Disabled persons' parking permits—orange badges—are issued by local authorities, and records are not maintained centrally on a continuing basis. At the time of a national census on 1 January 1983, there were 682,000 valid badges in Great Britain. I regret that up to date information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. If my hon. Friend is concerned about the numbers of badges in a particular area, may I suggest that he approach the local authority concerned.

A31 (Dorset)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest position apropos the commencement date of construction of the Ferndown bypass A31 trunk road scheme in Dorset.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Following the receipt of tenders, a contract for the construction of Ferndown bypass has been awarded, and we expect work to start early in the new year.

Dartford Relief Road

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the Dartford northern relief road; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Roads in the Dartford area other than the A2 and the M25 are not my responsibility, but that of Kent county council. Although my Department has contacted the council, it cannot identify a scheme of this name. It may be that the Dartford northern bypass is the scheme to which my hon. Friend refers. I am sure the county council would be pleased to provide the necessary details.

Blood Alcohol Levels

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy regarding the marketing of products designed to reduce blood alcohol levels in the context of matters for which he is responsible; and what assessment he has made of the effect of such products on road safety.

Mrs. Chalker: The rate at which alcohol is absorbed into the bloodstream is affected by a variety of factors. Whilst some products can slow down this process, I am not aware of any evidence which suggests that the elimination of alcohol from the body can be significantly speeded up. My general policy is to warn drivers of the risks involved in driving after drinking under any circumstances.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will mount an advertising campaign to warn motorists of the hazards of drinking and then driving after consuming products claimed to induce a drop in blood alcohol levels.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall shortly be launching our Christmas drink-drive publicity campaign warning drivers of the risks involved in driving after drinking under any circumstances.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations he intends to take into account in the United Kingdom's submission to the review of European Economic Community regulations on heavy goods vehicles drivers' hours of work.

Mrs. Chalker: I welcome the Commission's proposal to amend the regulation, while reserving my position on some of the details. I want to see greater clarity and flexibility in the regulation to meet the needs of the road freight and passenger transport industries, without lessening road safety.

Bypasses

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the route and commencement date of the Berkhamsted, Bourne End and Hemel Hempstead bypass.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is yet able to announce his decision on the proposed bypasses at Berkhamsted and King's Langley.

Mrs. Chalker: The decision letter is being issued today. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are satisfied that a clear case exists to create a better route in the A41 corridor between the M25 and the Tring bypass and to relieve the communities along the existing road. They have accepted in principle the routes put forward by the Department at the public inquiries last year for both the bypasses and the road connecting the Two Waters area of Hemel Hempstead to the King's Langley bypass. However, before they reach a formal decision they will consult interested parties about a proposal for a small northward movement at Bourne End of the route of the King's Langley bypass to minimise its effect on Boxmoor Trust land, about which the inspector expressed concern. Once the alignment at Bourne End has been fixed, the next step will be the publication of draft side roads and compulsory purchase orders and a further public local inquiry may be necessary. Work will begin as soon as the detailed design and statutory procedures have been completed.

M25 Motorway

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the delays occurring in the completion of the remaining sections of the M25 motorway; and who will carry the financial responsibility for these delays.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall answer this question shortly.

Roads and Traffic (London)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached in the light of responses to his July consultation document about road and traffic responsibilities in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Boroughs generally have welcomed my proposals which will transfer to them the main responsibility for London's roads and traffic, while ensuring consistent policy in terms of traffic movement throughout London as a whole. The consultation process has confirmed the details of the proposed key network of roads to become the responsibility of my Department. It has also confirmed with one or two minor additions the wider strategic network of borough roads where traffic management measures will be considered on a wider basis than the individual boroughs concerned.

Useful progress has been made in discussions with boroughs about the various executive functions identified in the consultation document. The objective of the arrangement is to ensure that there is adequate data provision for boroughs to carry out their functions, that the urban traffic control system will be maintained and developed, and that a coherent approach is maintained to road safety. The discussions to work out the practical details for a smooth transition to the new arrangements will continue. Copies of a map have been placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time women aged 16 to 25 years, 26 to 40 years, 41 to 55 years and over 55 years respectively, remain on the unemployment registers at the Barking and Dagenham unemployment benefit offices.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table gives the median length of unemployment spells, both completed and uncompleted, for claimants in the Barking and Dagenham jobcentre areas for the closest age groups available.

The length of unemployment spells for women are affected by their entitlement to benefit. Many women cease to claim after a year if they are not eligible for supplementary allowance.

Median length of unemployment spell (weeks) Females: Barking and Dagenham Jobcentre areas

Age Group	Completed spells of women ceasing to be unemployed between October 1983 and 1984*	Uncompleted spells at 11 October 1984
25-39	19	29
40-54	13	49
55 and over	*(22)	85
All	13	28

* Medians for completed spells relate to computerised records only. This is however only likely to affect the figures significantly for the oldest age group.

Note: The median length of unemployment spell is the length of time spent unemployed exceeded by 50 per cent. of the unemployed.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the percentage of unemployment in the city of Birmingham on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date;

(2) if he will list the level of unemployment in the city of Stoke on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the level of unemployment in the city of Sheffield on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date;

(4) if he will list the percentage unemployed in the city of Leeds on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date;

(5) if he will list the level of unemployment in the city of Newcastle on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date; and if he will make a statement;

(6) if he will list in the Official Report the percentage level of unemployment in the city of Stoke on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date;

(7) if he will list the level of unemployment in the city of Leeds on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date;

(8) if he will list the level of unemployment in the city of Birmingham on (a) a constituency basis and (b) a ward basis at the latest date.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 14 November at columns 262-63.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how he calculates the current employment figures for each travel-to-work area;

(2) on what basis he calculates the numbers in employment in the Dunfermline travel-to-work area; and whether he has taken into account the rundown in employment at the Mossmorran construction site;

(3) if he will conduct a survey to test the accuracy of his figures for employment numbers in the Dunfermline travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The numbers of employees in employment in September 1981 in each travel-to-work area are obtained from the census of employment. Estimates of the numbers in June 1983, for use in the calculation of travel-to-work area unemployment rates, have been obtained by adjusting the census figures to take account of regional trends between 1981 and 1983. As the data necessary to take account of detailed changes in the geographic pattern of employment, such as can result for example from the opening of a new establishment or the rundown of a particular construction site, are not available the estimates for June 1983 are considerably influenced by the employment patterns within each region as they were observed in 1981.

The estimates are, however, as up to date as possible and are consistent with the regional and national employment estimates. The 1984 census of employment, which is currently being conducted, will provide revised statistics of the number of employees employed in each travel-to-work area.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list his latest estimate for the numbers of the employed population resident in the Dunfermlipe, East constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available estimates come from the 1981 census of population. These were published on 19 May 1983 in the Parliamentary Constituency Monitor of census results for Scotland. A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list his latest estimate for the numbers who are working within the area of the Dunfermline, East constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available estimates come from the census of employment for September 1981, which recorded 23,522 employees in employment whose place of work was in the present Dunfermline, East constituency.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of (a) the employed population and (b) the unemployed population is in travel-to-work areas where the rate of unemployment in October was (i) above 24 per cent., (ii) above 20 per cent., (iii) above 17 per cent. and (iv) above 15 per cent;

(2) what proportion of (a) the employed population and (b) the unemployed population was in the old travel-to-work areas where the rate of unemployment in August was (a) above 24 per cent., (b) above 20 per cent., (c) above 17 per cent. and (d) above 15 per cent.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) which firms in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area have shed a significant number of jobs since May 1979;

(2) which have been the main industries suffering redundancies in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area since May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The main industries affected by redundancies in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area for May 1979 until September 1989 are the textile, mechanical engineering and vehicles industries. In that period 219 firms confirmed 10 or more redundancies as due to occur, but the names cannot be disclosed as they were provided to the Department in confidence.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average wage level in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area; and how this compares with the national average.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information on average earnings in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area is not available. Details on the average weekly earnings of full-time adult employees in the West Yorkshire metropolitan county, including Huddersfield, and in Great Britain are published in tables 12 and 13 of New Earnings Survey 1984, part A, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the level of long-term unemployment for the Huddersfield travel-to-work area in 1979; and what is the corresponding figure now;

(2) what was the level of unemployment of those under 25 years, in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area for 1979; and what is the corresponding figure now.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested for the old Huddersfield travel-to-work area is available in the House of Commons Library. However, the figures for 1984 are not directly comparable with those for 1979, mainly because of the change from the registrant-based to claimant-based unemployment count in October 1982.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the record of strikes in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area since May 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how the present level of unemployment in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area compares in absolute and percentage terms, with the highest post-war unemployment level.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 11 October 1984 the total number of unemployed claimants in the new Huddersfield travel-to-work area was 11,367 or in percentage terms 13·5 per cent. Comparable figures since the second world war are not available. However, examination of claimant figures back to October 1982 and registrants up to October 1982 for the old Huddersfield travel-to-work area indicate that the previous highest level since the war is most likely to have occurred in September 1982 when there were 14,166 registered unemployed or in percentage terms 13·5 per cent.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the amount of levy paid to the Construction Industry training board by companies with an annual payroll of (a) £1 million to £10 million, (b) £11 million to £50 million, (c) £51 million to £100 million, (d) £101 million to £200 million, and (e) over £200 million; and what was the average training grant received back as a percentage of all levy by each payroll group.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have asked the Construction Industry training board to provide the information in the form requested, and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible. I shall also place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will implement the proposals recommended by the Construction Industry training board working party for a levy system based on payroll rather than per capita; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1984 is drafted in line with the recommendations of the Construction Industry training board working party and based on a payroll basis rather than a per capita basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend is required by the Industrial Training Act 1982 to consider levy proposals put forward by the Construction Industry training board and subsequently approved by the Manpower Services Commission, and, if he is satisfied that the proposals are necessary to encourage adequate training in the industry, to approve the making of a levy order. The proposals received in this manner for the current year include provision for a per-capita based occupational levy.

The proposals for an alternative form of levy put forward by the Construction Industry training board's working party have not subsequently been accepted as board policy. My right hon. Friend and I have consistently stressed that it is for the board itself to agree on these matters.

Construction Industry (Apprenticeships)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to seek to encourage apprentices in the construction industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government clearly spelt out in the White Paper "Training for Jobs" (Cmnd. 9135) the need to modernise traditional training practices, including apprenticeships, in order to increase the supply of skills trainees. The Government continue to provide financial support for approved first year apprentice training through the youth training scheme. I am pleased to report that in 1983-84 the Construction Industry training board managed a scheme which provided around 18,000 places for craft and technician trainees, and some 90 per cent. of those who completed the course are now entering a second year of skills training.

Earnings

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information showing the 50 geographical areas in Great Britain with the lowest levels of (a) lowest decile earnings and (b) median earnings on (i) a constituency basis or as close as possible thereto and (ii) the regional and sub-regional basis used in the "New Earnings Survey" in April, broken down between (1) men aged 18 years or over, (2) women aged 18 years of over and (3) workers aged under 18 years, and show the relevent earnings levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details on the lowest decile and the median of weekly earnings and of hourly earnings for full-time adult men and adult women in the standard regions of Great Britain in April 1983 are published in New Earnings Survey 1983, part E, table 116. Further details on the lowest decile of weekly earnings for counties and London boroughs are published in tables 108 and 113 of the same volume. Later details on the lowest decile of weekly earnings for regions and sub-regions in April 1984 are published in New Earnings Survey 1984, part A, tables 12 and 13. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Details of the distribution of earnings at parliamentary constituency level are not available.

Job Promotion

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that the job promotion initiatives fostered by the metropolitan counties from local and European Economic Community resources will continue; and what mechanism will be available should the West Yorkshire county council be abolished to ensure that these initiatives continue in the Yorkshire coalfield and textile areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Successor authorities which mount eligible schemes will be able to apply for support from the European social fund. This Department will continue to give full support to eligible applications.

Jobcentres, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what his latest plans are for jobcentre provision in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The employment manager for the north west region of the Manpower Services Commission has prepared revised proposals for the development of the jobcentre network in his region, following widespread consultation with interested parties. Copies of these proposals, including details for Liverpool, have been sent to the hon. Member.

The Manpower Services Commission will be considering the proposals for the development of the jobcentre network nationally at its next meeting on 22 November.

Clothing Labels (Denton)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment why people working at the Denton skillcentre and employment rehabilitation centre are engaged in removing labels, saying "Made in Taiwan", from clothing.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Blood Alcohol Levels

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy regarding the marketing of products designed to reduce blood alcohol levels in the context of his responsibilities for health and safety at work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am aware of the detrimental effects of excessive drinking at work. The Health and Safety Executive cooperated in the publication in 1981 of a guidance booklet on steps which could be taken jointly by managements and trade unions to assist the problem drinker at work. The guidance aims to reduce or eliminate problem drinking. It makes no recommendations about the use of products designed to mitigate the effects of alcohol already consumed.

THE ARTS

Great Western Railway (Anniversary)

33. Mr. Adley asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts, how he intends to participate in the 1985 celebration of the 150th anniversary of the Great Western railway.

Mr. Waldegrave: I do indeed intend to particpate in next year's celebrations and I look forward to meeting my hon. Friend at many of the events planned. I am particularly keen to hear the Pittsburg symphony orchestra in Brunel's great train shed in August. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate both Harveys of Bristol and London Life for supporting these celebrations so generously.

Museum Charges

34. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he has any plans to recommend the introduction of museum charges.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker).

National Heritage (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts, whether he will give the names of all the institutions which will be listed in schedule 1 to the National Gallery and Tate Gallery Act 1954 if the provisions relating to that schedule which appear in the National Heritage (Scotland) Bill are enacted.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following institutions will be listed in schedule 1 to the National Gallery and Tate Gallery Act 1954 if the provisions relating to that schedule which appear in the National Heritage (Scotland) Bill are enacted:

The Armouries
The British Library
The British Museum
The British Museum (Natural History)
The Imperial War Museum
The National Galleries of Scotland
The National Library of Scotland
The National Library of Wales
The National Maritime Museum
The National Museum of Wales
The National Museums of Scotland
The National Portrait Gallery
The Science Museum
The Ulster Museum
The Victoria and Albert Museum

The Ulster Museum was added to the original list of institutions in schedule 1 to the 1954 Act by statutory instrument in 1962.

Section 7(2) of the Museum of London Act 1965 removed the London Museum from the list, and specified that sections 3(1) and 5 of the 1954 Act should be construed as if any reference in them to an institution listed in schedule 1 to that Act included a reference to the board of governors of the Museum of London.

The National Heritage Act 1983 added the Armouries, the British Library and the British Museum (Natural History) to the list.

If the provisions relating to schedule 1 to the 1954 Act which appear in part I of schedule 2 to the National Heritage (Scotland) Bill are enacted, "The National Museums of Scotland" shall be substituted for "The National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland" and "The Royal Scottish Museum" shall be deleted.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the balance of manufactured trade with the rest of the world in 1976 and 1983;

(2) if he will give the deficit in manufactured trade with the EEC in 1976 and 1983 and his estimate for 1984.

Mr. Fletcher: The information for 1976 and 1983 is in the table. In the first nine months of 1984, the deficit on trade in manufactures with the European Community was £6·1 billion on the balance of payments basis.

*United Kingdom balance of trade in manufactures
Balance of payments basis: £ million

	World	†European Community
1976	+4,917	−668
1983	−2,437	−7,129

* Standard International Trade Classification, sections 5 to 8.

NRDC (Investment Policy)

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines he has given to the National Research Development Corporation regarding investment policy.

Mr. Butcher: The Government have approved the corporate plan submitted earlier this year by the British Technology Group, of which the National Research Development Corporation is a part. Approval was given on the basis that the BTG would make equity investments only in those exceptional cases where this was the most appropriate means of translating research ideas into commercial products.

British Shipbuilders (Redundancy Scheme)

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about

British Shipbuilders' own redundancy scheme and the position regarding the eligibility for a payment under the scheme of those employees who are transferred to the private sector, following the implementation of the Government's announcement of the sale of the warship yards.

Mr. Butcher: The shipbuilding redundancy payments scheme is governed by the Shipbuilding (Redundancy Payments) Act 1978 which within Great Britain restricts payments to employees of British Shipbuilders and its wholly owned subsidiaries. Accordingly those employees who work for the warshipbuilding yards to be privatised will not be eligible for scheme benefits if they are made redundant after privatisation.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to (a) retain British Shipbuilders' own redundancy scheme for the state-owned part of the industry and (b) extend the scheme so that it covers former British Shipbuilders' employees whose yards have been transferred to the private sector, in the event of them then being made redundant.

Mr. Butcher: The shipbuilding redundancy payments scheme will expire on 30 June 1985 under existing legislation. I am presently considering the prolongation of the scheme beyond that date.

I do not intend to extend the scheme to cover employees of those yards transferred to the private sector.

BS (Training, Education and Safety)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has been consulted by British Shipbuilders about its holding the controlling shares in British Shipbuilders (Training, Education and Safety).

Mr. Butcher: At present there has been no formal consultation about this shareholding but British Shipbuilders is keeping me informed about its plans for the future of British Shipbuilders (Training, Education and Safety) as they develop.

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to arrange a meeting between his Department, British Shipbuilders and the Charity Commissioners to discuss the holding by British Shipbuilders of the controlling shares in British Shipbuilders (Training, Education and Safety).

Mr. Butcher: British Shipbuilders is already in touch with the Charity Commissioners about British Shipbuilders (Training, Education and Safety) and is keeping me informed about their plans for the future of the company.

Origin Labelling

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action he intends to take to ensure that country of origin labelling regulations are fully observed;

(2) if he has any plans to strengthen country of origin regulations.

Mr. Fletcher: Enforcement of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 and the Trade Descriptions (Origin Marking) (Miscellaneous Goods) Order 1981 is a matter for local authority trading standards departments. I have no plans to revise our origin marking requirements pending the European Court's ruling on the 1981 order in the case now before it.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Batise asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether intellectual property rights arising from projects under the Alvey programme and vesting in the non-academic participants can be exploited independently by each such participant.

Mr. Pattie: The ownership of intellectual property rights resulting from an Alvey project and any entitlement to licences to exploit them will be set out in the detailed collaboration agreement between the participants.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the factors other than curerent unemployment rates that he will take into account when designating the new assisted areas.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the White Paper "Regional Industrial Development" (Cmnd 9111) we invited views on the criteria for designating assisted areas. These have been taken into account in our review of the assisted areas map, which I intend to announce to the House shortly.

Mr.O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the revised policy of regional assistance and the new assisted area map will be published.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I hope to make a statement to the House on our regional industrial policy changes in the near future.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the effect on unemployment in (a) the Wakefield and (b) the West Yorkshire areas of the Government's revised regional assistance policy and the new assisted area map.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is any difference between the method of compiling the figures for United Kingdom trade given in the Eurostat Monthly External Trade Bulletin and those given in the Overseas Trade Statistics.

Mr. Fletcher: All statistics of United Kingdom trade are compiled from declarations made to HM Customs and Excise by importers and exporters, or their agents.

Figures included in the Overseas Trade Statistics refer to goods which have crossed the United Kingdom geographical frontier, and are on a "country whence consigned" basis.

Figures in the Eurostat Monthly External Trade Bulletin refer to goods which have entered into free circulation and/or home use, and are on a "country of origin" basis.

Bankruptcies (Huddersfield)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms have gone bankrupt in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area since May 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: I regret that figures are not available for the exact period requested nor for the Huddersfield travel-to-work area. The nearest available is the number of bankruptcy cases handled by the Huddersfield county court, which totalled 75 in the 5 years 1979-83 plus a provisional figure of 18 in January/September 1984. Bankruptcy figures apply to all individuals and partnerships but, for England and Wales as a whole, between 75 and 80 per cent. relate to unincorporated businesses. Insolvent companies are subject to liquidation rather than bankruptcy proceedings and I regret that company liquidation figures are available only as totals for England and Wales.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute Mr. Arthur Scargill and other members of the National Union of Mineworkers Executive for the offence of sedition.

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General is always ready to consider with a view to prosecution, in the light of his published guidelines, any particulars of alleged criminal conduct referred to him for that purpose.

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Mr. David Young asked the Prime Minister which airline she proposes to name as the United Kingdom national carrier to the Falkland Islands; what factors she took into account in reaching her decision; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The new airport in the Falkland Islands is not yet in operation. I understand that Virgin Atlantic Airways submitted an application to the Civil Aviation Authority for a licence to operate services, but has not followed it up. No other airline has expressed interest in providing a scheduled service, but British Airways is negotiating with the Ministry of Defence a contract to carry service personnel between this country and the Falklands.

Chief Press Officer

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Prime Minister if she will list the duties of her chief press officer, Mr. Bernard Ingham, his grading in the Civil Service and the extent of his responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: My chief press secretary is responsible for explaining the Government's policies, measures and attitudes to current issues. His duties include briefing press, radio and television and co-ordinating at official level the presentation of Government policy and measures. His grade is under-secretary.

Public Bodies

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister whether it remains her policy to keep the numbers and spending of non-departmental public bodies under tight control; and whether she will ensure that the drive for increased efficiency and effectiveness in the Civil Service is followed through by similar action in public bodies.

The Prime Minister: Yes. We shall continue to keep all non-departmental public bodies under regular scrutiny to ensure that they and their programmes give value for money. We shall resist pressures for new bodies unless we are convinced that a non-departmental body is the most appropriate way to do a particular task. Substantial savings have already been made. Since 1979 we have wound up or substantially reduced the expenditure of nearly 700 such bodies, saving some £118 million a year. But there is more to be done. A recent report by the Cabinet Office/Treasury financial management unit, copies of which are being placed in the Library, shows that some bodies need better systems for defining their objectives, setting targets and assessing achievements.

Over the next two years, therefore, Departments will be looking, in collaboration with the management of their sponsored bodies, at the scope for improving management and control systems and practices, with the aim of producing progressive improvements in performance. The main programme of work should be completed by April 1987.

Emergency Powers

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister how many proclamations have occurred under the Emergency Powers Act 1920 and the Emergency Powers Act 1964 since 1954; and if she will give details of each occasion.

The Prime Minister: Seven. The details are:

Date of proclamation	Date state of emergency ended	Nature of dispute
31 May 1955	21 June 1955	Rail strike
23 May 1966	5 July 1966	Seamen's strike
16 July 1970	4 August 1970	Dock strike
12 December 1970	17 December 1970	Electricity workers' strike
9 February 1972	8 March 1972	Coal miners' strike
3 August 1972	2 September 1972	Dock strike
13 November 1973	11 March 1974	Coal miners' and electricity power workers' disputes

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister on how many occasions and in what industries, troops have intervened in disputes since 1954; and if she will give details.

The Prime Minister: Information relating to the involvement of Service personnel in industrial disputes since 1977-78 is contained in table 7.3 of volume 2 of the statements on the defence estimates from 1980 to 1984.

Comprehensive information on involement in disputes prior to 1977 is not immediately available and cannot be produced without considerable and disproportionate cost and effort. Records show, however, that Service personnel were involved in the following disputes at least:—

1960	Seamen's strike
1966	Seamen's strike
1970	London dustmen
1972	Docks
1973	Glasgow firemen
1975	Glasgow dustmen

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider revising the financial base on which the Open University operates, in particular the capital base for its professional and industrial updating programme.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend will be receiving advice from the Open University visiting committee on all aspects of the University's activities, including its PICKUP programme, later in the year. Any recommendations on this front, as on others, will be carefully considered.

Student Travel Awards

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make arrangements to monitor the effects of recent changes made to student travel awards on the pattern of application to institutions of higher education;

(2) if he will make arrangements to monitor the effects of the recent changes made to student travel awards on the housing situation in towns and cities with institutions of higher education.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Student Grants

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, following the reduction of the allocation of funds for student grants, he will now reconsider introducing loans to students in higher education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce a partial student loan system to protect those students whose parents are unable to meet their new levels of contribution.

Mr. Brooke: No. The Government's policy remains that announced by my right hon. Friend on 10 May 1983 when he said that we have no intention at present of replacing any part of the student grant by a loan; but that we remain interested in finding means of widening access to higher education without excessive cost to the taxpayer, and in this context will continue to keep the whole system of student support under review.

Parental Contributions

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of residual income will be deemed for parental contribution for each £1,000 slice between £10,000 and £30,000 for parents with none, one, two or three other dependent children; and what proportion of after-tax income that will amount to for parents at each tax level possible within each slice.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his question of 16 November 1984 at column 376.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on how couples with more than one child in higher education will be affected by his proposals on parental contributions.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on Wednesday 14 November at columns 238-39.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether divorced couples are assessed on the basis of joint incomes in calculating parental contributions for student awards.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had concerning the payment of parental contributions on student grants; and if he will make a statement on the effect of his new proposals for student awards.

Mr. Brooke: In the last year, the Department has received around 700 representations direct from members of the public and through right hon. and hon. Members concerning the payment of parental contributions. Our proposals for student awards in 1985-86 were set out in an answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 14 November at columns 238-39. Those proposals will protect the position of families earning around average incomes or less, but will require increased contributions in real terms from those earning higher incomes.

Education Vouchers

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has plans to issue vouchers for the purpose of allowing school leavers to purchase various types of education and training; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have no plans to introduce a voucher system for students in further or higher education.

School Leaving Age

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to abolish the compulsory school leaving age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Boarding School Allowance Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received concerning the financial implications for parents in Her Majesty's forces of a child educated under the boarding school allowance scheme changing schools at a point other than that of the completion of a stage of education; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Any such representations received in this Department would be transferred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence who deals with these matters.

St. George's School, Finborough

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools last visited St. George's school, Great Finborough, Stowmarket; what were their findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This school was the subject of a full inspection by Her Majesty's inspectors in November 1982. Their report, which was published on 8 March 1983, found overall standards of provision to be reasonably satisfactory. A further visit by Her Majesty's Inspectors in June 1984 confirmed their general impression.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations have been received by his Department in respect of St. George's school, Great Finborough, Suffolk, in the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: 45 from various sources, though no complaints from parents of pupils.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Secure Psychiatric Units

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a full statement on progress made so far by (a) North East Thames regional health authority and (b) South East Thames regional health authority in establishing regional secure psychiatric units; what are their future plans; what agreement they have made for the one to use the facilities of the other; and whether he has approved this agreement.

Mr. John Patten: As regards the North East Thames region, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 22 October, at column 519. In the South East Thames region progress on a 30-bed central unit at the Bethlem royal hospital and four 15-bed units at Cane hill, Bexley, Oakwood and Hellingly hospitals is well advanced. These permanent units are scheduled to open at different times during the next 12 months. The first patients are due to be admitted to the Cane hill unit later this month and to the Bethlem unit in February 1985.

Negotiations are currently taking place between the authorities concerned about the possibility of some of the places at the Bethlem unit being made available to North East Thames regional health authority. Health authorities do not require any approval to make places in secure units available to other health authorities. The terms of such arrangements between authorities are a matter for the authorities concerned.

Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services with which hospitals and other institutions the Mersey regional health authority has contractual arrangements for the care and treatment of (a) mentally ill and (b) mentally handicapped patients; and what is the annual cost.

Mr. John Patten: During 1983, the latest year for which information is available centrally, Mersey regional health authority had contractual arrangements with the following two institutions outside the National Health Service for the care and treatment of mentally handicapped patients:

Brothers of Charity, Thingwall Hall, Residential Training Centre, Broadgreen, Liverpool

St. Joseph's Children's Hospital, Freshfield, Formby, Liverpool.

No mentally ill patients were treated under contractual arrangements in Mersey regional health authority during 1983. We do not collect centrally information on the annual cost to the NHS of these services.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) mentally ill and (b) mentally handicapped patients from the Oxford regional health authority area are currently in private psychiatric institutions under contractual arrangement with the regional health authority; and what is the annual cost of such arrangements.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 December 1983, the latest date for which provisional information is available centrally, there were 31 beds occupied by patients in the specialty of mental illness and two beds occupied by patients in the specialty of mental handicap under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service in Oxford regional health authority. We do not collect centrally information on the annual cost to the NHS of these arrangements.

Special Hospitals (Transfers)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) men and (b) women were awaiting transfer from each of the special hospitals in June of each year since 1974.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Broadmoor hospital		Rampton hospital		Moss Side hospital		Park Lane hospital		Total
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
1974	22	4	55	9	9	10	—	—	86	23
1975	24	5	61	12	16	13	3	—	104	30
1976	26	—	94	26	17	8	4	—	141	34
1977	24	3	112	28	21	5	6	—	163	36
1978	25	3	105	32	22	7	5	—	157	42
1979	24	2	96	39	22	6	7	—	149	47
1980	20	4	94	39	38	6	6	—	158	49
1981	20	6	100	35	30	9	5	—	155	50
1982	16	3	78	32	28	7	7	—	129	42
1983	27	6	84	30	42	12	17	—	170	48
1984	40	6	87	34	41	9	26	—	194	49

Notes:

(i) All figures given as at 30 June each year.

(ii) There are no female patients in Park Lane hospital.

(iii) Of the patients awaiting transfer as at June 1984, 26 were on leave of absence in NHS hospitals with a view to possible transfer.

Health Care and Social Security

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amount of social protection (health care and social security) expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product in the following countries for 1981, 1982 and 1983: the Netherlands, West Germany, Denmark, Belgium, Luxembourg, France, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Whitney: Definitions of health care and social security differ from one country to another. However, using the definition of "social protection" described in the "European system of integrated social protection statistics: Methodology—Part I" (Eurostat, 1981), which includes employers' sick pay and private pension schemes, social protection expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product in 1981 was as follows:

	per cent.
Netherlands	31·7
West Germany	29·4
Denmark	30·7
Belgium	29·4
Luxembourg	28·8
France	27·4
Italy	25·3
United Kingdom	23·4

Information for 1982 and 1983 is not yet available.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many jobs have been lost in his Department since May 1979.

Mr. Fowler: On 1 May 1979 the number of staff in DHSS was 98,021½. On 1 July 1984 this number had fallen to 90,065½, a reduction of 7,956.

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost to an average family of looking after a mentally handicapped person from the age of two years to 40 years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on which to base or verify such an estimate is not collected centrally. An estimate of £119,880 has been made in a recent study* published by the Disablement Income Group. This was based on a very small sample, not claimed by it to be representative, which included a wide range of severity of handicap and of dependency.

*"Mental Handicap Costs More" by Judith Buckle, published by the Disablement Income Group, 1984; Price £3·50.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department has on the incidence of cervical cancer in the past three years.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available figures for England and Wales for newly diagnosed cases of cervical cancer are as follows:

	Malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri, excluding in situ	Carcinoma in situ of cervix uteri
1979	3,898	4,321
1980	3,980	4,715
1981	4,024	5,568

The considerable rise in new registrations of carcinoma in situ may reflect increasing ascertainment resulting from an increase in screening.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving such information as he has about the trend in the incidence of cervical cancer in other countries.

Mr. John Patten: International statistics relating to trends in the incidence of cervical cancer are not collated in any concise form. Some data are published in "Cancer Incidence in Five Continents" which can be obtained, on request, by the Library.

Single-parent Families

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of single-parent families in the United Kingdom in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, showing in each case the total numbers of persons who belong to single-parent families.

Mr. John Patten: Information is available only in respect of Great Britain.

Taking account of results from the 1981 census and information from the general household survey, the best estimates at present available of numbers of one-parent families with dependent children are as follows:

	Number
1979	840,000
1980	870,000
1982	930,000

The number of persons belonging to a one-parent family is estimated to have remained at around 2·4 million over the period, as a result of a slight decline in the average number of persons per family. Estimates for later years are not yet available.

Further work relating to one-parent families is being carried out and will be published in the near future.

Housing Benefit Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the full year cost to the housing benefit scheme if (a) November 1983 and (b) April 1984 tapers and minima were to apply from November 1984; and how many people would be affected in each case.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the report of the National Audit Office on the housing benefits scheme.

Mr. Fowler: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the terms of reference for the Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education; and to whom it will report.

Mr. John Patten: The Joint Advisory Committee on Nutrition Education has been set up by the British Nutrition Foundation (BNF) and the Health Education Council (HEC) and it reports to those bodies. I understand that its terms of reference are:

1. To advise the Councils of the British Nutrition Foundation and the Health Education Council on all matters relating to nutrition education;
2. To consider proposals on nutrition education referred to it by the BNF or the HEC, and to report back to their Councils;
3. Specifically, the Committee will:
   (a) make recommendations to the Councils of the BNF and the HEC for the translation of appropriate scientific papers, surveys and reports on nutrition into educational material for use by suitable bodies;
   (b) consider and advise on how nutrition education for the public, the educators (including paramedical professionals) and the agricultural, food and allied industries could be furthered and improved.

Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the estimated costs for the latest available year for (a) hospital inpatient care, (b) hospital outpatient care, (c) general practitioner consultations and (d) general practitioner drug prescriptions, resulting from coronary heart disease.

Mr. John Patten: The best estimate of the annual cost of hospital inpatient care in England resulting from coronary heart disease is £145 million in 1983-84 prices. This figure is derived from 1982 data; it rests on the assumption that the costs in any particular type of hospital do not vary with the type of patient, and it must therefore be regarded as approximate.

The latest available complete analysis of outpatient care and general practitioner consultations relates to the year 1971-72; it does not therefore yield a figure which we could with confidence assume to be true in 1984.

The cost of general practitioner drug prescriptions resulting from coronary heart disease is not available centrally.

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish a sub-committee of COMA to review the effect of sugars such as sucrose, glucose, maltose, fructose and caramel, on health and to make recommendations on desirable levels of intake for the whole United Kingdom population.

Mr. John Patten: The Chief Medical Officer's committee on the medical aspects of food policy (COMA) is an independent body established to give disinterested scientific advice on nutritional matters to the Secretary of State. My right hon. Friend does not have it in mind to request the committee to consider the question of sugar intake.

Dental Care

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to encourage preventive dental care.

Mr. John Patten: Special grants were made available in 1983-84 to regional health authorities to stimulate local dental health education programmes and surveys and the Health Education Council is to launch a national dental health campaign in 1985. A new school of dental hygiene has been created at Sheffield and additional hygenist training places have been funded at King's college, London. An experimental capitation remuneration scheme for the dental treatment of children has been initiated which it is hoped will develop continuity of care and the promotion of prevention for the individual patients.

Miss Doris E. Welch

Mr. Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when a decision will be made on the redundancy and pension arrangements awarded to Miss Doris E. Welch, formerly a telephonist at the East Hertfordshire hospital who has taken voluntary early retirement.

Mr. John Patten: A decision has just been made, and I shall write to my hon. Friend about this as soon as possible.

Housing Benefit Review

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the conclusions of the housing benefit review to be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) on 15 November, at column 361.

Benefits (Scotland)

7. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for Scotland for each of the years 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84 (a) the amount paid out in social security benefits, broken down by benefit type and (b) the percentage of the Scottish population in receipt of each type of benefit; and if he will estimate the value of unclaimed supplementary benefit in Scotland in 1983.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the form requested. However, some indications of social security expenditure in Scotland, together with population, unemployment and sickness statistics, are given in "Regional Trends", published annually by HMSO. Certain other information about numbers of beneficiaries in Scotland is given in "Social Security Statistics", also published annually by HMSO.

Information about supplementary benefit take-up for 1983 is not yet available. However, it is estimated that in 1981 the annual amount of unclaimed supplementary benefit in Scotland was about £50 million.

Private Patients (St. Thomas's Hospital)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in the event of limited demand from private patients for treatment with the lithotripter at St. Thomas's hospital, there will be any contractual restrictions on the use of the machine by National Health Service patients; and whether his Department has undertaken to meet any extra costs incurred in treating National Health Service patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The contract between the British United Provident Association and West Lambeth health authority provides that lithotripsy facilities not taken up by private patients shall be made available to NHS patients. No specific arrangement has been made for additional funds to be made available to the authority by our Department in the event of such a situation arising. It would be for the authority to make a request for additional funds.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether inpatient charges for patients using the lithotripter at St. Thomas's hospital will be payable by the British United Provident Association or by the patients themselves;

(2) whether private patients using the lithotripter at St. Thomas's hospital will face any charges to the British United Provident Association.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British United Provident Association will pay West Lambeth health authority the full cost of the lithotripsy service provided by the authority for private patients, both inpatients and day-patients. The association will be able to charge private patients or their sponsors to recover its costs. The level of charges will be subject to agreement with West Lambeth health authority. The association, which owns the lithotripter, will be able to make differential charges between its own subscribers and other patients.

I am sorry if my reply of 29 October, at column 850, to the hon. Member did not make the procedures entirely clear.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the paybed authorisations at St. Thomas's hospital refer to beds which are used by National Health Service patients when not occupied by private patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. it is our policy for pay-beds in the NHS to be available for use by NHS patients when not occupied by private patients.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the consultants treating private patients with the lithotripter at St. Thomas's hospital will all be employees of South-East Thames regional health authority some of whose National Health Service work is within the West Lambeth health district;

(2) whether the approval of West Lambeth health authority will be needed before consultants not normally employed within St. Thomas's hospital are entitled to treat private patients with the lithotripter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The consultants treating private lithotripter patients at St Thomas's hospital will all be employees of West Lambeth health authority.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether consultants wishing to treat private patients with the lithotripter at St. Thomas's hospital will face any charge to the British United Provident Association.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the British United Provident Association will have any say in the choice of private patients admitted to St. Thomas's hospital for treatment using the lithotripter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Both private and NHS patients will be selected for lithotripsy treatment by a medical panel according to the suitability of the condition for this treatment, clinical need, and the urgency of the case.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to revise the six principles agreed with the medical profession to ensure the equitable operation of private practice in the light of the recent use of equipment (a) donated by public fund-raising or private companies or (b) owned by private companies.

Mr. John Patten: No, there is no need for a revision.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in assessing the benefits of accepting the lithotripter machine at St. Thomas's hospital, he took into account the fees receivable by consultants treating private patients.

Mr. John Patten: The fees receivable by consultants treating private lithotripter patients will be a matter between the consultants and their patients, as is always the case where such fees are payable.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend eligibility for exemption from paying prescription charges.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Prochlorperazine

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received claiming a relationship between Parkinson's disease and the prescribing of prochlorperazine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No such representations have been received, but we are aware of a recent article in the medical press on this matter. Extra pyramidal disorders including Parkinson's disease, are a recognised side effect of products containing prochlorperazine. These side effects are mentioned in the product data sheet, which also mentions that the rate of metabolism and elimination of the drug decreases in old age. The data sheet is available to all doctors in the United Kingdom.

All companies have been asked to include specific prescribing advice for the elderly in the data sheets of all products likely to be used in the elderly. The data sheet regulations will be amended to require the inclusion of this prescribing information in data sheets.

Kidney Bartering

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that the practice of kidney bartering does not take place in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: If by "kidney bartering" the hon. Member means the payment of a person to donate one of his kidneys for transplantation, I can assure him that we are totally opposed to such a practice. It has been condemned by the Transplantation Society, and is contrary to a Council of Europe resolution to which this country is signatory.

Health Services (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received in each of the last five years from (a) the North West regional health committee, (b) Bolton regional district health committee and (c) Bolton community health council, about the level of health service provision in Bolton.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Sick Pay

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the net effect on expenditure for sickness provision, through the statutory sick pay scheme and sickness benefit, resulting from the decision to extend coverage of statutory sick pay by a further 20 weeks, both in the first year of the change and in a full year.

Mr. Newton: We estimate that there will be a net increase in statutory provision for sickness of about £90 million in the first full year at average 1984-85 benefit rates. This figure does not take account of extra taxation and employee's national insurance contributions payable on statutory sick pay. The effect will be reduced in the year April 1986 to April 1987 by transitional effects following the extension of statutory sick pay.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will show the amount of sickness provision currently provided, both through sickness benefit and statutory sick pay, for a person who falls sick for 28 weeks in one 12-month period, who has satisfied the National Insurance contribution conditions, whose normal earnings are £60 gross per week and who has a dependent spouse; and if he will show the amount of combined sick pay and benefit they will receive, at equivalent prices, following the extension of statutory sick pay for 28 weeks.

Mr. Newton: At present such a person would first receive eight weeks of statutory sick pay—SSP—from his employer at £35·45 per week; he would then transfer to state sickness benefit at £44·05 per week—from the week commencing 26 November 1984 — for the remainder of the period. When SSP liability is extended to 28 weeks there will be entitlement to SSP for the whole period. There is no entitlement to Department of Health and Social Security sickness benefit for any period for which there is entitlement to SSP, but if the employer has an occupational sick pay scheme the employee might be entitled to additional payments in that respect.

In the circumstances the hon. Member postulates, which in practice we think are likely to be rare, the claimant would of course be eligible—unless he had capital over £3,000—for supplementary benefit—subject to the normal rules—to increase his income to £45·55 a week—at the rate of benefit from 26 November 1984—plus help to cover his housing costs.

Nurse Training

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department is no longer able to obtain and publish details of nurse training in the private sector.

Mr. John Patten: In the past such information was obtainable from the General Nursing Council for England and Wales.

Responsibility for the provision of nurse training was taken over by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in July 1983. Since then the board has been developing a computer system for record keeping and this information has not been readily available.

I understand that statistical information—including details of nurse training in the private sector—from the new system will be produced annually from March 1985.

Single Payments

Mr. Foster asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the proportion of single payments for furniture made to young single people moving from their parents' home.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available.

Heating Addition

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will backdate the estates rate heating addition to those tenants who live in council estates which have been designated as disproportionately expensive to heat to the date of application, September 1983.

Mr. Whitney: Estate rate heating additions are payable in respect of particular heating systems on estates which my right hon. Friend has recognised as having disproportionately high running costs. This condition is not satisfied until inquiries have been completed and the systems have been designated. The independent adjudicating authorities may backdate estate rate heating additions for up to 52 weeks in respect of the period after the systems have been designated.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will authorise a 52-week backdate of the exceptionally difficult to heat addition for tenants on estates which have been designated disproportionately expensive to heat.

Mr. Whitney: The heating additions to which the hon. Member refers are awarded in respect of homes which, having regard in particular to whether the rooms are draughty or damp or exceptionally large, are exceptionally difficult to heat adequately; for example, because they are very old or in a very exposed position. It is for the indepedendent adjudicating authorities to decide whether the necessary criteria are fulfilled in individual cases and, if so, whether to backdate the awards for up to 52 weeks.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consult the Royal College of Dental Surgeons as to the advisibility of offering immunisation to all dental surgeons against hepatitis B;

(2) if he will implement a comprehensive immunisation programme by recommending vaccination to the six classifications of persons at risk of contracting or carrying hepatitis B set out in the first leading article of the British Medical Journal dated Saturday 10 November.

Mr. John Patten: The Department's policy on immunisation against Hepatitis B is based on guidance issued by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation in the light of recommendations made by the advisory group on hepatitis. This guidance is contained in a letter CMO(82)13/CNO(82)11 dated 15 October 1982 and in our Department's memorandum "Immunisation against Infectious Disease" issued in April this year, copies of which are in the Library. The policy recommends that immunisation against Hepatitis B should be restricted to high risk groups, although the decision to vaccinate in any particular case is a matter for the individual doctor concerned. The categories of people for whom immunisation against Hepatitis B is recommended are kept under constant review. Any dental practitioner who feels himself at risk from Hepatitis B should consult his doctor about the possibility of immunisation. We have no plans to consult on this matter, although we should be happy to consider any representations the Royal College of Surgeons may wish to make.

Prescriptions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what could be the saving per year to the National Health Service budget if generic prescribing were extended to all drugs.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the number of abortions performed in England and Wales to resident girls aged 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 years for each of the years from 1969 to 1983; and if he will also show the rate of abortions performed on these age groups per 1,000 girls.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Blood Alcohol Levels

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy regarding the marketing of products designed to reduce blood alcohol levels on matters within his responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: If a product were marketed explicitly for the purpose of interfering with the normal operation of a physiological function, it would probably require a licence under the Medicines Act. If any such product appeared on the market consideration would be given to enforcing the requirements of the Act.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has been able to assess the value of the work of the north west region Mental Health Act Commission following its first year of operation.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 144]: No. We are aware of the regional division of the commission's work, but we have not had cause to consider the performance of the separate regional teams. We have regular contact with the chairman, and we are well satisfied with the way the commission as a whole has undertaken its work in its first year of operation.

Mr. Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if it is his intention to centralise the secretariat of the Mental Health Act Commission;

(2) whether he proposes to change the existing administrative arrangements for the Mental Health Act Commission regarding the maintenance of an adequately staffed regional office in the north-west.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 144]: A recent inspection of the staff serving the commission, which was concerned with the most efficient way of using those staffing resources, proposed that the secretariat be centralised. That proposal and others have been discussed with representatives of the commission and officers of our Department. The final report on this staff inspection is expected soon.

Mr. Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider extending the role of the Mental Health Act Commission to include the investigation of complaints from informal patients, particularly those who are effectively detained though still informal and those who complain about alleged coercive or restrictive practices.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 144]: We have no present intention of extending the existing remit of the Mental Health Act Commission.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the preparation of the code of practice by the Mental Health Act Commission; and when he intends to publish it.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 145]: Following extensive discussion and detailed work by sub-groups, the commission is making good progress with its drafting of the code of practice on admissions and treatment required by section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983. I understand the commission's timetable provides for the submission of a comprehensive draft document to my right hon. Friend by March 1985. Before the code is laid before Parliament, the consultation required by the Act must be undertaken.

Departmental Staff (Retirements)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any staff of his Department at or above the level of assistant secretary have retired early; and whether any such staff have been re-engaged either permanently or to carry out a specific task.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 149]: Since the beginning of 1983, seven officers at or above the level of assistant secretary have taken early retirement from my Department. Three of these have been engaged as consultants for limited periods to undertake specific tasks in specialist areas.

Social Security Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update table 34.45 of the "Social Security Statistics" to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 386]: The table is based on provisional estimates of the number of recipients of regular weekly payments of supplementary benefit at December 1983 who had additions to their benefit for special needs (additional requirements).

	All Supplementary Benefits	All Supplementary Pension	All Retirement Pension Cases and Widows aged 60 or over	Over Pension Age without NI Benefit	All Allowances	Sick and Disabled with and without NI Benefit	One Parent Families (not included in other groups)	Men aged 60-64	Unemployed With Unemployment Benefit	Unemployed Without Unemployment Benefit	Others (including widows under 60)

Phenylketonuria

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a positive labelling requirement warning sufferers of phenylketonuria of the presence of aspartame in all products containing this sweetener.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

The Food Labelling Regulations require that the presence of this sweetener must be indicated in the ingredients list on food labels as "artificial sweetener—aspertame".

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Grants

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing expenditure by and through his Department on each category of capital grant on buildings, drainage, fixed plant, machinery and other improvements, respectively, for each of the last five years and also showing the total value of grant-aided improvements in each of those categories for the years in question.

Mrs. Fenner: The table shows for England the amount of grant paid and the investment on which it was paid in respect of the present capital grant schemes and the schemes they replaced in October 1980. Grant payments to co-operatives under the agriculture and horticulture co-operation scheme (AHCS) are shown separately, but the details of the investment on which grant was claimed under this scheme are not available.

Rape Seed

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current subsidy to the production and crushing of rape seed in terms of (a) rape seed and (b) rape seed oil; how the subsidy compares with the market price of seed and oil; and what other vegetable oils have been displaced by the increased output of rape seed oil.

Mr. MacGregor: A single subsidy is paid to crushers equal to the difference between the Community target price for rape seed and the world price. The subsidy as at 15 November of £68·17 per tonne for rape seed of 40 per cent. oil content covered the difference between the target price of £302·04 per tonne and the world price of £233·87 per tonne.

Rape seed oil can substitute for a number of other oils, the most important of which is soya oil.

Cereals and Oilseeds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of United Kingdom production of the various cereal crops and oilseeds in the current year; and how much of this is likely to be surplus to requirements.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom production of cereals in 1984 is estimated at 26·5 million tonnes, of which some 9 million tonnes is forecast to be surplus to domestic requirements in 1984-85. Export requirements will depend on the world market, but in 1983-84, for example, were some 4·9 million tonnes.

Production of rape seed, the only oil seed of any significance grown in the United Kingdom, is estimated at 923,000 tonnes, all of which is expected under present conditions to find a commercial outlet.

Farming Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the total amount paid in 1983-84 and his estimate for the current financial year in respect of disbursements to the farming industry out of moneys provided by Parliament together with the principal items of expenditure and the balance of expenditure by his Department under other headings, including administration.

Mr. Jopling: Total voted expenditure, net of receipts, by my Department and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce in 1983-84 was £795 million. The Supply Estimates for 1984-85 provide for net expenditure of £884 million, but Winter Supplementary Estimates are to be presented to Parliament shortly seeking an increase of £31 million in the present provision. Details of expenditure in 1983-84 are set out in the Appropriation Accounts (Volume 3: Class III: HC 614-111 of 1983-84 published on 29 October 1984); details of the current year provision are in the Supply Estimates 1984-85 (Class III: HC 292-111, published on 13 March 1984 and HC 470 and 471 published on 14 June 1984).

Milk

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the progress made by other EEC countries towards reducing the level of milk production.

Mr. MacGregor: The most recent published data available on deliveries to dairies in all member states indicate that most member states have cut back milk production. Producers or dairies will be liable to pay supplementary levy if deliveries have been made in excess of their quotas when the calculation of levy liability falls due. The information on trends in deliveries is summarised as follows:

	Cutback on 1983-84 deliveries required to stay within 1984-85 wholesale quotas per cent.	Cutback achieved April to August 1984 against same period in 1983 per cent.

EC Surplus Foods (Storage)

Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in relation to the storage of surplus European Economic Community foodstuffs in Coventry and Warwickshire, he will indicate the location of the store and for each location (a) the nature of the commodity, (b) the quantity of the commodity and (c) the value of the commodity at the latest available date.

Mr. Jopling: At 30 September 1984 the position was as follows:

Location	Commodity	Stock	Value (at current Intervention Price)
		tonnes	£
Coventry	Breadwheat	1,191	149,744
Coventry	Barley	6,409	755,108
Warwick	Butter	1,504	2,902,089
Nuneaton	Skimmed Milk Powder	48	49,259

Pesticides

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he intends to introduce regulations under the food and environment protection Bill to control the equipment and methods used in applying pesticides;

(2) whether he intends to introduce regulations under the food and environmental protection Bill to control aerial spraying.

Mrs. Fenner: The regulations to be introduced under the Bill will be the subject of a detailed consultation and will be laid before the House for adoption by affirmative resolution. I do not wish to prejudge the outcome of that process, but I anticipate that the regulations will require the safe and efficient use of pesticides, and will therefore control the equipment and methods used in their application—including aerial application—in so far as these affect safety and efficiency.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the proposed extension of screening for efficacy to all pesticides will entail less rigorous tests of efficacy than are currently applied in the agricultural chemicals approval scheme.

Mrs. Fenner: We intend that the requirement to submit data on efficacy under the statutory scheme should be obligatory, and will for the first time allow the Government to ensure that no pesticide is released in the environment unless its use has been demonstrated to be beneficial. As such, the requirement will be a major improvement in principle to the Government's arrangements for the scrutiny of pesticides, and cannot be compared directly with a voluntary scheme designed to give approval to a limited range of products at the request of manufacturers.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to grant automatic approval under the new pesticides scheme to products which have been cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme but have not been approved for efficacy under the agricultural chemicals approved scheme; and whether approval of a product under the new scheme will entitle the manufacturer to use the mark of the agricultural chemicals approved scheme and to be included in the list of approved products for farmers and growers.

Mrs. Fenner: Both the points raised relate to the detail of the new arrangements rather than to the principles and procedures outlined in the Bill. They will be the subject of a further consultation with industry and other interests before a regulation outlining the Government's proposals is submitted to Parliament for approval.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticides have been (a) approved under the agricultural chemicals approved scheme and (b) cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme; in each case how many are (i) restricted to commercial use and (ii) available to ordinary members of the public for home and garden use; and how many are included in the Poisons List.

Mrs. Fenner: The agricultural chemicals approval scheme—ACAS—is available only to agricultural crop protection products, while the pesticides safety precautions scheme — PSPS — covers all pesticide formulations marketed in the United Kingdom for use in agriculture, horticulture, food storage, industrial pest control, public health and wood preservation. Approximately 4,400 pesticide products are cleared for safe use in the United Kingdom under the PSPS, and around 700 agrochemical pesticides are also approved under ACAS. I will write with the further detailed figures requested.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to make any changes in the role of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Mrs. Fenner: No. I am confident that the committee will adapt to the situation created by legislation, as it has to a variety of developments over the years.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to extend efficacy testing to garden chemicals under the new pesticides scheme.

Mrs. Fenner: Yes.

Aerial Spraying

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is his intention to provide that advance warning of aerial spraying to occupiers of adjacent land shall be mandatory.

Mrs. Fenner: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Food and Environment Protection Legislation

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish either a draft of the regulations he intends to make under the food and environment protection Bill or a detailed statement of the proposed content of those regulations before the Bill receives its Second Reading in the House.

Mrs. Fenner: No. I am concerned that either the publication of draft regulations or a detailed statement of their proposed content would prejudge the outcome of further consultation. However, Ministers expect to give an indication of the nature of the intended regulations in relation to points of concern to hon. Members during the course of debate in Parliament.

Lamb Premium (Report)

Mr. John Townend asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government will reply to the recommendations of the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities on the variable premium on lambs.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are considering the recommendations of the report on the sheepmeat regime and we shall be making our views known as appropriate in due course.

Milk Deliveries

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage reduction on 1983 milk deliveries was applied in each region in determining the regional or provincial regional wholesale quotas published in the London Gazette on 25 July.

Mr. MacGregor: In England and Wales the percentage reduction applied to 1983 milk deliveries to dairies to calculate the quota available for the two quota regions—the MMB area and the Isles of Scilly—taken together is 6·25 per cent. The equivalent figure in Scotland for the six Scottish quota regions taken together is 6·39 per cent. In Northern Ireland the corresponding figure is 10·35 per cent., but this figure falls to 5·83 per cent. when the 65,000 tonne allocation for Northern Ireland from the Community reserve is added into the Northern Ireland wholesale quota allocation.

Wholesale Milk Producers (Levy)

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he makes of the prospects that wholesale milk producers in England and Wales may have to pay supplementary levy in 1984-85; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: We have opted to use formula B—the dairy quota system—in England and Wales. This means that, to the extent that some wholesale producers undershoot their quotas, it is possible for others to overshoot without being penalised. No one will lose quota because they undershoot this year, but equally others who may want to overshoot can thereby benefit.

In the period April-September 1984 deliveries to the Milk Marketing Board in England and Wales were 9·4 per cent. down on the same period of last year. For 1984-85 as a whole we need to be only 6·1 below 1983-84 in order to avoid any levy being payable. This means that so long as production in the period October 1984 to March 1985 is at least 2·6 per cent. lower than in the same six months of 1983-84, no levy will be payable at the end of the marketing year in respect of deliveries to the Milk Marketing Board.

Potato Support Arrangements (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of Northern Ireland potato support arrangements.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government have reviewed the potato support arrangements applying to Northern Ireland and have agreed with the Ulster Farmers' Union on a revision of the existing agreement which was drawn up in 1972. The revised agreement will apply with effect from the 1984 crop. I am arranging for copies of the agreement to be available in the Library of the House.

The new arrangements reflect two factors. First, in introducing the 1982 stockfeed scheme the Government announced that the level of their future commitment to support the Northern Ireland potato market would have to be linked more closely to how the overall level of production matched the available market.

Second, the revised arrangements aim to provide support for producers in Northern Ireland at an appropriate level in relation to support measures in Great Britain, taking into account that Northern Ireland growers do not have their individual areas controlled or contribute towards the cost of support measures, as do their counterparts in Great Britain. The Government will review annually the target prices, target area and tonnage limitation on intervention included in the agreement in the same way that the figures governing support in Great Britain are reviewed.

The new agreement with the Ulster Farmers' Union terminates at the end of the 1989 crop year and it will be reviewed before then. This agreement does not preclude any initiative in the interim from the United Kingdom or Northern Ireland growers for a marketing scheme to apply in Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what he attributes the high turnover of men in the Territorial Army; and what are the implications of this for the effectiveness of the force.

Mr. Stanley: High turnover of personnel tends to be a feature of any wholly volunteer military force. The Territorial Army is no exception. The main reasons why people leave are conflicting social, domestic or employment pressures. The high turnover does not prevent the Territorial Army from being able to carry out its operational role effectively, as was recently demonstrated in Exercise Lionheart. None the less, we are currently examining the matter to see if there are any steps we can take to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for defence policy of the fact that only two thirds of the Territorial Army have completed minimum training at any point in time.

Mr. Stanley: At any given time more than 70 per cent. of the Territorial Army's strength has completed basic training. On mobilisation there are plans to meet any shortfall in the trained strength of the Territorial Army with Regular Army reservists. There are therefore no significant implications for our defence plans.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the membership of the Territorial Army is composed of former regular soldiers; and whether he has any plans for measures to increase this figure.

Mr. Stanley: As at the end of October 1984 the proportion of Territorial Army members with former regular service was 21·2 per cent. We already encourage ex-regulars to join the Territorial Army and are currently giving further consideration to this.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will consider introducing measures to make it more advantageous to employers to give leave to employees for Territorial Army summer camps and other training sessions.

Mr. Stanley: We are already considering measures to improve employer support for the volunteer forces and are setting up a national committee on the lines of those which work well in the USA and Australia, which will be reflected at a local level throughout the United Kingdom. This will act as a focal point and serve to emphasise that the qualities of leadership, self-discipline and initiative developed by Territorial Army training are as important to the community and beneficial to the employer as they are to the armed forces.

Submarine Base, Faslane

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that no person without the appropriate protective equipment enters the submarine base at Faslane, Dumbarton, in view of the large asbestos dump discovered there.

Mr. Stanley: The asbestos dump is on an area of land which is fenced off and separate from the main operating part of the Faslane submarine base. All access to this land and work associated with its decontamination is, and will be, controlled in accordance with the Health and Safety Executive's requirements.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date asbestos was discovered at the submarine base at Faslane, Dumbarton; how many people without protective equipment have entered the site since the discovery; when (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the local authority was informed of its presence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Ships have been broken up on the Gareloch by commercial firms, involving the removal of asbestos, since the 1940s. I understand that the company concerned, Shipbreaking Industries Limited, informed Dumbartonshire county council and the Factories Inspectorate in 1973 of the disposal of asbestos on the site. Work processes on the site were monitored by Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate prior to January 1975 and have been since that date when the Factory Inspectorate was absorbed into the Health and Safety Executive.

It is not known how many people have entered the site since asbestos removal from ships started in the 1940s.

I have placed a copy of the Ministry of Defence (Navy) press statement relating to this asbestos dump which was issued on 30 October 1984 in the Library.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the starting date for the construction of the perimeter fence at RAF Molesworth;

(2) when work on the perimeter fence at RAF Molesworth is scheduled to be completed.

Mr. Stanley: The construction timetable will be dependent on a number of factors including consultations with the local planning authority, which have not been completed.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the perimeter fence at RAF Molesworth will be required (a) for the 46 acres of the ground-launched cruise missile facility and (b) around the entire area owned by his Department.

Mr. Stanley: Security at RAF Molesworth will include both a perimeter fence and further fencing around the ground-launched cruise missile facility.

"Keep the Army in the Public Eye"

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of "Keep the Army in the Public Eye" tours.

Mr. Stanley: The cost (excluding military salaries) of "Keep the Army in the Public Eye" team tours in 1983-84 was £123,000.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have at any time proposed to the United States Government that each of the 10 flights of cruise missiles be based at separate locations.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 29 October 1984, at column 854.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what reports and representations he has received about the use of cruise missiles with conventional warheads; if he is considering a battle strategy with such weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: There is no change in NATO's strategy of deterrence based on flexible response and forward defence. In the context of that strategy the Government have been considering within NATO the setting up of collaborative feasibility studies for a conventionally armed long range stand-off missile. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement said in his answer of 29 October, at column 855, a memorandum of understanding has been agreed for this missile with the United States of America and the Federal Republic of Germany. Cruise missile technology is under examination for this missile. Studies are also being carried out on a national basis in relation to the same requirement. I am not aware of any representations received by my right hon. Friend on this matter. The reports that my Department has received relating to this requirement are classified.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a decision has been reached by NATO on the location of the European repair facility for ground-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Stanley: This is a matter for the United States Government and the host nation concerned rather than the NATO Alliance as a whole.

Greenham Common

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States personnel have been disciplined for alcohol-related offences at the Greenham common airbase.

Mr. Stanley: This is a matter for the United States air force, but I understand that so far this year there have been no instances of USAF personnel being disciplined for alcohol-related offences whilst on duty at RAF Greenham common.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects the third, fourth, fifth and sixth flights of ground-launched cruise missiles to become operational at Greenham common;

(2) whether he will make a statement each time an additional flight of ground-launched cruise missiles becomes operational at Greenham common;

(3) whether a second flight of ground-launched cruise missiles is now operational at Greenham common.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 13 November, at columns 224-25.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, why the board of inquiry was not set up immediately after the discovery of the disappearance of the navigator's log of HMS Conqueror; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I have nothing yet to add to my answers to the hon. Member on 13 November, at columns 227-28.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to classify the report of the board of inquiry into the loss of the navigator's log of HMS Conqueror.

Mr. Heseltine: The board of inquiry has already classified its report.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the debriefing of the crew of HMS Conqueror took place following the return of the submarine to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heseltine: There is no formal debriefing of the crew of a submarine on return from patrol to the United Kingdom. I understand that senior officers met HMS Conqueror on her return to the United Kingdom on 3 July 1982.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the signals log of HMS Conqueror has been retained.

Mr. Heseltine: As I explained to the hon. Member on 15 November, signal logs are not retained permanently. I have subsequently confirmed that records available to my Department indicate that the signals log of HMS Conqueror during the Falklands campaign has been destroyed.

Service Children (Education)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many schools formerly recommended by the Service Children's Education Authority to parents in the armed forces who are considering educating their child under the boarding school allowance scheme have ceased to be so recommended in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Stanley: The Service Children's Education Authority does not have a recommended list of schools. The boarding school allowance is payable to parents for any school they choose which has suitable boarding facilities and which is registered with the Department of Education and Science. Parents do not have to consult the Service Children's Education Authority before choosing a school, but those who do receive personal advice based on the parents' individual needs and wishes.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the boarding school allowance for the academic years 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Stanley: The actual expenditure on boarding school allowance for 1983-84 was £76·5 million. The estimated expenditure for 1984-85 is £77·7 million.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many pupils educated under the boarding school allowance at St. George's school, Great Finborough, Stowmarket, have changed their school from St. George's at a point in their education which was not the completion of a stage in their education in each of the last five years; and in respect of how many of these children the boarding school allowance was (a) no longer paid by his Department, (b) reduced and (c) repaid in full or part by the parents as a result of the change of school;

(2) how many pupils educated under the boarding school allowance scheme have changed their school at a point in their education which was not the completion of a stage of education in each of the last five years; and in respect of how many of these children the boarding school allowance was (a) no longer paid by his Department, (b) reduced and (c) repaid in full or part by the parents as a result of the change in school;

(3) on how many occasions in the last five years officers of the Service Children's Education Authority has visited St. George's school, Great Finborough;

(4) when officers of the Service Children's Education Authority last visited St. George's school, Great Finborough, Stowmarket; what were their findings; and if he will make a statement;

(5) how many representations have been received by his Department concerning St. George's school, Great Finborough, Stowmarket during the last five years.

Mr. Stanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the armed forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of how many schools investigated by the Service Children's Education Authority following complaints from parents in the last 10 years a referral has been made to the Department of Education and Science; and if he will name the schools so referred in each of those years.

Mr. Stanley: Formal referrals to the Department of Education and Science are not made by the Service Children's Education Authority. Instead, advice on standards is sought on individual schools from Her Majesty's inspectors. It is not the practice of Her Majesty's inspectors to publish the names of individual schools in respect of which they give advice.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many schools have been investigated by the Service Children's Education Authority as a result of reports from parents in Her Majesty's Forces of children at those schools of dissatisfaction with the school in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Stanley: Complaints from parents are one possible reason for a visit by the Service Children's Education Authority, but there are many others, such as the recent opening of a school, large numbers of service children, and requests from headmasters. In the past 13 months the officer responsible for giving boarding school advice has visited 81 schools. This represents a typical visits programme for the officer in this post. We have no record of the visits arising from complaints over the last 10 years.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied with the arrangemens that exist for children educated under the boarding school allowance scheme to change schools at a point other than the completion of a stage in their education.

Mr. Stanley: These arrangements are reviewed from time to time and a review is in progress at present. It is too early to forecast the outcome.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total number of each type of school catering for the children of armed forces' personnel in Germany in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stanley: The total number of each type of school catering for the children of armed forces personnel in British Forces Germany is given in the following table:

	Schools
	Primary	Middle	Secondary
1980	84	6	9
1981	82	6	8
1982	83	5	9
1984	80	5	8

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the rate of GCE O-level and A-level passes per 100 of the appropriate age group in each of the last five years for which figures are available in (a) state schools in England and Wales and (b) British forces' schools in Germany.

Mr. Stanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will be writing to my hon. Friend.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many children have been attending British forces' schools in Germany in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stanley: The autumn term figures for each year are as follows:

	Number
1980	28,563
1981	28,298
1982	27,636
1983	26,376
1984	24,845

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many teachers have been employed in British forces' schools in Germany in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Stanley: The number of teachers employed in British Forces schools in Germany in the last five years are as follows:

	Teachers
1980	1,666
1981	1,647
1982	1,564
1983	1,521
1984	1,430

Note: These figures include the full-time equivalents of a number of part-time locally employed teachers.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average expenditure per pupil in each of the last five years for which figures are available in state schools in England and Wales and in British forces' schools in Germany on (a) books, (b) other equipment and (c) staff salaries.

Mr. Stanley: I am able to answer this question only in respect of British forces' schools in Germany; state schools in England and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Average Expenditure (£) per Pupil in British Forces Schools in Germany

	Books	Equipment	Staff salaries and wages
			Teachers	Others
1980-81	4·72	19·47	1,027	423
1981-82	5·30	19·96	1,080	289
1982-83	8·32	17·55	1,028	172
1983-84	11·89	28·29	1,084	194

Note: Comparable figures are not available for 1979-80.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of school leavers have gone on to university or polytechnic education in each of the last five years for which figures are available in (a) state schools in England and Wales and (b) British forces' schools in Germany.

Mr. Stanley: I am able to answer this question only in respect of British forces' schools in Germany; state schools in England and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

For the period 1979-83 an average of between 10 per cent. and 12 per cent. of school leavers from service children's schools in Germany have gone on to university or polytechnic education.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average period of time spent by pupils in any given school by children of armed forces' personnel.

Mr. Stanley: I regret that the information requested is not available. The inevitable turbulence of service life is undoubtedly a potential problem where children's education is concerned, and it is for that reason that various measures, including boarding school allowance, are available to assist stability of education.

Lieutenant Colonel Wolverson

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current posting of Lieutenant Colonel Wolverson, Kings Own Border Regiment; what postings he has held in each of the last three years; where outside the United Kingdom he has served or visited in this period in the course of his official duties; on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: During 1981-82 Lieutenant Colonel Wolverson served as a member of the British Military Assistance Team in Zimbabwe. Since January 1983 he has been the commanding officer of 1 Kings Own Border Regiment. We do not publish details of individual's movements in the course of their duties.

Nuclear Tests (Australia)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Government are to seek leave to be represented before the Australian Royal Commission which is concerned with British nuclear weapon tests in Australia; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: The president of the Royal Commission has already indicated that he would welcome United Kingdom representation.

It is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to seek leave to be represented and to give evidence.

Her Majesty's Government have also agreed in principle to the request from Senator Walsh, Australian Minister for Resources and Energy, for the Royal Commission to visit the United Kingdom in January to hear evidence.

Simulated Nuclear Accident

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a simulated nuclear accident took place as part of the recent field exercise by the 501st Tactical Missile Wing.

Mr. Stanley: We do not give details of the training exercises conducted by nuclear missile units.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost to his Department of work carried out by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. in each year since 1979;

(2) what work is carried out by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. for his Department.

Mr. Butler: British Nuclear Fuels plc produces and processes special nuclear materials for the Ministry of Defence, but, for security reasons and in accordance with the practice of successive Governments, details and costs of the programmes undertaken by the company cannot be disclosed.

Equipment Reliability

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the light of the recent British Telecom study on military printed circuit boards, he will review urgently the reliability of defence equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: No evidence of risk of short-circuiting in printed circuit boards found in this unpublished study has been reported in the defence field. The study was concerned with the PCBs which are left unprotected in the open air in places like roadside cabinets or manholes. This is not the case with the PCBs in military equipment. When the detailed results of the study are available the possibility of a read-across to military equipment will be considered.

Training Courses (Power Stations)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many training courses, involving what numbers of personnel, have been organised in each of the last 10 years within the armed services to train personnel in the operation of power stations.

Mr. Stanley: Certain training is carried out annually on certain types of power generation and distribution in the context of particular war roles. This training is not relevant to, or suitable for, the operation of the types of power stations run by the CEGB.

Falkland Islands.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been made to individual owner-occupied farms in the Falkland Islands for leases of land for military training purposes; what is the basis of rent or compensation offered; and what similar requests or arrangements have been entered into with the Falkland Islands Company.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 15 November 1984, c. 344]: A number of approaches have been made to individual owner-occupiers of farms in the Falkland Islands to rent or lease land for military training purposes such as firing ranges and training areas.

In all cases, the maximum rent offered would be the market rent, reduced as appropriate to take account of the ability of farmers to continue their farming operation during military use of the land. The precise level of rental is of course a matter of negotiation in each case.

The same principles are adopted whether negotiation is with individual owner-occupiers or with larger concerns such as the Falkland Islands Company. Agreement has been reached with the Falkland Islands Company to rent five areas of land for use as firing ranges.

ENERGY

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the present position in regard to the development of combined heat and power; and if he will list the proposals which have been made to his Department concerning such development in the nine lead cities which have been studied.

Mr. David Hunt: Ten proposals have now been received, including two for London, covering all the nine towns recommended for further study by the Atkins report. These are being evaluated by my Department and a statement will be made in due course.

European Coal and Steel Community

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total deep-mined production in European Coal and Steel Community coal industries in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983.

Mr. David Hunt: The Community does not produce separate figures for deep-mined coal production.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the latest negotiating positions of the National Coal Board and the National Union of Mineworkers and as to the full agreement reached between the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers and the National Coal Board, covering the main issues of the five main pits threatened with imminent closure, the pit closure programme, the arbitration procedures for pit colliery closures and on the list of financial offers that have been made to the National Union of Mineworkers and the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Union of Mineworkers has made it clear that its position has not changed since March. The National Coal Board, in discussions with the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers, reached a sensible and constructive outcome. The same agreement is available to the National Union of Mineworkers.

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the latest position in the dispute in the mining industry.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 5 November more than 10,000 miners have returned to work. The national executive of the NUM, at its meeting last week, again refused to ballot its members. Those 70,000 miners who have held a ballot decided by an enormous margin not to strike.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest position as to coal stocks, covering stocks within the power station perimeters and elsewhere, giving separate figures for stocks of opencast coal; and what are his Department's estimates of how long these stocks will adequately satisfy power station and domestic consumer demand.

Mr. Goodlad: Figures on coal stocks are published in table 5 of Energy Trends, the latest edition of which appeared at the end of October. Stocks held by merchants and the industrial sector are not included as these figures are not available.

With coal stocks at power stations higher than they were at the end of August, there are no problems of satisfying the demand for electricity.

Power Stations

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the power stations that are operating at present, specifying the power stations burning coal, oil, dual-fired oil and coal and nuclear stations.

Mr. Goodlad: The pattern of power station operations varies constantly in response to the level of demand and this is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board.

WALES

Employment and Training Measures

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of people benefiting from special employment and training measures at the latest available date (a) in the constituency of Cardiff West and (b) in Cardiff; and what is the average cost per person supported under each measure.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive information on all schemes cannot be provided for an area exactly corresponding to my hon. Friend's constituency.

The latest information on individual schemes in each case for the smallest area included in my hon. Friend's constituency is as follows:

		Total
Community Programme	South Glamorgan	1,009
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	Mid and South Glamorgan	742
Job Release Scheme	Cardiff	508
Job Splitting Scheme	Cardiff	1
Young Workers Scheme	Cardiff	529
Youth Training Scheme	Cardiff	1,738
		4,527

The following costs are national averages based on the latest information and estimates and where appropriate include assumptions about periods of participation on schemes and the number of supervisors employed. They do not take into account savings in the payments of benefits or flow-backs to the Exchequer from tax and national insurance. The cost in any particular area for a particular scheme may vary from the national average.

Estimated average cost per person supported under the measure

Measure	£
Community Programme	2,840
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	1,934
Job Release Schemes	3,250
Job Splitting Scheme	750
Young Workers Scheme	560
Youth Training Scheme	1,800

Fishing Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the state of the fishing industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh fishing industry is experiencing a period of adjustment to change following agreement on the common fisheries policy. The industry has been able to benefit from a programme of grants which includes financial support for aquaculture, exploratory voyages, and decommissioning, laying up, modernisation and construction of vessels. In addition, it has access to other schemes providing financial assistance for projects to improve harbour and shore based facilities. The Welsh industry has also been involved directly in advising on the management of quotas which apply to certain fish stocks in its traditional waters in the Irish sea, Bristol channel and south west approaches.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the loan guarantee scheme for small businesses.

Mr. Trippier: I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Steel Industry

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total employment in the steel industry in Scotland in (a) 1982, (b) 1983 and (c) at the latest available date; what was the steelmaking capacity for these dates; and what was the steel production for the same dates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following is the available information:

Steel Industry in Scotland

	*Total Labour force Engaged on ECSC Activities	Crude Steel
	'000 (average for year)	Capacity† million tonnes	Production‡ million tonnes

1984	‖6·0	3·2	¶1·6

* Employment figures for establishments classified to the iron and steel and steel tubes industries are not available for 1982 and 1983 because no census of employment was carried out for these years. The figures supplied relate to employment on ECSC activities, compiled by the Iron and Steel Statistics Bureau, and which are published in "Eurostat" for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Imported Ferrous Scrap

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the European Economic Community Commission concerning the proposal by the Italian Government to subsidise imported ferrous scrap.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes. The Government have registered strong concern to the Commission about the proposed Italian measure. My right. hon. Friend the Secretary of State also raised the issue with the Italian Industry Minister last month.

Telecommunications (General Licences)

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish notes for guidance on the interpretation of the branch systems general licence issued under the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department is preparing notes for guidance on the branch systems general licence in consultation with the Director General of Telecommunications. These notes and further editions will be published by the director, not by the Department, and will be his responsibility under section 48 of the Telecommunications Act.

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government intend to issue a new value added services general licence under the Telecommunications Act 1984; and when the Government expects that the draft licence will be available for public consultation.

Mr. Butcher: The terms of the new licence for value added network services will depend on the outcome of current discussions on licences for managed data network services on which our plans were announced on 15 October and on the outcome of discussions on the consultation document the Department plans to circulate shortly. The new licence will not be granted until the new year, but in the interim the VANS general licence granted under the British Telecommunications Act 1981 continues in force.

Assisted Areas

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the effect on unemployment in (a) Wakefield and (b) the west Yorkshire areas of the Government's revised regional assistance policy and the new assisted area map.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 56]: As stated in the White Paper "Regional Industrial Development" (Cmnd. 9111) the aim of the policy is the reduction, on a stable long-term basis, of regional imbalances in employment opportunities. These imbalances are manifested in economic activity and migration rates as well as in unemployment. It is not possible to forecast the impact on unemployment in particular areas.

TRANSPORT

M62 Motorway

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has recently had with North Yorkshire and Humberside county councils concerning maintenance of the M62 motorway; and which sections of the motorway were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department has regular consultations with Humberside county council about the length of M62 motorway east of junction 34, for which it is maintaining agent. In addition, some discussions took place at a technical level earlier this year with officers of a number of local authorities, including North Yorkshire and Humberside county councils, about possible future arrangements for the maintenance of motorways, including M62 motorway in West Yorkshire, following abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates have been made of capital requirements of the metropolitan districts for public transport purposes in the event that the metropolitan counties are abolished and the transport function becomes a district responsibility.

Mrs. Chalker: It is proposed that, following abolition, public transport will become the responsibility of a joint board representing all the districts of a metropolitan county. Subsequently any proposals from an individual district to take over responsibility for its own services will be considered on their merits and if the transfer were agreed appropriate financial and other adjustments would be made.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any estimates of the effects of the withdrawing of support for rail transport in metropolitan areas should the metropolitan counties be abolished.

Mr. David Mitchell: Decisions on support for local passenger rail services in the metropolitan counties are the responsibility of the passenger transport authorities and their passenger transport executives. Under the Government's proposals for the abolition of the metropolitan county councils the passenger transport authorities will be differently constituted, but their powers to support passenger rail services under the Transport Act 1968 will continue.

North Devon Link Road

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the inspector's report for the north Devon link road, stage 2A, following the local public inquiry held earlier in 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: I can confirm that we have now received the inspector's report of the north Devon link stage 2A inquiry, which is being considered. The decision of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment will be announced as soon as possible.

M25 Motorway

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the delays occurring in the completion of the remaining sections of the M25 motorway; and who will carry the financial responsibility for these delays.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her reply, 19 November 1984, c. 47]: Some formal extensions of contract completion dates have been granted by the independent engineers to the various contracts. None of these prejudices our target of completing the entire M25 by the end of 1986. Any delays over and above those formally approved would render the contractor(s) concerned liable to liquidated damages.

Pilotage

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last 25 years he has used his powers under section 78 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1906 to grant a dispensation from compulsory pilotage; and what were the circumstances on each occasion.

Mr. David Mitchell [pursuant to his reply, 15 November 1984, c. 337]: On one occasion only in respect of Sealink as operator of the MV Stena Normandica whose officers already hold pilotage certificates for the Milford Haven pilotage district. In my view this dispensation does not give rise to any risk to the safety of the vessel.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Blind Persons (Tax Allowance)

Mr. Butterfill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total cost in each of the last five years of the blind person's tax allowance.

Mr. Moore: It is estimated that the cost of the blind person's tax allowance was about £1·5 million in 1980-81 and about £3 million in each of the years fom 1981-82 to the current financial year.

VAT (Take-away Food and Drink)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will now require Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to publish under separate heading the amount of value added tax paid in respect of hot take-away food and drink.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report details of the changes made since 1975 in the Treasury model for (a) price elasticities for imports and exports of manufactures and (b) domestic growth elasticities in the demand for imports and exports of (i) manufactures, (ii) oil and (iii) other goods.

Mr. Peter Rees: Details of the Treasury model, including the elasticities used in the imports and exports equations have been published periodically: the last occasion was in June 1984 in "H.M. Treasury Macroeconomic Model: Supplement to the 1982 Technical Manual". Previous editions of the model manual were published in May 1980 and November 1982. The equations in the model, including those for imports and exports, are updated from time to time in the light of recent data and research.

Heroin

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates are available to him of the amount of heroin seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise as a percentage of the total imported.

Mr. Hayhoe: Any estimates of the total amount of heroin entering the country can only be speculative. The range of those estimates which I have seen is wide and little, if any, reliance can be placed upon them. It follows, therefore, that estimating the percentage seized by customs would be unrealistic.

Building Societies

Mr. Weetch asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to establish an ombudsman for the building societies movement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have taken note of the hon. Member's suggestion, which will be considered alongside the responses to the proposals for new building society legislation in the Green Paper "Building Societies: a New Framework" (Cmnd. 9316).

MIRAS (Abuse)

Mr. Craigen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has received from building societies regarding possible abuse of the mortgage interest relief at source scheme by applicants for a mortgage attempting to obtain tax relief on more than one property.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortgages

Mr. Craigen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the estimated number of mortgagors with mortgages of £15,000, £20,000, £25,000 and £30,000, respectively, in 1984-85 in each tax band.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Civil Service

Mr. Richard Page asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October.

Mr. Peter Rees: At 1 October 1984 there were 617,200 staff in post — 500,200 non-industrial and 117,000 industrial; that is a reduction of 2,000 since 1 July 1984. The number of civil servants has fallen by 115,100 or 15·7 per cent. since the beginning of the last Parliament.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present size of the Civil Service; by how many the establishment has been reduced since April 1979; and what categories of staff have suffered the biggest reductions.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 November 1984, c.18]: There were 617,200 staff in post in central Government Departments on 1 October 1984 (the latest date for which figures are available) compared with 732,300 on 1 April 1979. This reflects a reduction in the size of the Civil Service of more than 115,000, or 15·7 per cent. since the beginning of the last Parliament. The largest percentage reduction was in the industrial grades, which fell by 29·7 per cent. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Proctor) on 11 July 1984, at column 443, for details of the percentage reductions in non-industrial grades.

Block Grant Holdback

Dr. Cunningham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumption is made in table 1.9 of the autumn statement of 12 November about the level of local government block grant holdback to be incurred in 1985-86 by local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales; and what are the respective figures.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 40]: It is not our practice to detail the individual assumptions underlying the forecasts of public finances in the autumn statement. The amount of grant holdback to be incurred in 1985-86 depends on the spending decisions of individual local authorities, which are not yet available.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the population where the husband and wife are both working have a gross income in excess of £20,000 per year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c.41]: A provisional estimate for 1984-85 based on projections from the 1982-83 survey of personal incomes is that about 11 per cent. of married couples where both husband and wife are earning have a gross income in excess of £20,000. Gross income is taken to include only those forms of income liable to income tax.

Government Trading Funds

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each central Government trading fund from the financial year of establishment, (a) its historic cost financial results, (b) its current cost financial results, (c) its financial target and over or under-achievement and (d) the level of financial performance, in both historic and current cost, necessary to meet the statutory break-even requirements.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 40]: The information requested is given in the following table on an historic cost basis for each trading fund from its year of establishment and on a current cost basis for the years for which current cost accounts have been prepared.

	(a) Historic cost results £ million (Note 1)	(b) Current cost results £ million (Note 1)	(c) Financial target per cent. return on net assets	Over/(Under) achievement per cent.	(d) Break-even performance required Historic cost per cent. (Note 2)	Current cost per cent. (Note 2)

Notes

1. Columns (a) and (b) give the surplus/(deficit) for the year after interest.
2. The entries under column (d) give the return required on net assets employed to meet the interest on long-term borrowing.
3. For the period 1 July 1974 to 31 March 1979 the Royal Ordnance Factories were required to earn an excess of revenue over outgoings sufficient to permit the payment of an average dividend of 10 per cent. per annum. This was achieved.
4. For the period 1 April 1976 to 31 March 1981 the Crown Suppliers were required to earn an excess of revenue over outgoings sufficient to provide for a return of 10 per cent. on average net assets or interest due on long-term borrowing. This was achieved.
5. The 1983-84 accounts of the Crown Suppliers have not yet been laid.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Marketing Scheme

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received the report of the public inquiry into the objection made to the proposed amendments to the potato marketing scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and I have received the report of Mr. Brian Capstick, QC, who conducted the public inquiry into objections to the proposed amendments to the potato marketing scheme. The main effects of the amendments are to:

(i) increase the formula rate, on which the level of producers' contributions is based, to £75 per hectare in 1985;
(ii) change the basis for calculating the formula rate for future years;
(iii) give the board more flexibility in the adjustment of electoral districts;
(iv) reduce the minimum number of producers, and the respective potato area, required to demand a poll of all registered producers;
(v) increase the charges for supplying copies of the Register of producers and the board's balance sheet; and
(vi) change certain voting procedures.

The report recommends that, subject to certain modifications, the amendments should be adopted and that they will conduce to the more efficient operation of the scheme. Ministers have accepted these recommendations and have given notice of the modifications to the Potato Marketing Board. These refer to a change in the definition of "average price" and "potato area" and a lowering of the minimum number of producers required to demand a poll from 500, as proposed by the board, to 400. The conditions under which the board may alter electoral boundaries are revised and there is one further minor change. The board has now accepted all these modifications and a draft order will be laid before Parliament shortly.

The report of the inquiry is being published today and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. I have written to Mr. Capstick on behalf of the other Agricultural Ministers thanking him for a comprehensive report and the speed with which he has completed his findings.

Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce (Derby Premises)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the location of the store used by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce in Derby, (b) the nature of its contents and (c) the quantities in store.

Mr. Jopling: On 30 September the intervention store in Derby contained 672 tonnes of butter. The address of the store is not given, on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Whirling Disease

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fish farms are still affected by whirling disease and in which areas of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement on the progress made toward the elimination of this disease.

Mr. MacGregor: There are at present 44 fish farms in England and Wales on which there are grounds for believing that the causative agent of whirling disease, (Myxosoma cerebralis), may be found. However, there may be other sites on which Myosoma cerebralis is also present at sub-clinical levels and has not been identified.

The known 44 sites are 42 of the 43 sites in England and Wales which I listed in my reply to the right hon. Member of 26 March 1984, at column 24, (excluding Mill Leat trout farm in Devon, where sufficient measures have been taken to eradicate the disease) and two additional sites in Clwyd, Wales and north Yorkshire.

My fish disease scientists are currently monitoring the occurrence of whirling disease in accordance with the policies announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) on 27 February 1984, at column 2.

Salmon

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place between his Ministry and interested parties on a salmon tagging scheme to offset salmon poaching; and if he will make a statement on the prospects for his Ministry of sponsoring legislation on this matter.

Mr. MacGregor: The examination by officials of the issues raised by the report of the salmon sales group of the former National Water Council has identified the main areas of concern in any scheme to control salmon sales and is looking urgently into the practical difficulties of establishing effective control. These problems are still under examination with interested parties. We are anxious to clear these issues as speedily as possible, and I hope that conclusions can be reached soon. But no decisions about legislation can be taken until we have the measure of the practical implications of a scheme of the kind proposed by the sales group.

Mr. Mason asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have taken place between his Ministry and the Atlantic Salmon Trust on salmon preservation and an improvement in salmon spawning stocks next season; and whether he has consulted the water authorities on how improvements can be made in spawning stocks of multi-sea winter salmon in 1985.

Mr. MacGregor: I have exchanged correspondence with the chairman of the Atlantic Salmon Trust about the numbers of multi-sea winter salmon returning to this country and about steps that might be taken to improve salmon spawning stocks. He recently put a number of suggestions to me which I am considering. My officials have also been in touch with representatives of the water authorities, which are fully seized of the need to conserve spawning stocks but have no specific suggestions for Government action in respect of multi-sea winter salmon.

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the terms of reference of the departmental inquiry which he commissioned earlier in the current year into the effects of the north-east coast salmon fishery; when he expects to receive his scientists' report; and if he will undertake to publish it in full as soon as possible.

Mr. MacGregor: The results of the further examination by officials of the effects of the north east coast salmon fishery have been reported to me. Scientists of my Department and of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland were asked to examine the present state of the salmon fisheries which are dependent on salmon passing through the English north-east coast fishery, to consider objections which have been raised to that fishery and to consider possible management arrangements to take account of significant problems. Their report was an internal one based, in part, on information provided in confidence and will not be published. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office and I are considering the report and will announce our conclusions when we have completed that consideration.

Vegetable Oils

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of subsidy on domestically produced, or tariff on imported, vegetable oils and on vegetable oils high in polyunsaturates.

Mr. MacGregor: No subsidies are paid on oils and I assume, therefore, that the right hon. Member's question relates to the subsidies which are paid to oilseed crushers to encourage them to purchase Community produce rape seed and sunflower seed and which cover the gap between Community and world prices for these oilseeds. Only rape seed is grown in the United Kingdom and the rate of subsidy on 15 November was £68·17 per tonne for rape seed with an oil content of 40 per cent.

The tariffs on oilseeds are nil. The general rates of tariff for most vegetable oils for human consumption supplied in bulk are 10 per cent. for crude oil and 15 per cent. for refined oil. Further details may be found in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise "Tariff and Overseas Trade Classification in the United Kingdom", volume II, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Of the main oils of interest in the United Kingdom, corn, groundnut, rape, soya and sunflower are relatively high in polyunsaturate and coconut, palm and palm kernel are relatively low.

Saturated Fats

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which products high in saturated fat receive subsidies; and what is the level of subsidies on butter and red meat carcases.

Mr. Jopling: In the absence of an objective definition of what constitutes a high saturated fat content, a detailed reply is not possible. It is, however, possible to give specific informations on the levels of subsidy relating to butter and redmeat carcases as requested.

A consumer subsidy is paid on butter at the rate of 8p per kilogram; additionally a special sale of a limited quantity of 39,200 tonnes of butter will be made at a price to packers further reduced by 92p per kilogram. A range of aids is also paid on the use of butter by non-profit-making organisations, such as schools, hospitals, old people's homes; use of butter by the armed forces; use in food manufacture, including use as concentrated butter, and in the manufacture of pastry, sugar confectioner prepared fish dishes and ice-cream.

Under the beef variable premium a payment is made to the producer to make up any difference between the market price and the target price, up to a maximum of 8·74p per kilogram liveweight, 16·25p per kilogram deadweight.

Under the sheep variable premium a payment is made to the producer for each carcase to make up any difference between the market price and the guide price, which in the marketing year 1984-85 averages £2·25 per kilogram carcase weight.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Milk Quotas

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost to public funds of work done in 1984-85 under the dairy produce quota regulations.

Dr. Boyson: It is estimated that in 1984-85 £220,000 will be required to meet the fees and expenses of members of the Northern Ireland dairy produce quota tribunal and panels and £150,000 to recoup the Milk Marketing Board for Northern Ireland for work done on behalf of the Department of Agriculture. This expenditure will be sought through an Autumn Supplementary Estimate and pending parliamentary approval payments are being met by way of repayable advances from the Northern Ireland Civil Contingencies Fund.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether administrative responsibility for the office of the Social Security Commissioners in Northern Ireland is to be transferred to the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes, in due course, when a suitable opportunity arises to amend the relevant legislation.

CIVIL SERVICE

Northern Region

Mr. Dormand asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many Civil Service posts have been transferred to the northern region since May 1979.

Mr. Hayhoe: The dispersal programme announced on 26 July 1979 did not include any transfer of posts to the northern region. Details of posts that may have been transferred by Departments for management reasons are not held centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Norfolk

Q29. Mr. Nigel Spearing asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to make an official visit to Norfolk.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Denton

Q51. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Denton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Wales

Q70. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to pay an official visit to Wales.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

St. Helena

Q74. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit St. Helena.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

UNESCO

Q99. Mr. Jessel asked the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government expect to announce a decision on whether British membership of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation shall continue.

The Prime Minister: The Government will announce their decision by the end of this year.

HMS Conqueror (Log Book)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister who has been appointed to the board of inquiry into the alleged loss of the control room log of HMS Conqueror, and when and to whom they are to report.

The Prime Minister: The board of inquiry was composed of a captain and two commanders RN on the staff of the Commander-in-Chief Fleet to whom they reported on 16 November.

Isle of Man

Mr. Skeet asked the Prime Minister whether she will transfer responsibility for the affairs of the Isle of Man from the Home Office to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The Prime Minister: No. The Royal Commission on the constitution (1969-73), which looked at the constitutional position of the Isle of Man—and the Channel Islands—and their relationship with the United Kingdom, made no recommendations touching on the Home Secretary's role. The Isle of Man itself has not asked for the handling of its affairs to be transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 November.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 20 November.

Mr. Straw asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 20 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she is satisfied that the published unemployment statistics for the newly-designated travel-to-work areas will be sufficiently homogeneous or localised to assist Ministers to detect unemployment black spots when they are framing decisions about the designation of assisted areas; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. The Department of Employment's travel-to-work areas are the closest available approximations to self-contained labour markets covering the whole country. This makes them the best building blocks for the assisted areas map. It would not be cost effective to use regional industrial policy to solve problems of unemployment black spots in the midst of areas of relatively low unemployment. Regional industrial policy is not well suited to tackle such localised problems.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry intends to make a statement to the House shortly on regional industrial policy.

RAF (Trainer Aircraft)

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards support for companies in which Her Majesty's Government have shareholdings such as British Aerospace and Short Bros., in their attempts to sell foreign training aircraft to the Royal Air Force.

The Prime Minister: The Government's prime consideration is to obtain a cost-effective aircraft which meets the performance requirements of the Royal Air Force. A full, impartial evaluation of the four tenders is now being carried out. No distinction is being made between any of the companies on grounds of Government shareholdings.

Cardinal Hume

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with Cardinal Hume.

The Prime Minister: This was a private meeting at which Cardinal Hume told me about his recent visit to Ethiopia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has completed his review of the management and organisation of the force.

Mr. Brittan: The Commissioner has today announced his intention to make far-reaching changes in the organisation and management of the Metropolitan police. He has discussed his plans with me and I have told him that I endorse his approach and objectives.

The object of the changes will be to provide the managerial and organisational structure which will best support the force's strategy and will ensure that its resources are used in the most efficient and effective way. The present structure of 75 divisions, 24 districts, four areas and headquarters will be streamlined; the present areas and districts will be replaced by eight new areas, thus cutting out one level of command. In accordance with the Commissioner's strategy, the focus of policing will be the divisions, whose boundaries will be unchanged.

Headquarters will be reorganised and substantially reduced in size, mainly by devolving functions to divisions or the new areas.

These changes are well designed to improve the quality of service the force is able to offer Londoners, by placing the emphasis firmly on operational policing, responsive to local needs. I believe that they will also provide better value for money.

As police authority, I shall be fully consulted as the plans are progessively implemented.

Picketing

61. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide for unions encouraging mass picketing to bear the cost of policing it.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The question whether the organisers of demonstrations, of which picketing is one form, should contribute towards the cost of policing those demonstrations is being considered in the review of the Public Order Act 1936 and related legislation which my right hon. and learned Friend is conducting.

Home Defence Exercise

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he expects local authority emergency planning teams to be involved with a Ministry of Defence home defence exercise in 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. These exercises are normally directed to specific wartime duties of the armed forces and are therefore inappropriate for local authority involvement.

Chemical Warfare

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans exist in the event of a chemical attack on a military establishment in the United Kingdom for warning the local authorities in the area of the threat to the local population.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are playing a leading part at the conference on disarmament at Geneva to achieve a comprehensive verifiable ban on the production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons. In the absence of a chemical weapons ban we are actively considering how the present warning arrangements could be used for the detection and warning of the danger presented by chemical weapons and what protective measures may be taken.

We will keep the House informed of progress.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the British Broadcasting Corporation for an increase in television licence fees.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has now received an application by the BBC for increased television licence fees from April of next year. This will be carefully considered.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total cost to date of policing the mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the total costs of policing the dispute to date is not available. Up to 8 November the Home Office had paid advances of police grant and of the special payment my right hon. and learned Friend is making available to police authorities, on expenditure totalling some £89 million.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report the following information on the mining dispute (a) the number of persons convicted and the offences they committed for each police force area and (b) the number of persons remanded in custody for each police force area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information available centrally about the number of convictions for offences committed in connection with the miners' dispute relates to the period from 13 March to 13 November and is as follows:

Police force area	Number of convictions
Cleveland	43
Cumbria	5
Derbyshire	341
Durham	122
Dyfed-Powys	2
Essex	28
Greater Manchester	57
Gwent	60
Humberside	25
Kent	45
Lancashire	2
Leicestershire	34
Merseyside	77
Metropolitan	53
Northumbria	116
North Wales	23
North Yorkshire	85
Nottinghamshire	580
South Wales	114
South Yorkshire	304
Staffordshire	211
Warwickshire	52
West Yorkshire	25
Total:	2404

It is not possible from the information available centrally to provide details of the offences which resulted in these convictions. On 13 November the number of those remanded in custody was as follows:

Police force areas	Number of remands in custody
Derbyshire	5
Merseyside	1
Northumbria	1
Nottinghamshire	2
South Yorkshire	2

Entrapment

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are given in the Metropolitan police force on entrapment; and where these guidelines are published.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Metropolitan police general orders reflect guidance given in paragraph 1·92 of the Home Office "Consolidated Circular on Crime and Kindred Matters" that no police officer should counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime. A copy of the consolidated circular is in the Library of the House. However, as my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has explained to the House, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has recently issued a further police order to give this principle greater prominence in the context of orders covering the deployment of uniformed branch officers on plain clothes observation duties. The new order provides that officers selected for these duties must be briefed by a senior officer to ensure that they avoid behaviour which they could give rise to legimitate accusations that they had acted as agents provocateurs, and explains that the term agent provocateur was defined by the Royal Commission on police powers in 1928 as a person who entices another to commmit an express breach of the law which he would not otherwise have committed and then proceeds or informs against him in respect of such an offence. Metropolitan police general orders are not published.

Probation and After-care Service

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the effect on the numbers of those awaiting trial and those awaiting parole should the finance available for the probation and after-care service within an authority be reduced due to the effects of rate-capping by any whole percentage point up to 10 per cent.; and what effect this might have on the cost of the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: The information needed to answer this hypothetical question is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amendments he considers necessary to paragraph 6(2) of schedule 3 to the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 in the light of the Government's proposals for the probation and after-care service in the event of the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Mellor: Paragraph 6(2) of schedule 3 to the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 provides that the total number of persons co-opted to a probation committee is not to exceed one-third of the number of members of the committee, and prohibits the co-option of justices of the peace for any area covered by the probation area. In relation to probation committees in areas affected by the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils, the Local Government Bill will provide for co-option of elected members of local authorities, and will allow elected members of local authorities who are also justices of the peace to be co-opted under this provision. It will retain the limit of one-third on all co-opted members.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with the National Association of Probation Officers on the effects on the probation service of rate-capping legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: None. I do not accept that the operation of the Rates Act 1984 need affect the capability of the probation service to discharge its functions.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates have been made of any changes in manpower levels in the probation and after-care service which may be required to support the recommendation for more community measures for offenders in place of prison sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Standing Committee on Probation Manpower Needs, which includes members from the three organisations representing the probation service, has forecast from work load projections that an additional 100 probation officers (with supporting staff) will be needed for the service as a whole in 1985-86. That forecast has been taken into account in consideration of the Government's expenditure plans.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make arrangements to ensure that probation authorities continue to provide the required level of service in the event that they are subject to the rate-capping legislation.

Mr. Mellor: The level of staffing necessary for area probation services to provide appropriate levels of service is primarily a matter for individual probation committees. County councils are statutorily required to defray the cost of these staff. In the event of disagreement on the cost of staff other than probation officer grades, a committee or council has the right to seek my right hon. and learned Friend's determination.

Poor Box

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the use of the poor box by magistrates.

Mr. Mellor: It is the custom of some magistrates' courts to keep a poor box, financed by donations from private and charitable sources, from which to make small grants in deserving cases. The decision whether to maintain a poor box and what payments to make from it and to whom rests entirely with the individual court.

Police Car Pursuits (Public Safety)

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan police will take steps to ensure that police cars in the pursuit of car thieves do not thereby endanger the lives of other people.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that both the Metropolitan Police regulations covering the conduct of drivers of police cars and the force's driver training programmes stress the need for police drivers to exercise extreme caution, particularly in the pursuit of suspects.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish the Bill on animal experiments; if he will be publishing any supplements to the White Paper, "Scientific Procedures on Living Animals", Cmnd. 8883; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: New legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits. We are considering issuing a supplementary document to the White Paper.

Shotguns

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun licences have been (a) applied for and (b) issued in (i) the Metropolitan Police district and (ii) England and Wales during each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the total number of applications made for shotgun certificates in the Metropolitan Police district and England and Wales during the last 10 years is not available.

The numbers of shotgun certificates issued in the Metropolitan Police district over the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Number of shotgun certificates issued
1974	3,948
1975	3,466
1976	3,756
1977	3,269
1978	2,923
1979	2,908
1980	3,246
1981	3,348
1983	3,378

The information in respect of England and Wales was collected centrally for the first time in 1983 when the total number of shotgun certificates issued was 46,612.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of shotguns currently in use (a) legally and (b) illegally.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is not possible to estimate the total number of shotguns currently in use legally, because a shotgun certificate does not record the number of shotguns held. However, the number of shotgun certificates in force in England and Wales on 31 December 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, was 783,378. We have no reliable information on which to base an estimate of the number of shotguns held illegally.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been killed by the deliberate use of shotguns in (a) the Metropolitan police district and (b) England and Wales during each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information relates to offences initially recorded as homicide and is given in the following table. The figure for England and Wales is now published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 3.3 of the issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9349).

Offences initially recorded by the police as homicide in which shotguns were reported to have been used†*

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun licences were in force in (a) the Metropolitan Police district and (b) England and Wales at the end of each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information in respect of England and Wales was not regularly collected centrally before 1979. The available information is as follows:

Number of Shotgun Certificates in force on 31 December

Year	(a) Metropolitan Police	(b) England and Wales
1974	41,281	766,952
1975	30,531	—

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases shotguns have been used in the course of robberies in (a) the Metropolitan Police district and (b) England and Wales during each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the numbers of robberies recorded by the police in England and Wales in which firearms were reported to have been used is published annually by type of weapon in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". (Table 3.4 of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9349). Information for the Metropolitan Police district is given in the following table:

Segregated Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners held in Her Majesty's prisons are segregated under rule 43; at which prisons; and, of these, how many are aged under 17 years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of male convicted prisoners segregated under prison rule 43, either at their own request or for the maintenance of good order and discipline, on the latest date for which information is available is as follows:

Number of inmates segregated under prison rule 43 on 30 June 1984

I regret that information is not kept centrally on the segregation of women and unconvicted prisoners nor on the ages of male convicted prisoners segregated under prison rule 43.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has for 1984 to date as to the number of occasions in each police force when firearms were (a) used or (b) drawn (i) in cases of crime and (ii) in other cases; and if he has the same figures for the previous five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The figures for the number of occasions on which firearms were drawn from holsters are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Statistics on the issue and use of firearms by the police are collated centrally on an annual basis and figures for 1984 are therefore not yet available. The other information requested is given in the following table:

Number of occasions on which police officers used (ie fired) firearms 1979-1983 in England and Wales (excluding use for training purposes)

Juvenile Prisoners

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles are currently held in Her Majesty's prisons; if he will give a breakdown of their ages and the locations of the prisons involved; and if he will give the comparable figures for each of the past five years where applicable.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information readily available is given in the following table:

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the deadline for responses to his consultation paper of 20 September on local authority support for the voluntary sector in the event of the Greater London council being abolished; and after which date responses will cease to be considered;

(2) if his consultation document of 20 September on the Government's proposals for local authority support for the voluntary sector in the event of the Greater London council being abolished has been sent to the Association of London Authorities;

(3) what action he intends to take if the London boroughs do not meet together prior to replying to his consultation document of 20 September on local authority support for the voluntary sector in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Mr. Waddington: No deadline was set for responses to the consultation paper issued by the Department on 20 September. The document was not sent to the Association of London Authorities, but copies went to the Greater London council and to the councils of all London boroughs, that is to all the members of this association. The Department would welcome a response from the association to the document or a request for a meeting about it. I understand that representatives of all the London boroughs and the City will be meeting on 12 December in the normal way to consider grants to be made collectively to voluntary organisations in 1985-86 and other matters. Their comments on the consultation paper would also be welcome.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Victoria and Hammersmith and Fulham Health Authorities

Mr. Martin Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a decision has been made on the proposals put forward by the North-West Thames health authority to amalgamate Victoria and Hammersmith and Fulham health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following a number of meetings with groups representing local interests and careful consideration of all aspects of the proposals, we have decided to approve in principle the proposal put forward by the North-West Thames regional health authority that these two health authorities should be amalgamated to form a new district health authority to be known as Riverside.

In taking this step we have been above all concerned for the interests of patients. The rapidly reducing population and comparatively high levels of provision of acute hospital services in this part of London mean that significant changes are needed in the pattern of health care provision. We are convinced that the best way to safeguard patients' interests while the necessary changes are made is to create a single health authority to look at the problems of the area as a whole. The new authority will be able to liaise more effectively with the recently created Charing Cross and Westminster medical school. This will ensure that high quality and innovative medical care continues to be provided together with the provision of effective medical education. At the same time we will expect the new authority to strengthen the management of joint planning with the local authorities and family practitioner committees responsible for other aspects of care and treatment.

Even after this amalgamation the new authority will be smaller than many in terms of population and geographical area. The necessary legislative changes will be laid before the House shortly for consideration. I am confident that the creation of a new single authority to manage the health services currently managed by Victoria and Hammersmith and Fulham health authorities offers considerable opportunities for improving the quality and planning of these services in the years ahead.

COMA (Official Secrets Act)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date and for what reason members of the COMA and of its sub-committees, were asked to sign the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. John Patten: Members of the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy have been asked to sign the Official Secrets Act since the inception of the committee in 1957. When a panel or sub-committee is formed its members are also asked to do so. Members of COMA and its panels and sub-committees are required to provide disinterested scientific advice to the Government on issues, some connected with commercial matters, on which it may be appropriate to preserve confidentiality.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the reason for the increase of over 7 per cent. in housing benefit non-dependant deductions between April and November 1984; and how much revenue he expects to raise by this increase in 1984-85 and in a full year.

Mr. Whitney: The non-dependant deductions in the housing benefit and supplementary benefit schemes are being increased this month in line with the annual movement to May of the housing sub-component of the retail price index. There will be a corresponding increase in the supplementary benefit non-householder's contribution. These changes reflect normal uprating arrangements rather than cost saving measures.

The broad estimate of the net cost of not uprating the non-dependant deductions and non-householder contribution is approximately £5 million in 1984-85; approximately £15 million in a full year.

Health Authorities (Appointees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will place in the Library the biographical details held by his Department of appointees to regional and district health authorities.

Mr. John Patten: No. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Pharmaceuticals (Patent Life)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the pharmaceutical industry regarding the possibility of extending the patent life of products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This matter has been raised with me by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry. We are considering the suggestion in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Drugs (Generic Substitution)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the pharmaceutical industry regarding the Government proposal for generic substitution of tranquilizers and sedatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Individual companies are in touch with us and are meeting our officials. I expect to meet the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry next month.

Spinal Muscular Atrophy

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has of the causes, and number of cases, of the group of diseases known as spinal muscular atrophy; what research is being conducted, and where, into its causes; and how much money is being spent on research into the disease.

Mr. John Patten: The conditions known collectively as spinal muscular atrophy appear to be genetic in origin. The incidence is thought to be in the region of one in 5,000 to 6,000 births. I understand that clinical research into spinal muscular atrophy is being undertaken at the Hammersmith hospital. We do not have details of other research specifically into these conditions or of expenditure. Much fundamental research is, however, being conducted into factors determining normal nerve cell maturation and this is expected to lead to a better understanding of the mechanisms involved in spinal muscular atrophy.

Hospital Beds

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish a table showing for each health authority the number of hospital beds temporarily closed and the number which have been closed for a period exceeding three months, and also a list of temporary closures which have been outstanding for more than 12 months.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue instructions to health authorities defining a maximum period for temporary closure of hospital beds, after which the full procedure set out in health circular HSC(IS)207 must be followed if the temporary closure is to continue.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to do so. We expect authorities to follow the full consultation procedures once there is a possibility of their wishing to make a temporary closure permanent.

Community Health Councils

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each district health authority the number of occasions during an appropriate period on which it has had recourse to the provision for urgent action set out in paragraph 20 of the National Health Service (Community Health Councils) Regulations 1973;

(2) whether, on any occasion, an urgent situation has arisen within the terms of the National Health Service (Councils) Community Health Regulations 1973, as a result of reckless or negligent failure of a health authority to consult a community health council at an earlier time; and what action he intends to take to seek to ensure that no such circumstances occur in future.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect information on urgent closures centrally. We have advised health authorities that no permanent closures should take place without full consultation.

Women Patients (Vaginal Examinations)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether women patients who have given their consent to an operation are made aware that medical students on gynaecology attachments may conduct vaginal examinations whilst women are unconscious.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 23 October, at column 835. As with any examination or treatment, medical students should conduct vaginal examinations on women who are unconscious only if the patient had earlier consented to their involvement.

Air Call plc

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he is satisfied with the service provided to the National Health Service by the doctors' deputising service, Air Call plc;

(2) if he is satisfied with the qualifications of the staff employed by Air Call plc.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for each family practitioner committee, on the advice of its deputising services sub-committee, to satisfy itself as to the standard of care provided by general practitioner deputising services operating in its locality.

Doctors (North Tyneside)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors in north Tyneside have the maximum number of National Health Service patients on their lists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: One.

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in north Tyneside are unable to be placed on a doctors' panel.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None, so far as I am aware. Any persons experiencing difficulties in gaining acceptance on a general medical practitioner's list may seek the assistance of the local family practitioner committee who will allocate them to a doctor.

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements are being made to recruit more doctors in north Tyneside.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any particular difficulties over recruitment of doctors in north Tyneside. So far as general medical practitioners are concerned, this is a matter for the medical practices committee, which considers north Tyneside to be adequately doctored.

Opticians

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to further protect the title of optician by making it illegal to use the title of "qualified optician (unregistered)".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The protection afforded to the title "optician" by section 3 of the Health and Social Security Act 1984 only came into effect on 1 November and should be quite adequate.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much the National Health Service spent on mobile cervical screening in each year from 1980 to 1983; and what is the projected figure for 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect information centrally about health authorities' expenditure on this service. At national level, we make an annual grant towards the central administration expenses of the Women's National Cancer Control Campaign, a voluntary organisation which runs five mobile cervical screening units.

Publications (Departmental Expenditure)

Mr. Crouch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money is spent by his Department on each of the following publications: the "British National Formulary", the "Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin", the "Adverse Reactions Bulletin" and the "Prescribers Journal".

Mr. John Patten: The "Prescribers Journal" is a departmental publication: the estimated costs of production and distribution are some £100,000 in the current year. Expenditure on the other publications is expected to amount to about £1,300,000 in 1984-85.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the offices of his Department in which his Policy Inspectorate's inquiry into single payments for furniture was carried out.

Mr. Whitney: The following offices were visited during the course of the inquiry into single payments for furniture:

Chelsea ILO
Bloomsbury ILO
Wandsworth ILO
Stevenage ILO
Peterborough ILO
Southampton ILO
Weston Super Mare ILO
Nottingham (Station Street) ILO
Barnsley (East) ILO
Leeds (North) ILO
Sunderland (South) ILO
Liverpool (Huyton) ILO
Rochdale ILO
Glasgow (Anniesland) ILO
Inverness ILO
Newport (Gwent) ILO
Manchester (Cheetham) ILO
Coatbridge ILO

Information was also obtained from a further 15 offices which were not visited.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the changes to heating addition paid to pensioners on supplementary benefit which will take effect from 29 November.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend on 18 June, at columns 20-22.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available on the numbers of young supplementary benefit claimants moving into accommodation where they are treated as boarders.

Mr. Newton: The available information on numbers of people claiming supplementary benefit as boarders is as follows:

	December 1982	December 1983
16-17	4,300	6,700
18-20	8,500	13,300
21-25	10,400	17,200

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry: 1983 figures are provisional.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to make as a result of (a) changes in the way supplementary benefit board and lodging ceilings are set, (b) restrictions on local and lodging payments to young supplementary benefit claimants and (c) changes in the way supplementary benefit residential care and nursing home ceilings are set.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Dentists

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to review his Department's definition of over-prescribing by dentists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are concerned that a small minority of dentists may be overprescribing and are considering urgently what steps to take to deal with the matter.

NHS (Private Contractors)

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many district health authorities used private contractors for (a) domestic cleaning, (b) catering and (c) laundry services in 1983-84;

(2) what proportion of total expenditure was spent by the National Health Service on contracted out services for (a) domestic cleaning, (b) catering and (c) laundry services in 1983-84;

(3) how much has been spent on contracted-out services in the National Health Service during 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The annual accounts of health authorities in England — excluding the Prescription Pricing Authority, Dental Estimates Board and special health authorities providing NHS central services — submitted to the Department for 1983-84 give the following provisional figures:

(a) total expenditure on all contracted-out services was £207·3 million;
(b) 2 per cent., 0·2 per cent. and 9·7 per cent. of total expenditure on domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services respectively was incurred under external contracts;
(c) all the 192 district health authorities used private contractors to some extent for domestic cleaning, 38 for catering and 179 for laundry.

Operations (Basildon and Thurrock)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many operations were performed in the Basildon and Thurrock health authority area, in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Figures on numbers of operations performed are not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the district health authority direct for this information.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further payments he intends making under the terms of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 to (a) whooping cough vaccine damage of children and (b) other victims of vaccine damage.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to alter the terms of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act.

NHS (Treatment Costs)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the weekly basic cost of treating a patient in a National Health Service hospital and (b) the weekly basic cost of treatment in a National Health Service specialist alcoholism treatment unit.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the cost of specialist alcoholism treatment units is not collected centrally. In 1982-83 the average cost per inpatient week of psychiatric (mental illness) hospitals in England, in which such units are usually situated, was £217·00. The 1982-83 weekly inpatient costs in other types of hospital were as follows:

Acute (over 300 beds)	603·05
Acute (101-300 beds)	553·07
Acute (51-100 beds)	466·20
Acute (1-50 beds)	332·64
Mainly Acute	474·60
Partly Acute	407·68
Mainly Long Stay	310·24
Long Stay	247·80
Geriatric	238·07
Pre-Convalescent	224·07
Convalescent	205·10
Rehabilitation	234·15
Maternity	612·78
Psychiatric (Mental Handicap)	191·73
Orthopaedic	510·72
Tuberculosis and Chest	421·68
Tuberculosis, Chest and Isolation	385·49

Chiropody

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the number of graduates from the state approved schools of chiropody compares with the target figures listed in the answers of 23 May 1980, Official Report, column 464, and 3 June 1980, Official Report, column 621.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The answers to which my hon. Friend refers looked forward to a target increase of 50 per cent. over the 1978 output level. This was reached in 1983 when the United Kingdom output of chiropody students was 52 per cent. higher than in 1978.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many students graduated from each of the state approved schools of chiropody in 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of students who graduated from each school was as follows:

	1982	1983
ENGLAND
Chelsea School of Chiropody	44	51
London Foot Hospital	24	26
Birmingham School of Chiropody	23	25
School of Chiropody, Durham	16	19
School of Chiropody, Huddersfield	15	16
School of Chiropody, Plymouth	—	15
Northern College of Chiropody	61	66
The Sussex School of Chiropody	—	—
SCOTLAND
Edinburgh Foot Clinic and School of Chiropody	15	18
Glasgow School of Chiropody	40	34
WALES
Cardiff School of Chiropody	27	25
NORTHERN IRELAND
School of Chiropody, Belfast	11	19
Total	276	314

The first intake of the Plymouth school took its final examination in 1983 and that of the Sussex School in 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the average numbers of patients awaiting chiropody treatment through the National Health Service in each of the last four years; and what was the average time of waiting in each of those years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally. However, we know that the number of patients treated by chiropodists through the National Health Service in England rose by about 11 per cent. between 1980 and 1983.

Carers

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the total number of people who regularly care for a disabled, sick or frail relative at home; and how many of them receive the invalid care allowance.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, 9,510 men and single women were in receipt of invalid care allowance for caring for a severely disabled person in receipt of attendance allowance for 35 hours or more a week. We have no information on which to base a reliable estimate of the numbers of relatives who are caring for people but who do not satisfy the conditions for invalid care allowance, or who might qualify and do not claim.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of children under the age of 18 years who regularly care for a disabled, sick or frail relative at home.

Mr. Newton: We are not aware of any information which would enable a reliable estimate to be made.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the saving to the state by people who care for (a) elderly, (b) disabled, (c) sick and (d) frail relatives at home; and what is the total paid each year since its inception of the invalid care allowance.

Mr. Newton: The cost of caring for an elderly, sick, disabled or frail person in the community varies considerably according to the extent of the services which may be required. It is not possible therefore to say whether, in general, the cost of community care as opposed to hospital or residential care is more or less expensive. The benefit cost of invalid care allowance in each year since it was introduced is as follows:

Year	Cost £ million
1977-78	3
1978-79	4
1979-80	4
1980-81	5
1981-82	6
1982-83	8
1983-84	10
1984-85	*11

* Estimate.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial assistance his Department gives to the Association of Carers.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has made grants to the association under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 since 1982-83. £14,500 was paid last year and a grant of £20,000 has been approved for this financial year. Although this year's grant was not approved until November, interim payments of £5,000 were made in June and October.

Home Helps

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health and social service departments provide home helps on a 24-hour a day basis; and if he will list their names in the Official Report.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities are responsible for providing home help services. These are not normally provided on a 24-hour a day basis, but authorities are increasingly recognising that some extended home help outside normal hours is needed by some people at periods of particular stress or at certain key times of the day. There are a growing number of special schemes to provide such a service. The information I have about them is not comprehensive and there are many different types of scheme, some of which are of an experimental nature. I am, therefore, writing to the right hon. Member to indicate where the available information is published.

Chrysoidine Dye

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his review of the possible cancerous effects on humans using chrysoidine dye has been completed; if he has examined the report "Maggots Dyed with Chrysoidine; a Possible Risk to Anglers", in the October 1984 edition of the British Medical Journal, volume 289, a copy of which has been sent to him; if he will take this report into account in view of the suggested link between the use of chrysoidine dye by anglers and cases of bladder cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has advised on the likelihood of harmful effects from chrysoidine on a number of occasions. It continues to look at all reports about the effects on human health. The report that the right hon. Member refers to will be drawn to the committee's attention at its meeting next month.

Retirement

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will review the position of a male employee accepting retirement before 65 years in respect of his national insurance contributions and his entitlements.

Mr. Whitney: We have already made provision to protect a man's contribution record for retirement pension and other benefits should he retire early and stop working. With effect from 6 April 1983, a man gets automatic credits for the tax year in which he reaches age 60 and for the subsequent four years, providing he is normally resident in this country.

The national insurance contributions and entitlements of male employees accepting retirement before 65 years will be considered in the light of the findings of the inquiry into provision for retirement.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to facilitate earlier retirement in the public and private sectors, respectively.

Mr. Newton: Policy on this matter is among the issues currently under consideration by the inquiry into provision for retirement, whose conclusions will be taken into account in formulating Government proposals for social security as a whole.

Heart Disease

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional funding has been made available to the Health Education Council for the prevention of heart disease; what voluntary organisations are involved in the prevention of heart disease; what funding the voluntary organisations receive; and what increase has been made available following the Coma report.

Mr. John Patten: A major programme attacking the problem of cardiovascular disease through concerted local action is being undertaken in Wales by the Health Education Council within resources available (£9·1 million in 1984-85). This is intended as a pilot for future programmes in the rest of the country.

A number of voluntary organisations are concerned directly or indirectly with the prevention of cardiovascular disease and many do not seek funding from the Department. Our current grant of £136,000 to Action on Smoking and Health represents an increase of 12 per cent. over 1983-84. Our grant to the coronary prevention group of £5,000 this year represents a 43 per cent. increase.

Milk

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the reasons why whole fat milk and not semi-skimmed or skimmed milk is being recommended for children by his Department.

Mr. John Patten: The only recommendation on this subject of which we are aware relates to children under the age of five, and is contained in the recent report on diet and cardiovascular disease from the committee on medical aspects of food policy. The report advises families who elect to switch to semi-skimmed or skimmed milk to continue to provide whole cows' milk for children under five, since in the light of current scientific evidence such children usually obtain a substantial proportion of dietary energy from this source. I understand this advice is based on the consideration that that well-established benefits of whole cows' milk to children under five outweigh possible future hazards.

Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to control multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus in British hospitals; how many deaths were caused by this organism in each of the past four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The division of hospital infection of the public health laboratory service, and other interested parties in the NHS, are taking a close interest in this area and are monitoring the situation with care. Deaths caused by multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus are not notifiable and precise figures are not available. However, there is no evidence that the number of deaths caused by this organism is large.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are likely to be any delays in the payment of severe disablement allowance to all entitled to receive it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: All those already drawing non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension will automatically transfer to severe disablement allowance from 29 November, so there will be no break in payment. For others, the timing of the start of payments will depend on how far in advance of the 29th week of incapacity the disabled person makes his claim, especially where a medical examination is required. For this reason the explanatory leaflet on severe disablement allowance encourages claimants to make their application after they have been incapable of work for 15 weeks.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many additional staff are being employed by his Department to deal with the extra work involved in introducing the severe disablement allowance; what the full cost of this staffing is likely to be; how many officers have been transferred from other sections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Food Additives

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what action he intends to take (a) to inform the public of the extent to which damage to health may be caused by certain food additives and (b) to introduce further legislation to prevent the use of additives that are toxic to humans, carcinogenic or otherwise damaging;

(2) what study he is making of the effect on health of food additives, including preservatives applied to meat, fish and cheese products and colourings and flavourings.

Mr. John Patten: All food sold or offered for sale in England and Wales is subject to the provisions of the Food Act 1984, which requires, amongst other things, that no substances shall be added to food so as to render it harmful to the health of the general consumer. In addition, regulations which apply under the Act control particular classes of additive or the composition of particular foodstuffs and list the substances which are permitted, specifying where appropriate the conditions under which they may be used and maximum levels of use. The Government are advised on matters relating to additives in food by the food advisory committee. The FAC seeks the advice of the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment regarding potential health hazards. In making its recommendations to the FAC, the COT takes account of all the available toxicological evidence, including the fact that some people may suffer adverse reaction from the ingestion of a particular substance.

The use of permitted additives is kept under continuous review and the Government maintain a close watch on new reports of animal toxicity or of ill-effects in people attributed to food additives which have been approved for use. Where appropriate, such reports are referred to our independent expert advisory committees for their views. Certain additives may adversely affect some individuals with metabolic disorders or those who are particularly sensitive. These individuals constitute only a very small proportion of the population and are usually aware of their sensitivity. Under the Food Labelling Regulations 1984, all additives, except flavourings which present special labelling problems, must be specifically identified by name or serial number in the ingredients list on pre-packaged foods by 1 July 1986. Thus people will be able to avoid foods containing additives that they know will affect them adversely.

Infectious Diseases Units

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the current provision of secure infectious diseases units within the National Health Service; and whether he has any plans to vary their number.

Mr. John Patten: We are satisfied with the current level of provision. We have no plans to vary the number of units and would expect to be consulted on any proposals for change.

Children (Health Services)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the departmental study of health services for children announced in Cmnd. 9298; by whom the study is being conducted; and when the final report is expected.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 9 November at columns 47-48.

Kidneys

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many National Health Service patients have received transplants of kidneys imported from the United States of America; and at what costs these were supplied;

(2) what new initiatives he has to encourage more United Kingdom citizens to become kidney donors.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Dental Fees

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how long the experimental dental capitation fee system will continue before he expects to make an assessment of it and recommendations arising from it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The dental capitation experiment is being carried out in two stages. A small pilot study lasting 12 months began on 1 October this year and will pave the way for a major controlled trial lasting two years. It is not yet possible to estimate accurately when the final evaluation of the experiment will have been completed.

Smoking-related Diseases

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died each year from 1974 to 1984 due to smoking-related diseases.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Children (Smoking)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to discourage children from smoking.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are already actively attacking the problem. Earlier this year our grant to the Health Education Council was increased by £½ million in order to finance additional anti-smoking campaigns aimed particularly at young people. A new television campaign aimed at families is planned for the new year. The maximum fine for illegally selling cigarettes to children has recently been increased, and we have provided guidelines to retailers aimed at ensuring that the law is properly observed. Earlier this year a leaflet drawing attention to the health hazards of smoking was sent to schools throughout the country. We shall remain alert to future opportunities for Government action in this area.

Alcohol

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take to curb alcohol consumption.

Mr. John Patten: The Department is not primarily concerned with the overall level of alcohol consumption but with problems arising from and the prevention of alcohol misuse. In regard to the latter I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 31 October to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) at column 1085.

Nicorette

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will permit doctors to prescribe Nicorette for patients who wish to give up smoking.

Mr. John Patten: Medical opinion on the value of Nicorette in general practice remains very divided. The advisory committee on borderline substances considers all anti-smoking remedies. It has advised the Government and the medical profession that the value of Nicorette in the normal circumstances of general practice is unproven and has recommended that it should not be prescribed.

Civil Defence Planning

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent current civil defence planning allows for the existence of isolation hospitals and secure infectious disease units in each region of the United Kingdom to cope with the possible outbreak of infectious disease following the use of chemical or biological weapons.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the number of abortions performed in England and Wales to resident girls aged 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 years for each of the years from 1969 to 1983; and if he will also show the rate of abortions performed on these age groups per 1,000 girls.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 19 November 1984, c. 71]: The information requested is in the table.

Legal abortions: Numbers and rates per 1,000 population, girls aged 11-15, 1969-83, England and Wales residents

Doctors (Prescriptions)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will conduct a survey into the reasons why items prescribed by doctors are not dispensed by chemists.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 386]: The survey suggested would serve no useful purpose, since the arrangements for prescription charge exemption ensure no one need be deprived of necessary medication on financial grounds.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentre Network

10. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he expects any changes in the size of the jobcentre network to occur.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. If the proposals for the employment service, shortly to be considered by the Manpower Services Commission, are accepted, the number of jobcentres will increase to 1,065—the largest number there has ever been.

Long-term Unemployment

12. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Government are taking to tackle the problem of long-term unemployment.

37. Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to tackle long-term unemployment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The community programme is funded to provide 130,000 places for the long-term unemployed on temporary job opportunities which improve their employment prospects and provide practical benefits for the community. In addition, up to 50,000 entrants annually are to receive some training as part of the Government's adult training strategy.

Adult Training

14. Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the adult training campaign to be launched.

32. Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the adult training campaign.

Mr. Tom King: This morning I joined other ministerial colleagues, the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission and the director-general of the CBI to launch the adult training campaign.

The purpose of the campaign is to achieve a real change in attitudes to the importance of training at all levels.

31. Mr. Baldrey asked the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives the Government are taking to stimulate adult training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's adult training strategy encompasses a number of initiatives to stimulate adult training. In his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) earlier, my right hon. Friend referred to this morning's launch of the adult training campaign. Action is being taken to ensure that resources available to the Manpower Services Commission are redirected to support training more closely related to employer's needs and to stimulate employer's own training efforts. Changes are being introduced into our adult training programmes to test new approaches to job-related training and provide further help for unemployed people who need training at a more basic level. Encouraging progress is also being made with another new programme, run jointly by the Manpower Services Commission and the Education Departments, which supports local collaboration between employers and training providers to define training needs and explore possible ways of meeting them. To date, nearly 90 individual projects have been approved. We have also recently issued a consultation paper on a proposed experimental training loans scheme which will give individuals more chance to invest in their own training and which would involve the Government sharing the loan with existing lending institutions; £5 million has been set aside for 1985-86 which could benefit some 10,000 adults.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for two years or more to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 11 October, the number of claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for two years or more was 725,989.

23. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 50 years or over have been unemployed for more then 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is available in the House of Commons Library.

24. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the number of persons in employment and the equivalent figure for the same period 12 months previously.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest estimates are for June 1984 and these, together with figures for earlier dates, were published in table 1.1 of the labour market data section of the October 1984 issue of Employment Gazette. A copy of the Employment Gazette is in the Library.

25. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the total number of women who are employed full-time and part-time outside their own home; and how this figures compares with 10 years before.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest estimates are for Great Britain for June 1984 when the numbers of females in full-time and part-time employment were 4,981,000 and 4,177,000, respectively. The corresponding numbers in June 1974 were 5,512,000 full-time and 3,421,000 part-time.

26. Mr. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been registered unemployed for 12 months or more.

34. Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of unemployment; and what are the numbers involved.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is available in the House of Commons Library.

27. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present number of people who have been registered unemployed for two years or more; and what actions the Government are taking to reduce this figure.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is in the House of Commons Library. The principal action we are taking to help the long-term unemployed is to maintain our economic policies, which are the best guarantee of sustainable growth in output and jobs in the long term. In the meantime, help is available through the community programme which is funded to provide 130,000 temporary job opportunities.

36. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about present levels of unemployment in Lambeth.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are concerned about the level of unemployment in Lambeth, and a substantial number of people in the area are benefiting from our special employment and training measures. Lambeth's particular problems are recognised by its designation as an inner city partnership with a budget of £13·5 million for 1984-85. Sustainable employment depends on a healthy economy and competitive industry. Our policies are directed to this end and we continue to look for ways of building on what has been achieved so far.

60. Mr. Heffer asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of unemployed on Merseyside and in Liverpool; what are the numbers of youth unemployed in the areas concerned; and what steps he is taking to reduce the numbers by creating jobs.

Mr. Alan Clark: The numerical information the hon. Member requests is in the House of Commons Library, as was explained in the letter sent to him on 19 October 1984.

Merseyside benefits from a great deal of Government assistance to encourage industrial development and increase employment. Significant numbers of new jobs have also been created in the area by measures such as the enterprise allowance scheme, which has recently been extended, and the young workers scheme, which is specifically designed to help young people into jobs.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of (a) the employed population and (b) the unemployed population, is in travel-to-work areas where the rate of unemployment in October was (i) above 24 per cent., (ii) above 20 per cent., (iii) above 17 per cent. and (iv) above 15 per cent.;

(2) what proportion of (a) the employed population and (b) the unemployed population was in the old travel-to-work areas where the rate of unemployment in August was (i) above 17 per cent., (ii) above 20 per cent., (iii) above 24 per cent. and (iv) above 15 per cent.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 49]: Following is the available information in respect of estimates of employees in employment from the 1981 census of employment and unemployed claimants at the dates specified.

Percentages of total employees and total unemployed in travel-to-work areas by range of unemployment rates—United Kingdom

Range of unemployment rates	Old travel-to-work areas		New travel-to-work areas
	Employees	Unemployed August 1984	Employees	Unemployed October 1984
Over 24 per cent.	0·5	1·3	1·1	2·6
Over 20 per cent.	4·3	8·2	7·5	13·4
Over 17 per cent.	11·1	18·7	20·9	32·0
Over 15 per cent.	28·0	41·0	32·3	45·9

Note: The two sets of figures for the old and new travel-to-work areas are not fully comparable because the level of unemployment was higher in October than in August. Also the denominators used to calculate unemployment rates relate to 1978 for the old travel-to-work areas, but 1983 for the new ones.

Wages Inspectors

16. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the present number of wages inspectors; and what were the corresponding figures in 1982, 1980 and 1978.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At present there are 120 posts for outdoor wages inspectors. The corresponding figures were 153 in 1978, 177 in 1980 and 120 in 1982.

Trainees (Prospects)

17. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Employment, what proposals he has to assist those aged under 18 years who have completed a one-year Manpower Services Commission scheme and who are unable to secure employment or return to full-time education or training.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The youth training scheme has proved a success in helping young people to find work or move into further training. Furthermore, the young workers scheme assists in reducing unemployment among young people through promoting more realistic wage levels.

Disablement Resettlement Officers

18. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many disablement resettlement officers are currently employed by his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are currently around 450 disablement resettlement officers.

Industrial Democracy

20. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government are pursuing to encourage greater industrial democracy in British industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government are convinced of the benefits to employers and employees alike of good employee involvement practices and take every suitable opportunity to encourage the voluntary adoption and development of appropriate arrangements.

The Government hope that section 1 of the Employment Act 1982, which requires companies with more than 250 employees to include in their annual directors' report a statement of their employee involvement arrangements, will give a stimulus by ensuring that the matter is considered at board level, thus encouraging companies to review, and, where appropriate, improve their existing practice.

Manufacturing Industry

21. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers of people employed in manufacturing industry at the present time; and how this figure compares with this month in 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest estimate is for Great Britain for September 1984 when the number of employees in employment in manufacturing industries was 5,515,000. The corresponding number in September 1979 was 7,129,000.

National Insurance Contributions

22. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number currently employed at a salary level below the minimum for paying national insurance contributions; and how the number compares with five years ago.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Precise information is not available. Evidence from the "New Earnings Survey" and other data suggests that in April 1984 about 2·75 million employees had gross weekly earnings below the limit for national insurance purposes. Virtually all of these would be in part-time employment. In 1979 the comparable figure is estimated to have been about 2·25 million.

Secret Ballots

28. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied that employers are making full use of legislation which requires secret ballots to precede strike action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for employers themselves to decide whether or not to institute legal proceedings against trade unions which fail to hold ballots before industrial action. However, the fact that three employers have done so within seven weeks of the relevant provisions coming into force should lead trade unions to think very carefully before putting their funds at risk by embarking on industrial action without giving their members the chance to vote in a secret and properly conducted ballot.

Private Sector Employment

29. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he proposes to take in the current Session of Parliament to remove barriers to employment in the private sector.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sustainable employment in the private sector depends on a healthy economy and competitive industry. Our policies will continue to be directed towards this end, and towards improving the operation of the labour market. We will continue to seek effective means of building on our achievements to date, and, in common with other Departments, the Department is participating in a broad scrutiny of legislation and administrative processes with the aim of relieving the business community of unnecessary restrictions and regulations.

Youth Training Scheme

30. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training scheme trainees have found work after their youth training year.

45. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of young people leaving the youth training scheme without a job.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Comprehensive information on the destinations of youngsters leaving the youth training scheme is not available. However, a recent sample survey of 3,500 young people in nine Manpower Services Commission areas who left individual programmes within the scheme between 1 April and 31 July 1984 showed that 58 per cent. of those leavers responding went into employment, six per cent. went into training or further education and 34 per cent. were unemployed. One fifth of this last group indicated an intention of going into full-time education or training. Most — 64 per cent. — of the young people responding had left before completing a full year on the scheme, but subsequent surveys of destinations will cover larger proportions of youngsters who complete a full year. A copy of the paper containing the results of the sample survey has been placed in the Library.

42. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the youth training scheme with respect to its equal opportunities policies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes.

44. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will increase the allowance paid to youngsters on the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

56. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people were on youth training schemes in Tameside and Stockport on 1 October.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 30 September 1984 the numbers of young people in training on the youth training scheme in the local authority districts of Tameside and Stockport were 1,224 and 1,575, respectively.

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by industry, the numbers and percentages of trainees placed in permanent jobs on completion of the first year of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Manual Workers (Wages)

33. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to guarantee the continuance of the existing right of manual workers to be paid in cash.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Government's policy on this matter was set out in the legislative proposals published by my right hon. Friend and placed in the Library on Wednesday 31 October. These matters are best left to be determined by employers, their employees and, where appropriate, their representatives.

Jobcentres

35. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he expects any jobcentres to close as a result of the Manpower Services Commission's consultations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In eight towns two jobcentres will be merged into one, but in 82 other places new jobcentres will be opened.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment what capital sum he expects to be invested in new technology in the jobcentre network.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The present intentions are for an investment of up to £19·5 million in new technology throughout the jobcentre network between now and March 1988.

Interest Rates and Inflation

38. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department calculates the effect upon employment in the United Kingdom of a rise in interest rates or rising inflation.

Mr. Alan Clark: A rise in interest rates may be caused by a number of different factors, both domestic and in the world economy. Its effect on employment would depend on its exact cause and consequent effects throughout the economy. Employment effects will vary as other factors vary, and so will the method of analysis. A general estimate of the effect of a rise in interest rate is therefore impossible.

Similar considerations imply that it is not meaningful to consider the effects of inflation on employment without specifying the exact cause and assumptions about the behaviour of the rest of the economy.

Work Place Ballots

39. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the incidence of work place ballots under the provisions of the Employment Act 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Trade Union Act 1984 deals with ballots for the election of trade union principal executive committees, ballots before industrial action and ballots on trade union political funds. The first and third of these provisions will come into force respectively on 1 October and 31 March 1985. The provisions governing ballots before industrial action came into force on 26 September this year. There is no requirement to notify the Department about ballots. One ballot has so far been held as a direct result of an employer seeking an injunction under the Trade Union Act. In that case, I understand that the ballot was conducted at the work place and was fully in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

Community Programme

40. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will expand the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend on 30 July, at columns 121-22.

48. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will meet the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Manpowrer Services Commission frequently to discuss many matters, including the community programme.

49. Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is satisfied that recent changes in eligibility rules for the community programme will provide help for those most in need.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. These charges will ensure that those most in need both of a job and of financial help will enjoy priority on the programme.

53. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the present structure of the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes, although we are continually seeking means of improving the effectiveness and efficiency of the programme.

Part-time Jobs

41. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many female part-time jobs have been created in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing the levels of employees in employment at different dates. Between June 1983 and June 1984 the estimated numbers of females in part-time employment in Great Britain increased by 165,000.

Preston

43. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to reduce the level of unemployment in the Preston travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are concerned about the level of unemployment in Preston, and a substantial number of people in the area are benefiting from our special employment and training measures. Sustainable employment depends on a healthy economy and competitive industry. Our policies are directed to this end and we continue to look for ways of building on what has been achieved so far. One important effect on firms' competitiveness is the level of wages, and the Government believe that moderating the growth in real earnings will have a significant impact on unemployment in Preston and throughout the country.

Job Creation

46. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department intends to take to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) on 14 November, at column 262.

58. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs are estimated to have been created in the last 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: Numbers of new jobs created are not available. Net changes in the number of jobs may be calculated by comparing employment estimates for different dates. The net increase in employment in Great Britain over the 12 months to June 1984—the latest estimate—was 247,000.

Mr. Miscampbell asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in Lancashire in each of the last three.

Mr. Alan Clark: No information is collected on numbers of jobs created. Net changes in employment are available, but, at county level, only for those dates when censuses of employment are conducted. The latest figures are from the June 1978 and the following September 1981 censuses of employment and show a net change of minus 28,700 employees in Lancashire in that period.

Technical and Vocational Education

47. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next convene a meeting of all interested parties to discuss technical and vocational education among 14 to 18-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission, which is answerable to Ministers of this Department, is advised on the operation of the technical and vocational education initiative by a national steering group. The membership of the group includes educational interests and representatives from local authority associations and industry and commerce. It last met on 19 November.

"Training for Jobs"

50. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will meet local authority education authorities to discuss "Training for Jobs".

Mr. Peter Morrison: We have at present no further plans to do so.

Job Sharing

51. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has received from the Trades Union Congress for a reduction in unemployment through schemes for job sharing.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have received no proposals from the Trades Union Congress designed to bring about a reduction in unemployment through job sharing schemes. We currently operate two experimental schemes—the job splitting and part-time job release schemes—which are designed to encourage the provision of more part-time jobs for the unemployed. As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November, at column 444, both schemes will now remain open for applications for a further year with improved rules to encourage take-up.

Jobcentres (Placements)

52. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people he expects to have been placed in jobs by the jobcentre network in the current year; and how this compares with the previous years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is estimated that jobcentres will place 1·9 million people in jobs during the 1984-85 operational year. Information for the previous years is as follows:

Year ending	Placings
5 March 1982	1,496,766
4 March 1983	1,580,311
2 March 1984	1,820,724

There is likely to have been a substantial number of people who found jobs other than through the jobcentres. Nationally it is estimated that about a quarter of all engagements are made through jobcentres.

Skillcentres

54. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and how many women are currently being trained in skillcentres.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In September 1984, 9,971 people were in training in skillcentres. I regret that separate information on the numbers of men and women in skillcentres is not readily available.

Training

55. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest figure for the Government's expenditure on training for the current financial year.

59. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate for Government expenditure in the current financial year on training measures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Supply Estimate for training provided by the Manpower Services Commission for 1984-85 is £1,179 million including administration costs. Current forecasts indicate that actual expenditure is likely to be close to this figure.

Professional Executive Register

57. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs were placed with the Professional Executive Register in each of the past five years; if he will give the corresponding figures for those jobs filled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested for each of the past five years ended 31 March, is as follows:

Year	*Total placings into employment	Net cost per placing†	Total orders notified‡
1979-80	6,696	514·23	16,878
1980-81	4,938	1,134·96	14,943
1981-82	7,088	690·52	17,950
1982-83	7,717	548·83	17,448
1983-84	13,838	nil	22,159

* Includes placings on to the community programme and the former community enterprise programme.

† The net cost per job for 1979-80 to 1982-83 has been calculated by dividing the social subvention to Professional and Executive Recruitment net of any profit or less on commercial activities, by the total number of placings into employment. From 1 April 1983, Professional and Executive Recruitment has been operating on a self-financing basis and the preliminary (unaudited) costs of providing the service in 1983-84 have all been recovered from the fees charged for services provided.

‡ Some orders are for more than one vacancy, but records of the number of vacancies relating to the orders notified to the service are not kept.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people on Anglesey who have made applications under the enterprise allowance scheme since its inception; how many are currently waiting to go on to the scheme and what is the maximum time they will have to wait; and how many places are currently available.

Mr. Alan Clark: No separate figures are available for Anglesey, as all applications for the scheme in mid and north Wales are administered from Wrexham jobcentre. The enterprise allowance scheme has been very popular in mid and north Wales and waiting lists of people wanting to join the scheme have not been cleared as quickly as in other parts of the country. I have asked the Manpower Services Commission to see whether it is possible to speed up take-on in the area.

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the areas covered by Wages Inspectorate divisions and for each division the number of establishments covered.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following table:

Wage Inspectorate Division	Area covered	Number of Establishments (1983)
London (East)	the London postal districts of N, E, EC, and SE	21,380
London (West)	the London postal districts of NW, W, WC and SW	24,056
South Eastern	the counties of Kent, Surrey and East and West Sussex	30,826
Southern	the counties of Berkshire, Buckingham, Hertford, Oxford, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight and parts of the London Boroughs of Enfield, Harrow, Hillingdon, Brent, Hounslow, Ealing and Richmond-upon-Thames	29,204
Eastern	the counties of Bedford, Cambridge, Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk	27,617
South Western	the counties of Avon, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Somerset and Wiltshire	34,000
Midlands (East)	the counties of Derby (except the High Peak District of Derby), Leicester, Lincoln, Northampton and Nottingham	22,912
Midlands (West)	the counties of Hereford and Worcester, Shropshire, Stafford, Warwick and The West Midlands	32,080
North West (West)	the counties of Lancashire, Merseyside, the Metropolitan District of Wigan and that part of Cheshire on the Wirral	26,912
North West (East)	the counties of Manchester, Cheshire (excluding that part on the Wirral) and the High Peace District of Derby	24,669
Yorkshire and Humberside	the counties of North, West and South Yorkshire, and Humberside	36,034
Northern	the counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumberland and Tyne-and-Wear	20,884
Scotland (East)	the regions of Highland, Grampian, Tayside, most of Central, Fife, Lothian, Borders, Orkney and Shetland	22,232
Scotland (West)	the regions of Dumfries and Galloway, Strathclyde and part of the west of Central	16,398
Wales	the counties of Dyfed, West, Mid and South Glamorgan, Gwent, Powys, Gwynedd and Clwyd	22,067

Wages (Underpayment)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages council establishments in Coventry and the west midlands were found to be underpaying in the last year; how many workers were involved; and what was the amount of arrears paid and the number of prosecutions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics are not collected for geographical areas smaller than Wages Inspectorate divisions. In the midlands (west) division of the Wages Inspectorate, 543 establishments in 1983 were found to have underpaid 1,097 workers. Arrears totalling £89,208 were paid. No employers in Coventry or the west midlands were prosecuted last year for offences under the Wages Councils Act 1979.

Greater London

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present number of (a) men and (b) women over the age of 50 years who are out of work in the Greater London area.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 11 October 1984 there were 50,682 men and 15,964 women who were unemployed and aged over 50 years in Greater London.

Clothing Labels (Denton)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment why people working at the Denton skillcentre and employment rehabilitation centre are engaged in removing labels, saying "Made in Taiwan" from clothing.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 19 November, 1984, c. 52]: Routine work of this kind is carried out in employment rehabilitation centres in order to provide an opportunity in appropriate cases for assessing the dexterity of disabled people and their ability to maintain output on repetitive work. Work of this kind is not carried out in skillcentres.

I am looking into the exact nature of this operation, and I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered disabled people are currently employed by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 June 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, 8,625 registered disabled people — full-time equivalents — were employed in Government Departments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Brussels (United Kingdom Staff)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff there are presently at the offices of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Communities in Brussels.

Mr. Renton: The permanent representative to the European Community has a staff of 74 United Kingdom-based officers, and eight locally engaged employees.

British Council

Sir Anthony Kershaw asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the work of the British Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Renton: An exhibition entitled "People to People —the work of the British Council" has been arranged for the period 10 to 14 December, to mark the 50th anniversary of the British Council.

Nicaragua

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the election in Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. and learned Friend made on 9 November, at column 325, in the debate on the Address.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Youth Exchanges (Cockerill Report)

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is now in a position to make a statement on the report by Mr. Geoffrey Cockerill on youth exchanges.

Mr. Renton: I have now been able to consider this report in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, taking into account the comments of the British Council, the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges and other interested organisations. We accept the main recommendations of this report, namely, that there should be a single central office responsible for co-ordinating Government support for youth exchanges. The British Council and Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges have agreed to establish from April 1985 a youth exchange centre to develop and implemnt policies on youth exchange, and that each should devote to it initially no less than the resources they currently allot to youth exchange work individually. Thereafter, each body will allocate to the centre annually an agreed element of its total Government grant based on the centre's estimated requirements. Such a joint centre should provide for the best use of resources.

The centre will have a joint steering group, which will advise Ministers direct on request on youth exchange matters and will be advised by a consultative committee with membership drawn from the local authority and voluntary youth sectors. The centre will be responsible for the allocation of grant moneys for youth exchanges generally and will determine, in discussion with interested organisations, the extent and nature of and the detailed arrangements for delegating, as recommended in the report, the allocation of a proportion of grant moneys at local and regional level.

The centre will also be responsible for collaboration with, and the allocation of, operational funds to the Commonwealth Youth Exchange Council (CYEC): provision of an advisory service for those organising youth exchanges; and provision of training workshops for youth leaders and workers.

More detailed organisational arrangements are under consideration by a small preparatory committee of the agencies concerned.

Student Awards

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the reduction to be made on the previously planned level of expenditure on student awards for 1985-86.

Mr. Brooke: There will be a net reduction of £24 million.

Students (Grants)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the percentage of students at Brunel university who in October were in receipt of the minimum grant of £205; and what are the comparable figures for students at other universities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: The Department does not collect information about the number of minimum award holders at individual institutions.

Open University

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to those other non-Communist countries which operate a university similar in operation to that of the Open University; and if he will give the year in which each of these foreign universities were incorporated.

Mr. Brooke: The following is a list of those institutions of which the Government are aware.

Country	Name of institution	Year of incorporation
South Africa	University of South Africa	1964
Spain	Universidad Nacional de Educacion a Distancia	1972
West Germany	Fern Universitat	1974
Israel	Everyman's University	1974
Pakistan	Allama Iqbal Open University	1974
Canada	Athabasca University	1975
Venezuela	Universidad Nacional Abierta	1977
Costa Rica	Universidad Estatal Distancia	1977
Thailand	Sukhothai Thammathirat Open University	1978
Sri Lanka	Sri Lanka Open University	1981
The Netherlands	Open Universiteit	1981
Denmark	Open University of Jutland	1982
South Korea	Korea Correspondence University	1982

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give a breakdown of (a) Open University and, (b) all other university undergraduates by Registrar General's social class definitions for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The distribution by parents' social class of home candidates accepted by universities in the United Kingdom through the Universities Central Council on Admissions (UCCA) in 1981, 1982 and 1983 were as follows:

	Social Class	Percentage of acceptances classified by social class 1981	1982	1983
I	Professional, etc. occupations	24·5	23·9	23·5
II	Intermediate occupations	48·9	49·6	48·4
IIIN	Skilled occupations—non-manual	9·1	9·1	8·7
IIIM	Skilled occupations—manual	12·3	12·2	12·4
IV	Partly skilled occupations	4·2	4·9	6·0
V	Unskilled occupations	1·0	0·9	1·1
	Total (numbers)	67,186	65,476	62,984
	Not classified	7,328	7,158	6,647

The University of Buckingham and the Open University are outside the UCCA scheme as are some candidates to some Scottish universities.

The Open University does not use social class in its statistics. The available information by occupations of the students—not their parents—is as follows:

Open University students on undergraduates courses

	1982	1983	1984

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those institutions in Cheshire currently used by the Open University as study centres; and how many Open University students attended each of those centres in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is as follows:

Number of finally registered students in 1984

Open University Study Centres	Location	Numbers
South Trafford College of Further Education	Altringham	336
Chester College of Further Education	Chester	459

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of study centres used by the Open University in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is as follows:

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest pupil-to-teacher ratios for each local education authority in England.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1984, the pupil-teacher ratios within maintained primary and secondary schools together with the overall pupil-teacher ratio for all teachers employed by local education authorities in England were as follows:

Local education authority	Primary Schools	Secondary Schools	Overall

British Geological Survey

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to provide resources to the Natural Environment Research Council to continue the British Geological Survey and to publish information obtained.

Mr. Brooke: It is my right hon. Friend's practice to give the Natural Environment Research Council its grant-in-aid from the science budget without direction as to how it should be apportioned between its various activities, of which work on the geological survey of the United Kingdom—managed by the British Geological Survey—is one. I understand that the NERC intends to make resources available for this work to continue, but that the level of activity will depend on the size of the NERC's grant-in-aid and on the income it receives from Government Departments and other bodies for commissioned research. My right hon. Friend expects to receive soon the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the allocation of the science budget in 1985-86.

I understand that the policy on publishing the results of this work will follow the normal practice of the British Geological Survey.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Prime Minister's Questions

Mr. Winnick asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will consider any changes in the allocation of time for oral questions to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Biffen: I have no such proposals.

SCOTLAND

Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his review of the effect of section 64 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

Mr. Michael Ancram: I expect to receive next summer the results of a survey into the effects of and public attitudes towards, Scottish licensing legislation, undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. I shall consider thereafter what, if any, changes (including amendments to legislation) may be desirable.

Health Statistics

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the annual figures since 1970 showing the number of cases in the following categories (a) leukaemias, (b) myeloid leukaemia, (c) Hodgkin's disease, (d) lymphosarcoma, (e) all diagnoses of cancer and (f) abnormalities at birth, for Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures for categories (a) to (e) for 1970 to 1980 are given in the following publications, both of which are in the Library:

"Cancer Registration and Survival Statistics Scotland 1963 to 1977".

"Cancer Registration Statistics Scotland 1971 to 1980".

The figures for 1981 (the latest year for which figures are available) are as follows:

	Number
(a) Leukaemias	365
(b) Myeloid leukaemia	174
(c) Hodgkin's disease	150
(d) Lymphosarcoma	150
(e) All diagnoses of cancer	23,506

Comprehensive figures on abnormalities at birth are not available, but the data collected since 1980 show that congenital abnormalities recorded, as percentages of live births, were:

1980	1981	1982
11·5	11·5	11·5

Teachers

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make a decision about the setting-up of an independent review into the salary and conditions of teachers in Scotland.

Mr. George Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend on 9 November 1984, at column 11, to my hon. Friend the Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. McQuarrie).

Bison Wall Frame Buildings

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list, for each of those faults (a) to (e) specified in his Department's letter of 5 October 1983, those authorities which have undertaken, are undertaking or are planning to undertake remedial works on Bison wall frame buildings with respect to each fault specified;

(2) if he will list those authorities which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame dwellings for possible faults (a) in the connection between wall and floor panels and in the restraint of load-bearing walls, (b) in parapet fixing, (c) in the ties between inner and outer leaves of external cladding panels and (d) with spalling concrete of loose aggregate finishes.

Mr. Ancram: Detailed information is not available centrally in the form requested. It is primarily for housing authorities themselves to decide on the scope of appraisals and remedial works in connection with the five listed—or any other—faults in their Bison dwellings. However, replies to the 5 October 1983 letter and to a further departmental letter of 25 July 1984 indicate that the authorities listed as follows have carried out or are undertaking appraisals of their Bison blocks, and a number have carried out or are arranging to carry out the remedial works they consider necessary. These are principally related to fault (c), deficiencies in ties between the inner and outer leaves of external wall panels.

District Councils
- Aberdeen
- Argull and Bute
- Cunninghame
- Dundee
- Dunfermline
- Edinburgh
- Glasgow
- Inverclyde
- Kyle and Carrick
- Motherwell
- Renfrew

Other Bodies
- Cumbernauld Development Corporation
- Livingston Development Corporation
- Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those local authorities which have replied to his Department's letter of 5 October 1983 about Bison wall frame dwellings, together with the date on which each reply was received.

Mr. Ancram: The local authorities and other bodies which have replied to the letter of 5 October 1983 and the dates on which the replies were sent are as follows:

District Councils	Date on which reply sent by authority
Aberdeen	28 October 1983
Argyll and Bute	19 October 1983
Cunninghame	18 November 1983
Dundee	24 November 1983
Dunfermline	14 November 1983
Edinburgh	10 November 1983
Glasgow	8 November 1983
Inverclyde	9 November 1983
Kyle and Carrick	15 November 1983
Motherwell	2 November 1983
Renfrew	15 November 1983
Other Bodies
Cumbernauld Development Corporation	12 April 1984
Livingston Development Corportation	10 October 1983
Scottish Special Housing Association	16 November 1983

Salmon Poaching

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between his Department and interested parties on a salmon tagging scheme to offset salmon poaching; and if he will make a statement on the prospects for his Department sponsoring legislation on this matter.

Mr. John MacKay: My officials have been discussing a number of practical difficulties with various interested organisations. These discussions are continuing.

I hope that it may be possible to reach conclusions on this matter in the near future.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures for Scotland for the increase in National Health Service expenditure from 1978-79 to 1983-84 in cash, cost and volume terms similar to those given for England in the annual report 1984 on the National Health Service in England.

Mr. Younger: The Information requested is as follows:

Expenditure on the NHS 1978-79 to 1983-84

£ million gross

	Cash	Cost (at 1983-84 prices measured by the GDP deflator)	Volume (1983-84 prices measured by the NHS pay and prices deflator)*
1978-79	883	1,515	1,650
1983-84	1,764	1,764	1,764
Increases in £ million	881	249	114
Percentage increases	99·8	16·4	6·9

* A series of deflator factors for the NHS in Scotland is not available. The measurement of volume input given in this table makes use of the deflator factors used in table 2 of "The Health Service in England Annual Report 1984".

ENVIRONMENT

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends introducing legislation to strengthen the provisions of sections 28 and 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I shall answer this question shortly.

Smokeless Zones

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider lifting smokeless zone requirements in certain areas for the duration of the mining dispute.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend would be prepared to consider short-term suspension of smoke control orders in the light of evidence about the need for such action and after consultation with the relevant local authorities.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the areas of outstanding natural beauty designated as such by the Countryside Commission since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The areas are as follows:
- High Weald
- Cranbourne Chase and West Wiltshire Downs
- Camel Estuary Extension to the Cornwall AONB

All three orders were confirmed by my right hon. Friend in 1983. He is considering a fourth order designating part of the north Pennines.

Salcey Forest

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the area of Salcey forest that was originally notified as a site of special scientific interest by the Nature Conservancy Council and the area that remains under such notification following the Forestry Commission's clear, fell and replanting activities.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that Salcey forest SSSI was first notified in 1970 covering 1,250 acres. It was renotified in June 1984 covering 432 acres.

Coalite Company (Pollution)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any steps have been taken by the Yorkshire water authority against the Coalite company in respect of its pollution of the river Rother; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Coalite company has a consent to discharge effluent under the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) Acts 1951-1961. The conditions attached to that consent are currently the subject of an appeal by the company to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I can make no statement while the appeal is under consideration.

Urban Aid Programme

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the differences in the objectives of the urban aid programme and the urban development grant scheme; and if he plans any changes therein.

Sir George Young: Urban development grant is part of the urban programme and its objectives are included within the urban programme's wider objectives. Urban development grant's primary aims are to promote the economic and physical regeneration of inner urban areas by levering private sector investment into such areas which would not otherwise take place and to encourage local authorities to take an active part in promoting such investment. The urban programme encompasses a broader range of social environmental and economic objectives. Urban development grants were introduced in 1982 and no changes in its objectives are planned.

Truscon RD7 Houses

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider designating houses of Truscon RD7 construction for the purposes of a scheme of assistance under the Housing Defects Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We do not have evidence which would justify designation of houses of Truscon RD7 construction under section 1 of the Housing Defects Act. If the hon. Member has evidence he would like to submit, my right hon. Friend will consider it.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total of the housing investment programme bids of English housing authorities; and if he will publish in the Official Report a statistical summary of 1985-86 HIP 1 and HIP 2 submissions of English local authorities in the same manner as was provided for the local authority associations for 1984-85.

Mr. Gow: Local authorities' bids for their 1985-86 housing investment programmes total £4,868 million. Summaries of local authorities' HIP 1 and HIP 2 returns will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate those London boroughs which in 1984-85 had their score on the general needs index used to make housing investment programme allocations to individual authorities increased to reflect inner city problems in their areas.

Sir George Young: Those designated under the urban programme, that is, Brent, Ealing, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Islington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Newham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Wandsworth. The generalised needs index also includes scores for inner city problems such as overcrowding, households sharing accommodation, homelessness and dwellings in poor condition.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much is now paid by the London boroughs for the right to nominate elderly Londoners to 50 per cent. of the vacancies in the Greater London council's seaside and country homes; and how much they will have to pay in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) if he will ensure that all homes on Greater London council's seaside and country homes estates which become vacant will remain available for letting in the event of the Greater London council being abolished and that all such lettings will be to elderly people;

(3) what proportion of vacancies in seaside and country homes currently owned by the Greater London council will be made available to elderly Londoners in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(4) if his detailed exploration into the possibility of transferring Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished has revealed how deficits met by the Greater London council would be paid;

(5) if he will estimate the number of elderly Londoners able to retire to the country through the seaside and country homes scheme if the Greater London council is abolished.

Sir George Young: Our detailed proposals will be announced in due course.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to take powers to develop new estates of seaside and country homes for London residents in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 15 November, at column 314.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why all vacancies in the Greater London council's seaside and country homes are not to be made available to elderly Londoners in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: We believe that the district councils as owners of the properties should be able to use a proportion of the lettings, as has been recognised in previous transfers of GLC stock.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who will have ultimate responsibility for the Greater London council seaside and country homes scheme in the event of the Greater London council being abolished; and what control elected representatives of the people of London will have over the scheme.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 25 October, at column 698.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he will ensure that district councils in receipt of the Greater London council's seaside and country homes, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, report all vacancies to him.

Sir George Young: We anticipate no difficulty in securing such information under the powers to be conferred on my right hon. Friend under the abolition legislation.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of civil servants now working in his Department on (a) duties associated with the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils and (b) rates limitation, listing in each case the numbers and ranks of officers and the estimated cost per year of each group.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Housing (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why, in the light of the balance of responses to "Streamlining the Cities: Housing", he has decided to adhere to his original proposal to repeal without replacement the Greater London council's statutory duty to provide research and information on London's housing;

(2) how surveys of the whole of London's housing stock will be carried out if the Greater London council is abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply of 16 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), at column 378.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a minimum as well as a maximum limit on the level of funding by the London boroughs under the proposed arrangements for collective grant-giving in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise his proposal for the prescribed majority of boroughs required to fund a voluntary body under the proposed collective arrangements in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, from 66 per cent. to 51 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government's proposal that the required majority should be two thirds was set out in a consultation document issued on 20 September. Representations have been received both that this majority should be increased and that it should be reduced. Consultations are continuing, however, and no final decision has been taken.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Association of London Authorities over the Government's proposals for the collective funding by the London boroughs of voluntary organisations in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: The consultation document on these proposals issued on 20 September was not sent to the Association of London Authorities, but copies went to the GLC and to the councils of all London boroughs; that is, to all the members of this association. The Government would welcome a response from the association to the consultation paper.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what comments he has received from voluntary bodies concerning the capacity of the London Boroughs Association for funding voluntary bodies in response to the White Paper, "Streamlining the Cities".

Sir George Young: A number of voluntary organisations have expressed doubts about the arrangements proposed for collective funding of voluntary bodies serving more than one borough. While I am confident that the statutory mechanism proposed will provide an adequate basis for London boroughs collectively to take on this role, we are nevertheless giving these representations serious consideration and will be having further discussions with representative voluntary bodies.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what form the consultation with tenants at Thamesmead will take about proposals to abolish the Greater London council; if it will commence before the publication of the main abolition Bill; when he expects it to finish; and what account will be taken of the wishes so expressed by the tenants.

Sir George Young: There will be wide consultation with residents before any decision is taken, and a trust will not be imposed against their wishes.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what financial and administrative benefits he expects from vesting nomination rights in the Greater London council's seaside and country homes in him in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) if his detailed explorations into the possibility of transferring Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished have revealed what administrative and financial benefits would accrue from such a transfer;

(3) what administrative and financial benefits will accrue from vesting nomination rights to homes in the London-wide mobility scheme in himself in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 October, at column 704.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the number, as opposed to the identity, of respondents to his invitation to consortia of private developers to contact him concerning the possible sale of development land at Thamesmead is a matter of commercial confidence.

Sir George Young: As I explained to the hon. Member in my answer of 25 October, at column 691, the responses we received are regarded as a matter of commercial confidence.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has dropped his proposal for a sale to private developers of land at Thamesmead in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: We remain of the view that private developers should have a primary role in the development of the vacant land at Thamesmead, whether or not control passes to a trust.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his detailed explorations into the possibility of transferring Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished have revealed what sources of public funding could be made available to such a trust.

Sir George Young: We should be ready to consider applications for grants such as derelict land grant or urban development grant, subject to the normal grant rules.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his detailed explorations into the possibility of transferring Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished have revealed how many staff would be needed by such a trust.

Sir George Young: This would be a matter to be determined by any trust which is established.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would happen to the development land at Thamesmead in the event of Greater London council housing there being transferred to the boroughs of Bexley and Greenwich, as proposed in paragraph 2.6.5. of his Department's publication of 31 July on abolition, if the Greater London council were abolished.

Sir George Young: In that event, our preferred solution would remain as proposed at paragraph 11 of my Department's consultation paper of October 1983.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his detailed explorations into the possibility of transferring Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished have revealed the relative site areas of Thamesmead and Stockbridge village trust.

Sir George Young: The relative site areas are, within wide limits, of only limited relevance to the suitability of the trust approach.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will wait until spring 1986, when his Department has completed its assessment of Stockbridge village trust, before taking a decision on whether to transfer Thamesmead to a trust along the lines of Stockbridge village, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: The decision will be made as soon as consultations with residents and others concerned have been completed and the results analysed.

Single Homeless Persons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which body will assume responsibility for the activity and schemes to help the single homeless which are at present carried out directly by the Greater London council and not through voluntary organisations and which relate to an area wider than that of a single borough, if the Greater London council is abolished.

Sir George Young: Responsibility for activities undertaken by the Greater London council using powers held concurrently with London borough councils will pass to those councils on abolition.

Housing Mobility Scheme (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to announce before the publication of the main abolition Bill who will run the London-wide mobility scheme in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the statutory London mobility scheme will extend beyond 1990 in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for detailed consultation and decision in due course.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the proportion of vacancies in ex-Greater London council dwellings going into the London-wide housing mobility scheme will remain at 5 per cent. in the event of the Greater London council being abolished; and if he intends to give himself discretion to lower that proportion at any time.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 25 October, at column 698.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate what effect his proposals for the Greater London mobility scheme, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, will have on the prospects for unification of the various housing mobility schemes in London.

Sir George Young: We have made it clear that we welcome current moves to place the working arrangements for the Greater London mobility scheme and the inter-borough nomination scheme on a common footing. I see no reason why the joint operation of the two schemes should not continue after abolition.

Retirement Homes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what experience his Department has so far of allocating retirement homes to elderly people.

Sir George Young: We intend that my right hon. Friend should be able to delegate the exercise of the nomination rights vested in him by the abolition legislation. We shall consult with those concerned on the detailed arrangements.

Housing (Harassment)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why his Department has undertaken no surveys of the extent of harassment and Rent Act evasion in privately rented housing in London.

Sir George Young: Local authorities which have specific powers under the Protection from Eviction Act and other relevant legislation are best placed to assess the extent of harassment and evasion in their areas. The Department gives careful consideration to evidence received from them and from other bodies which are directly concerned with these matters.

London Boroughs Association and Association of London Authorities

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the boroughs in membership of the London Boroughs Association and (b) the boroughs in membership of the Association of London Authorities.

Sir George Young: The hon. Member should seek this information from individual London boroughs or from the two associations concerned.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the eligibility of the London borough of Bexley and Greenwich for funding under the urban programme; and what is the eligibility of Knowsley borough council.

Sir George Young: Greenwich is a designated authority under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978. Bexley is not so designated, but, like Greenwich may apply for funding under the "traditional" urban programme. Knowsley is a programme authority under the Act.

Rivers (Pollution)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what fishing rivers have been polluted in the area of the Yorkshire water authority during the past two years; what is the authority's policy on prosecution following pollution by industrial enterprises; whether it has a policy on re-stocking of the lost fish due to pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer this question shortly.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 21 November 1984

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Foulkes asked the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of the new guidelines issued by the Lord Chancellor's Department concerning legal aid; and why these guidelines were issued.

The Solicitor-General: Copies of the circular (LCD Circular JC (84) 8) have been placed in the Library today. The circular provides guidance on the criteria for the grant of legal aid for trials in the magistrates' courts and appeals from them to the Crown court. It has been issued to encourage consistent interpretation of the criteria by the courts and the criminal legal aid committees of the Law Society.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Widgery criteria for granting legal aid.

The Solicitor-General: The criteria for the grant of legal aid recommended by the departmental committee on legal aid in criminal proceedings under the chairmanship of the then Mr. Justice Widgery (Cmnd. 2934) have been endorsed by successive Home Secretaries and Lord Chancellors. In June 1983 the Lord Chancellor invited the Legal Aid Advisory Committee to review the financial and non-financial criteria for the grant of both civil and legal aid. I understand that the advisory committee expects to report soon.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the definitions of plutonium used by his Department, specifying the isotopic composition of each.

Mr. Goodlad: Plutonium is not classified by the Department into different grades defined by isotopic composition.

Irradiated Fuel (Exports)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if irradiated fuel has been exported to Japan for its fast reactor research and development programme.

Mr. Goodlad: Small quantities of experimental fast reactor fuel manufactured in Japan were irradiated in the Dounreay reactor prior to its closure. The irradiated fuel was subsequently returned to Japan for examination. These were commercial transactions carried out under safeguards.

Magnox Reprocessing Line, Sellafield

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action has been taken by his Department to ensure that inspectors from Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency are allowed to examine the Magnox reprocessing line at Sellafield.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the Magnox reprocessing line at Sellafield is subject to inspection by Euratom.

Mr. Goodlad: Euratom safeguards arrangements for magnox fuel cover all movements of civil material to and from the Sellafield reprocessing plant, which are reported to it and the IAEA on a routine basis. Euratom inspectors have access to the civil magnox reactors and to the plutonium product storage facilities at Sellafield. Thus they are aware of the amounts and location of the civil material.

As the magnox reprocessing plant at BNF Sellafield co-processes fuel from the civil magnox reactors of the CEGB and the SSEB, together with that arising from the military reactors at Chapel Cross and Calder Hall, the Government cannot accept for national security reasons an inspection regime for the plant which would reveal classified information on the production of military material.

On accession to the Euratom treaty in 1973 it was recognised by the United Kingdom Government and Euratom that these considerations could make the negotiations of a mutually satisfactory inspection regime for the plant very difficult.

Negotiations on an inspection regime to cover the reprocessing plant are continuing and following a recent visit to the plant by representatives of Euratom new proposals are under consideration.

WALES

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest have been designated in Wales under the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: 394 sites of special scientific interest have been notified or renotified in Wales under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average period between notification by owners of sites of special scientific interest in Wales of their intention to undertake agricultural or other activity with impact on the site's designation and response to the notification by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Section 28(5) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 requires owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest to give the Nature Conservancy Council three months notice of their intention to carry out operations contained in the list of notifiable operations for the site in question. This period can be extended by mutual agreement between the parties. Details of the extent to which this occurs and the periods involved are not available. The Nature Conservancy Council aims in Wales to provide an initial response to notifications within four weeks. The length of time entailed in giving a final response in terms of giving consent or negotiating a management agreement in accordance with section 28(6) depends on the circumstances of each notification. It is not possible to assess the average period involved.

TRANSPORT

Road Construction (Compensation)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to extend the availability of compensation to individual households for environmental damage caused by road construction to include any road where any part of the funding thereof emanates from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Compensation under the Land Compensation Act 1973 for depreciation in the value of dwellings by noise, vibration, smell, fumes and other physical factors caused by the use of a new or altered road may be claimed from and is payable by the highway authority which constructed the road or carried out alterations, irrespective of the source of the funds for the works.

Passenger Rail Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the privatising of passenger rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have told BR that we shall welcome proposals from it for more private sector finance and participation in the development of stations and railway services.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Messrs. Brengreen Holdings Ltd. and its associates about the privatising of the Fenchurch street to Shoeburyness line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Brengreen has told me that it has decided to shelve the project for the time being because in its view the information provided by BR is insufficient.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that British Rail provides firms intending to promote privatisation schemes with the information which they require to draw up detailed bids and tenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the board to decide how to respond to such requests in the light of the competing demands on senior management time.

Archway Road (Inquiry)

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to announce the date for the new inquiry for Archway road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I announced yesterday the commissioning of an assessment study of the problems and possible options for the traffic corridor in east London between the A1 and the A102. This will include a review of the areas around both Holloway road and Archway road. In view of this I am notifying all those concerned that there will be no new inquiry into the present draft orders, which are being withdrawn. I propose to pursue the revocation of the 1975-made orders. When I have the results of the assessment study I shall be able to consider what the next steps for Archway road should be.

Blindness Allowance

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the introduction of a blindness allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We have received over 150 representations from hon. and right hon. Members referring to a campaign for a blindness allowance organised by the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the National Federation of the Blind and the National League of the Blind and Disabled. I also met recently with a delegation from these organisations.

On the question of the introduction of a blindness allowance, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfield) on 22 October at column 514.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs Officers

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will increase the number of Customs officers commensurately with the increase in passengers coming through customs.

Mr. Hayhoe: Relating increases in the number of Customs officers directly to the number of passengers would not be the most effective response to the threat of increased smuggling, which is what I think my hon. Friend has in mind. however, this year the Government have made available an additional 60 posts for the control of passengers and freight and next year 100 new posts have been allocated for use in areas where they are most likely to yield results, for example by increasing Customs intelligence efforts and improving selective controls.

Isle of Man

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Government will compensate the Isle of Man for a reduction of its share of revenue accruing under section 2 of the Miscellaneous Financial Provisions Act 1968 due to the enactments of the Petroleum Royalties (Relief) Act 1983 which exempts royalties payable on petroleum from new offshore fields.

Mr. Moore: A request by the Isle of Man for compensation for the loss of this revenue is under consideration.

Money Transfer

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will indicate in relation to each of the provisions in the Finance Acts referred to in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 352, whether (a) he is satisfied with the effects of the measures and (b) he intends to take further steps in the areas concerned; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the savings to the Exchequer resulting from each of the tax measures enacted since March 1981 given in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 352.

Mr. Moore: We keep the operation of these provisions under review, but I regret that it is not possible to give the estimates sought.

Low Tax Areas

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to deal with the tax-induced distortions of the economy resulting from low tax areas.

Mr. Moore: A number of recent measures are set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 November, at column 352. We keep the case for further action under review.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when, and in what form, he intends to publish his proposals for changes in the enforcement powers of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Hayhoe: Her Majesty's Stationery Office is publishing today a paper containing detailed proposals and draft clauses for implementing the majority of the Customs and Excise recommendations in volumes 1 and 2 of the Keith report. In a foreword to that paper, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer endorses the proposals and confirms that he intends to bring forward the necessary implementing legislation in the 1985 Finance Bill.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Malone asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about an advance of own resources payments to the European Community in November.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I informed the House on 12 November, at columns 89-90, of the Government's intention to comply with the Commission's invitation under article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, to member states to advance from 20 December to 20 November payments of own resources other than VAT levies and customs duties collected by the Government on their behalf in October. The latest estimates of these own resources collected in October is now £165 million, an increase of £35 million over the estimate announced on 12 November. Pending parliamentary approval of Supplementary Estimates, payment of the £165 million will be made by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

The payment of levies and duties on 20 December 1984, which is made direct from the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972, will be reduced by the amount of the advance. There will, therefore, be no net addition to public expenditure.

MIRAS (Abuse)

Mr. Craigen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has received from building societies regarding possible abuse of the mortgage interest relief at source scheme by applicants for a mortgage attempting to obtain tax relief on more than one property.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, c. 95-96] I am not aware of evidence put forward by building societies indicating a particular problem of abuse of the mortgage interest relief at source scheme through claims for more than one property. If the hon. Member has information relevant to abuse of the scheme, perhaps he would write to me with details.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

White Electrical Goods

12. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to ban imports of white electrical goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: None. There is no evidence which suggests that the benefits of a ban would outweigh the costs to the consumer and the national economy.

European Regional Development Fund

17. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what benefits he anticipates will accrue to local authorities as a result of recent revisions of the European regional development fund to take effect from January 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The main benefits will be an increase in the percentage contributions from the ERDF to qualifying local authority projects. In the longer term, we hope for some reduction in administrative burdens arising from the new provisions permitting support for national programmes instead of many individual projects.

Film Policy

20. Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on Cmnd. 9319 on "Film Policy".

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have received a number of letters from the industry commenting on the proposals in the White Paper. It has also been discussed in my meetings with members of the industry and the Cinematograph Films Council.

Manufactured Goods

21. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the balance of trade in manufactures for the first nine months of 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There was a deficit of £3·3 billion.

32. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the existing controls on the export of United Kingdom manufactured goods which could be used for the purpose of civil repression or torture by foreign Governments or other organisations.

Mr. Channon: Existing controls appear to be operating effectively. I have been informed that shortly after the introduction of export controls on leg irons in February 1984, the firm which used to manufacture them in this country ceased to do so. If the hon. Member has any proof that controls are being evaded I shall be glad to consider it.

33. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the European Economic Community (original Six) market for manufactures was secured by British firms in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1972.

Mr. Channon: In 1983, the United Kingdom accounted for 7 per cent. of the imports of manufactures by the original six members of the European Community. The comparable figure for 1972 was 6·1 per cent.

Mexico (Ministerial Visit)

22. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Mexico by the Minister for Trade the right hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon).

Mr. Channon: I visited Mexico in September to assess prospects for United Kingdom exports and investment. I was accompanied by a group of business men representing a broad cross-section of United Kingdom industry. I believe there are considerable opportunities for us in Mexico.

Manufacturing Industry

23. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and how this compares with the figure for the same month in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the third quarter of 1984 the provisional index of production for manufacturing industry is 98, based on 1980 equal to 100. This is 9 per cent. lower than the index of production for manufacturing industry in the third quarter of 1979.

Regional Economic Development

24. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will commission a study on the implications for regional economic development of air transport facilities.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Decisions about infrastructure take account of the implications for regional economic development.

Greater Manchester

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate the proportion of regional industrial assistance given by his Department for the Greater Manchester region in the years 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 1 per cent.

Lotteries

26. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish an inquiry into the use of lotteries as a trading practice.

Mr. Fletcher: I see no reason to do so.

New Technology

27. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made in tackling skill shortages in new technology industries.

Mr. Pattie: In its first report published in July the information technology skills shortages committee, chaired by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry, proposed a new "partnership for change" between industry and the academic world to tackle the problem if IT skill shortages at the graduate level. Action is in hand to put the Committee's proposals into effect. The Committee will shortly produce a report on IT skill shortages at other levels in the work force; and a final report before the end of the year will examine the action taken to date and the direction of further effort.

Merseyside

28. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report on the progress of the preparatory study presently being conducted prior to integrated operations on Merseyside.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This study has been commissioned by Merseyside county council, with financial assistance from the European Commission, to consider the feasibility of an integrated operation. I understand that it is hoped to complete the study before the end of the year.

USSR

29. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the value of United Kingdom exports to and imports from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: This information can readily be derived from table IB of the appropriate volumes of the "UK Overseas Trade Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Regional Aid

30. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to be in a position to announce details of the new areas which will be able to obtain finance under the regional aid policy; and in what circumstances this aid will be available.

31. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his proposals on regional aid.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I hope to make a statement to the House on our regional industrial policy changes in the near future.

High Technology Products (Exports)

34. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of people presently involved in the issue of licences relating to the Export of Goods (Control) Order governing the export of high technology electronic items; whether he has any plans to increase these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Seventeen people are currently employed full-time in the issue of export licences for electronic goods. Staffing levels are kept under regular review and adjustments are made as necessary to take account of changes in work load.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Her Majesty's Government, via Customs and Excise or otherwise, supply information to the United States Government concerning exports of high technology products incorporating United States components or expertise by British companies from Great Britain with British export licences but for which no United States export licence under the extra-territorial provisions of the Export Administration Act has been obtained.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

Information is exchanged between the customs authorities of the COCOM countries in cases where there is suspicion of an actual or potential breach of these multilaterally agreed strategic export controls. These arrangements include cases where goods have been exported from the United Kingdom with a valid United Kingdom export licence but subsequently appear to have been diverted to a proscribed destination. The licensing status of the goods or components under United States legislation is not a matter which Customs and Excise would take into account.

Textiles and Clothing

35. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received Professor Silberston's report on the effects of trade restrictions on the British textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Channon: Professor Silberston has now completed his report. It will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in December.

British Telecom plc

36. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the draft prospectus for the sale of shares in British Telecom plc proposes restrictions on general meetings of shareholders.

Mr. Pattie: The draft prospectus for the sale of shares in British Telecom does not propose restrictions on attendance at general meetings. It does however give notice that if a very large number of persons are allocated shares the company may need to seek authority to restrict or regulate, so far as necessary, attendance at general meetings on a basis as fair as possible to all members and without prejudice to voting rights.

37. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the full cost to public funds — including underwriters' fees — of the arrangements for the privatisation of British Telecom.

Mr. Pattie: Disclosure of actual costs will be made to Parliament by means of a Spring Supplementary Estimate.

Coal Industry Dispute

38. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the effects on United Kingdom imports and exports of the mining dispute at the latest date.

Mr. Channon: It is difficult to make precise estimates but in the first nine months of this year net imports of coal and oil are thought to have been increased by £1½ billion as a result of the dispute. The bulk of the deterioration will be of a strictly temporary nature.

39. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the effect has been on manufacturing industry of the coal strike; and, in particular, what has been the effect on productivity and output.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The strike continues to have minimal effect on the output or productivity of the vast majority of United Kingdom manufacturing industry.

COCOM Agreement

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in the context of the COCOM agreement, any change in the status of the People's Republic of China is proposed by Her Majesty's Government or has been proposed to Her Majesty's Government by other consultative committee partners.

Mr. Fletcher: The list of countries to which the COCOM strategic export controls apply and the details of such controls are kept under review. Details of the Committee's discussions are confidential.

Alvey Programme

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether proposed projects under the Alvey programme will be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government if there is only one non-academic participant;

(2) whether United States-controlled companies will be permitted to participate in projects under the Alvey programme as the sole non-academic participant.

Mr. Pattie: We expect there to be at least two companies in an industrial Alvey project, although this rule is not applied rigidly. A foreign controlled company must have a United Kingdom industrial collaborator.

Exports

Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to end different labelling requirements, national dimensional standards, national certification standards, health and safety regulations and other non-tariff barriers operating against British manufacturers seeking to export to Europe.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government fully recognise the difficulties which can face United Kingdom exporters to Europe as a result of non-tariff barriers within the Community. The Government are pressing for the removal of non-tariff barriers to trade. Complete deregulation is not practicable; Governments of all member states need to maintain essential safeguards for the protection of consumers and employees.

The Government have therefore supported common solutions to the problems for intra-Community trade caused by differing national standards. In particular the Council of Ministers agreed in July 1984 the guidelines for a new Community standards policy to speed up the achievement of common solutions and improve mutual recognition of national standards. The Government will press for early and satisfactory implementation of those guidelines.

Outside the Community, the Government plays its full part in international fora, such as the GATT, UN

Economic Commission for Europe, which seek to facilitate international trade by basing technical regulations on internationally agreed standards.

Cosmetics

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to take action under consumer safety legislation in respect of skin bleaching cosmetics containing hydroquinine, details of which have been supplied to him by Lambeth borough council.

Mr. Fletcher: The Laboratory of the Government Chemist is testing the skin lighteners. If they are found to contain more than the 2 per cent. permitted under the Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations the suppliers will be prosecuted. I am also having those brands not properly labelled taken off the market and am asking the EC Commission to plug the gap in the legislation which lets through monomethyl hydroquinone. I am watching the situation carefully.

Chemical Industry

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was, as a percentage figure, the total rise in value of net surplus exports of the chemical industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

(2) what was the value at current prices of the net trade balance of chemicals into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Fletcher: The available information is as follows:

United Kingdom Trade in Chemicals and Related Products

	(a) Exports (£ million fob)	(b) Imports (£ million cif)	(c) Crude Surplus (£ million)	(d) Exports as Percentage of Imports	(e) Change in (d) from previous year
1979	4,911	3,402	1,509	144	−5%
1980	5,286	3,147	2,139	168	+17%
1981	5,550	3,597	1,953	154	−8%
1982	6,119	4,179	1,940	146	−5%
1983	6,933	5,119	1,814	135	−8%

Source: United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics, Tables II and V, SITC(R2) Section 5.
Note: The crude surplus is the balance of exports valued fob less imports valued cif.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was, as a percentage, the total rise in output of the United Kingdom chemical industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Fletcher: The index of the output of the chemical industry, class 25 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980, is published in table 7.1 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the total capital investment which has taken place within the United Kingdom chemical industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Available information is given in the following table:

Investment in the United Kingdom chemical industry†*

	£ million at constant 1980 prices
1979	1,182
1980	994
1981	749
1982	687
1983	740

* Excluding assets leased from the financial industries.
† Class 25 of Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980).

Chemical Products

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will estimate the percentage of total European Economic Community chemical product consumption accounted for by the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what was the percentage of total European Economic Community chemical production which has been met by United Kingdom manufacturers in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Fletcher: The latest information available from official sources appear in "Structure and Activity of Industry" published by Eurostat, but relates only to 1979. More up-to-date estimates are available from the Chemical Industries Association as follows:

Chemicals production and consumption (NACE 25)
United Kingdom as proportion of European Economic Community
Percentage

	Production	Consumption
1979	16	17
1980	17	16
1981	17	17
1982	17	17
1983	16	17

Note :
Based on data compiled by Chemicals Industry Association from EC national trade associations. The United Kingdom percentages may be slightly understated as the data for the Federal Republic of Germany, Netherlands, Italy and Denmark includes man-made fibres.

Currys Ltd. (Takeover)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received advocating the reference of the proposed takeover of Currys Ltd. to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: A number of hon. Members have written to me about the proposed takeover of Currys by Dixons. My right hon. Friend announced on 7 November that this merger is not to be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Wine Sales (Standard Measures)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure that wine sold by the glass is sold only in standard measures; and whether he intends further action.

Mr. Fletcher: A voluntary code of practice for measures of wine sold by the glass in licensed premises came into operation on 1 May 1984 following agreement by all the main trade organisations representing the interests of brewers, licensed victuallers, hoteliers, restauranteurs and caterers. The code provides that establishments must choose no more than two sizes, to be chosen from either an imperial or metric range based on legal capacity measures.

A report setting out the findings of recent surveys by trading standards officers on the adoption of the code has been made available to the sponsoring bodies and I hope that, as a result, recognition and use of the code's provisions will become more widespread.

Exports and Imports (Middle East)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will set out in tabular form for each of the calendar years 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 the value of United Kingdom exports to and imports from Iraq, the United Arab Emirates, Jordan and Israel, respectively.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is as follows:

Value £ million

	1980	1981	1982	1983
UK Imports (c.i.f.):
Iraq	532	73	80	30
United Arab Emirates	482	393	267	319
Jordan	6	10	17	28
Israel	233	256	276	314
UK Exports (f.o.b.):
Iraq	322	624	874	400
United Arab Emirates	501	492	559	568
Jordan	95	204	295	263
Israel	231	212	264	355

Source: Table IB of the United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics, 1981 and 1983.

Note: The United Arab Emirates comprise Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Ras al Khaimah, Ajman, Umm al Qaiwain and Fujairah.

Israel

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Minister for Trade will seek to arrange a ministerial visit to Israel for talks on trade and export promotion.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present for a visit. Officials from my Department will be visiting Israel next year to attend the seventh meeting of the United Kingdom/Israel joint committee for discussions on matters relating to trade between the two countries.

Johnson's Cleaners (Takeover)

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the proposed merger or takeover of Johnson's Cleaners by Nottingham Manufacturing.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend announced on 15 November his decision not to refer this merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Opencast Workings

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consolidate the law relating to the working of sand, gravel and limestone with that affecting opencast coal in one statute.

Mr. Macfarlane: I have been asked to reply.

The NCB's opencast coal operations are being brought into line with the procedures applying to licensed opencast coal operators and to other mineral operators. As part of this process, we need to consider the compulsory powers of access available to the NCB under the Opencast Coal Act 1958 along with those available to other mineral operators. A start has been made, but it is too early to say what the conclusions might be. Any proposals will be discussed at an early stage with the NCB and other mineral operators.

SCOTLAND

Youth Training

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teenagers who have now left youth training schemes in Scotland are currently unemployed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Employment on 12 November 1984, at column 98. I regret that no comparable imformation is separately available for Scotland.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the Cowdenbeath jobcentre area the number of claimants who have been unemployed (a) less than six months, (b) over six months and up to one year, (c) over one year and up to two years, (d) over two years and up to three years and (e) over three years at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's letter to him of 22 October. The information requested is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most recent figures for unemployment in the Cowdenbeath jobcentre district by postcode areas; and by how much unemployment has changed in each area over the previous 12 month period.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply to him on 16 November, at columns 370-72.

Legal Aid

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what new guidelines he has issued in the last six months concerning the availability of legal aid.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Widgery criteria for granting legal aid.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Home and Health Department has brought to the notice of district courts in Scotland criteria for criminal legal aid similar to those recommended by the Widgery committee on legal aid in criminal proceedings in England and Wales.

Police (Statistics)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will lay before Parliament a consolidated and classified extract of statistics collected under section 47 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 for the years since 1979.

Mr. Younger: "Criminal Statistics, Scotland, 1980-82" (Cmnd. 9403) was laid before Parliament yesterday and will be published today. Certain information for these years has already been released in statistical bulletins, copies of which were sent to all Scottish Members, and placed in the Library at the time of issue. We have extended the range of data collected on appeals —the subject of one of the chapters of the volume— from that originally intended and this has deferred the publication. Delays of this nature should not recur in future since I propose a change in the arrangements for publication of criminal statistics for the years 1983 onwards. I propose to meet the requirements of the 1967 Act by laying before Parliament a simple abstract drawn from the data collected from Scottish police forces. At the same time, the range of topics covered by my Department's statistical bulletins will be extended to cover the data hitherto presented in the annual publication which will no longer be produced in its present form. This change will bring current statistics to public notice much more quickly, while maintaining all the existing statistical series.

PRIME MINISTER

British War Widows and Associates

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received from British War Widows and Associates; what reply she is sending; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a letter from the president of the British War Widows and Associates raising a number of questions relating to war widows. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, the Minister with special responsibility for war pensions, has replied on my behalf. A copy of his reply has been sent to the right hon. Gentleman.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

40. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the Government's reactions to the report recommending changes in the laws on Sunday trading.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 16 November, at column 365.

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report of the committee of inquiry into proposals to amend the Shops Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: I am publishing the committee's report today. As I said when I set up this committee last year, there is widespread agreement that the present law is unsatisfactory and in need of reform and I am grateful to Mr. Robin Auld, the chairman and his two committee members Mrs. Liliana Archibald and Miss Frances Cairncross for the depth and extent of their study. I welcome the report, which we wish to consider carefully, in the light of reactions to it, before reaching any conclusions.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average prison population in the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 1.4 of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9363).

Civil Defence

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to appoint regional co-ordinators for civil defence for all the agencies involved; and what their roles will be.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, but in December we shall be starting an 18-month to two-year pilot study in the north-west of the need to co-ordinate regional planning. The aim will be to define the requirements, identify the options available, conduct trials with a view to assessing their costs and effectiveness, and make proposals. The results of the study will be made available to the House in due course.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the following information on the mining dispute: (a) the number of police sent out of each police force area for duty in connection with the dispute during each week of the dispute; (b) the number of police injured in each police force area; (c) how many were seriously injured; and (d) how many were treated in hospital other than as outpatients.

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many policemen to date have been injured while carrying out duties connected with the mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following numbers of police officers have been injured, in the period from 13 March to 16 November inclusive, in dealing with events arising from the miners' dispute:

Police force area	Numbers injured
Cleveland	2
Derbyshire	236
Durham	30
Dyfed-Powys	1
Essex	7
Greater Manchester	13
Gwent	1
Humberside	2
Kent	55
Lancashire	1
Leicestershire	1

Northumbria	32
North Wales	1
North Yorkshire	14
Nottighamshire	130
South Wales	13
South Yorkshire	323
Staffordshire	18
Sussex	2
Thames Valley	2
Warwickshire	1
West Yorkshire	254

The information requested about the number of police sent out of each police force area for duty in connection with the dispute and about the seriousness of police injuries is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report the following information; (a) the number of written complaints about police conduct during the dispute received in each police force area and (b) the general nature of these complaints.

Mr. Mellor: The following tables set out the only information which is available centrally. It relates to the period 13 March to 13 November 1984 and indicates the number of complaints received in each police force area (not the number of complaints made about officers of those forces). It does not distinguish between complaints made in writing and those made orally.

Force area	Number of complaints
Cheshire	3
Derbyshire	57
Durham	19
Dyfed-Powys	1
Essex	1
Greater Manchester	6
Gwent	15

North Yorkshire	1
Nottinghamshire	61
South Wales	9
South Yorkshire	159
Staffordshire	6
Thames Valley	1
Warwickshire	23
All others	0
TOTAL	420

The following table indicates the nature of the allegations made (some of the complaints in the previous table will have related to more than one type of allegation):

Allegation	Numbers
Assault	198
Damage	16
Harassment	61
Incivility	83
Irregular Procedure	53
Motoring Offence	7
Neglect of Duty	13
Unlawful arrest	11
Oppressive conduct	31

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police have been injured and from which force area in each of the last four weeks whilst policing the mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following numbers of police officers have been injured, in the period from 17 October to 16 November inclusive, in dealing with events arising from the miners' dispute:

Police force area	Numbers injured
Derbyshire	17
Durham	8
Dyfed-Powys	1
Greater Manchester	2
Kent	1
Lancashire	1
Northumbria	10
South Wales	6
South Yorkshire	56
West Yorkshire	146
TOTAL	248

The table above gives the police force areas in which the injuries occurred. Information about the police forces from which the injured officers come is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding length of time in bringing to court people charged with offences arising out of the mining dispute.

Mr. Mellor: Comprehensive information on the length of time taken to bring people to court in these circumstances could not be collected without disproportionate effort. I would, however, refer my hon. Friend to the estimates recently obtained from certain magistrates' courts which were set out in the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet) on 14 November, at columns 240-41.

Probation and After Care Service

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of persons in prisons awaiting completion of parole reports by the probation and after care service in each metropolitan county area in each year since 1974 by age, sex and type of offence.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available in any of the forms requested. Reports from the probation service are required for all prisoners being considered for parole. The numbers of prisoners so considered in the years in question were as follows:

	Number
1974	9,877
1975	9,455
1976	10,077
1977	10,344
1978	10,183
1979	10,156
1980	10,070
1981	9,620
1982	9,193
1983	9,534

Further details about the parole scheme are contained in the annual reports of the Parole Board, all of which are in the Library of the House.

If the hon. Member has a particular point in mind, perhaps he would let me know.

Republic of Ireland (Extradition)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of warrants for extradition, in connection with terrorist offences, which have been issued to the authorities in the Republic of Ireland by police forces in Great Britain for which the person named therein has not yet been extradited.

Mr. Mellor: Nine warrants naming one individual remain unexecuted by the authorities in the Republic of Ireland in respect of offences of a terrorist nature committed in England and Wales. Extradition from the Republic to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Prisoners (Discharge Costs)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of admitting and discharging a prisoner from one of Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available and could be obtained only by special research. Some information about the costs of reception, discharge and transfer of prisoners, drawn from the prison department costing system, is expected to be available in due course for the current and future financial years.

Prisoners (Cost)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of keeping a female prisoner in one of Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The average weekly cost of keeping a female prisoner in custody in the financial year 1982-83, the latest year for which information is available, was £308.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly cost of keeping a male prisoner in one of Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The average weekly cost of keeping a male prisoner in custody in the financial year 1982-83, the latest year for which information is available, was £215.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Miscampbell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the working of the licensing laws; and if he has any proposals for their reform.

Mr. Mellor: We have no immediate plans to reform the licensing law, but my right hon. and learned Friend is keeping the matter under review.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities have requested an increase in their authorised establishment of serving police officers during 1984; what increases he has approved; when they will take effect; and if he will give the same information for each of the past five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Ten police authorities in England and Wales applied for increases totalling 90 posts in their police establishments for the current financial year 1984-85, and there were applications outstanding from four other police authorities. Thirty-two additional posts have so far been approved for four forces, and further consideration will be given shortly, in the light of advice from Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabularly, to five applications which my right hon. and learned Friend undertook to consider again later this year.

The information for 1984-85, together with comparable information for each of the five previous financial years, and including the increases approved for the Metropolitan police, is as follows:

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any restrictions on the food which may be taken by approved visitors to men who are on remand at Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, and have been provisionally put in category A.

Mr. Mellor: Food will be accepted provided that it is not in need of preparation and where it requires early consumption it is limited to 24 hours supply. Non-perishable food will be accepted in a reasonable quantity. Food and drink in potentially dangerous containers will not be accepted unless it can be conveniently removed from the container before issue. The governor has discretion to refuse food which is manifestly unsuitable or in unreasonable quantities. Additionally, the privilege of receiving food and drink may be withdrawn if it is abused.

These restrictions apply to all unconvicted prisoners including those placed provisionally in category A.

Community Programme

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received alleging recent changes in the community programme regulations to be in contravention of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend has received one letter, which he will answer shortly, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) drawing his attention to the concern expressed by the Equal Opportunities Commission about the new regulations. I understand that the Commission has already made known its views to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, who has responsibility for the community programme and for the employment provisions of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission; what matters he intends to discuss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to meet the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission early next year, when he expects to discuss a range of matters of current interest to the commission and to him.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the representations he has had from farmers and farming organisations alleging inconsistencies or anomalies in secondary milk quota allocations; and whether he is satisfied with progress to date on these matters.

Mr. Jopling: I have received a number of representations from individuals and from farming organisations concerning decisions of the tribunal and its local panels in particular cases. The tribunal is a judicial body and I am content that the Dairy Produce Quota Regulations provide it with a satisfactory framework in which to operate.

Despite strenuous efforts on the part of the tribunal and local panels, for which I am extremely grateful, progress with the very high number of cases calling for attention is taking longer than I would wish. I am therefore taking steps to increase the number of tribunal members to 90 in order that the cases can be dealt with as quickly as possible.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement as to the guidelines and criteria adopted by secondary milk quota panels in their allocation of such quotas to applicant farmers; and how many unsuccessful applicants proceed to further appeal procedures.

Mr. Jopling: The chairman of the Dairy Produce Quota Tribunal for England and Wales has issued clear guidance to the local panels and copies have been sent to all milk producers. For convenience, I am arranging for copies of this guidance to be placed in the Library of the House.

It is difficult yet to be precise about the number of appeals, but the proportion seems to be around 20 per cent.

Nuclear War (Washington Conference)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the scientists known to him to have expressed reservations about the conclusions of the Washington conference on the long-term consequences of nuclear war.

Mrs. Fenner: No formal list is kept by my Department, but I note that reservations about the conclusions of this study have been expressed by Professor Edward Teller, Dr. S. F. Singer and Mr. John Maddox, in addition to six scientists—Dr. Norman Myers, R. P. Turco, O. B. Toon, T. P. Ackerman, J. B. Pollack, and Carl Sagan — who were themselves involved in this study.

Unfit Commodities

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the following commodities have been made unfit for human consumption under European Economic Community policies for each of the last five years; and, in each case, what was the ultimate use of the product: beef, butter and skimmed milk.

Mr. MacGregor: There have been no measures under European Community policy in the last five years to make beef or butter unfit for human consumption.

The table shows the quantities of liquid skimmed milk which have been subsidised for use as stockfeed in each of the last five years. It is necessary to ensure that the subsidy is paid only when the milk is used for the purposes laid down in the rules. To this end controls are applied which may entail denaturing the milk so that it cannot be used for other purposes; or they may entail administrative controls which avoid the need for denaturing. Figures distinguishing these arrangements are not available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for the following commodities, what is the maximum period of time, under normal storage conditions, that the product will remain fit for human consumption: (a) beef, (b) butter and (c) skimmed milk.

Mr. MacGregor: The maximum storage life of any commodity before it becomes unfit for human consumption depends upon its initial condition, the way it is treated and the temperature and conditions under which it is stored.

Butter, beef and skimmed milk powder, if stored satisfactorily, can remain fit for human consumption for several years. Eventually chemical decomposition may make the product unpalatable, whilst remaining fit for human consumption.

Skimmed milk is stored as skimmed milk powder.

Fishing Policy

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are anticipated in the size, structure and operational activities of the European Community's fishing fleets following the admission of Spain to the European Economic Community.

Mr. MacGregor: The table sets out, in terms of gross registered tonnage (GRT), the size and structure of the Spanish and European Community's fishing fleets:

Total tonnage (GRT) of powered fishing vessels (1982 figures)

Classification	European Community (including Greenland)	Spain
0- 49·9 GRT	438,471	112,399
50- 99·9 GRT	158,299	85,029
100- 149·9 GRT	115,276	72,894
150- 499·9 GRT	279,956	314,370
500- 999·9 GRT	105,621	52,693
1,000-1,999·9 GRT	86,381	88,302
Over 2,000 GRT	77,459	12,871
Total GRT	1,261,463	738,468
Total number of vessels	54,869	17,499

These figures include the fishing fleets operating in the waters of third countries — that is, other than the Community, Spain and Portugal—which in the Spanish case represents the greater part of the total fleet; some two thirds of Spanish catches are taken in third country waters.

The effect, if any, of Spanish accession to the Community on the operational activities of the fishing fleets of the existing Community and of Spain will depend on the terms of accession in the fisheries sector, including the transitional arrangements, which are currently under negotiation between the Community and Spain. The Government are playing their full part in determining the Community's position with the aim of protecting the interests of United Kingdom fishermen.

ENVIRONMENT

Sports Funding

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide for the continuation of Greater London council sports funding in the event of abolition of the council.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend announced our plans for sport and recreation following dissolution of the GLC on 11 April. Responsibility for these matters will pass to the boroughs. The Sports Council will have additional funds to assist withprojects of wider than local interest.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, before reaching a decision on the future of Thamesmead in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, he intends to consult further the London boroughs of Bexley and Greenwich over the possibility of transferring ownership of Greater London housing stock at Thamesmead to them; and if he will compel them to accept the stock against their wishes.

Sir George Young: If, after consultation with the residents of Thamesmead, ownership by a trust does not appear to be the best option, the local authorities concerned would be consulted about the detailed arrangements for transfer to borough ownership.

Greenwich have not yet accepted my invitation to a discussion about the possibility of a trust for Thamesmead.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to consult the London boroughs of Greenwich and Bexley, the Greater London council and the private construction industry before reaching a decision on whether to transfer Thamesmead to a trust in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: There will be wide consultation before a decision is taken, including with the residents. Greenwich has not yet accepted my invitation to a discussion about the possibility of a trust for Thamesmead.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, before reaching a decision on the future of Thamesmead in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, he intends to consult further the London boroughs of Bexley and Greenwich over the possibility of transferring ownership of Greater London housing stock at Thamesmead to them; and if he will compel them to accept the stock against their wishes.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984]: If, after consultation with the residents of Thamesmead, ownership by a trust does not appear to be the best option, the local authorities concerned would be consulted about the detailed arrangements for transfer to borough ownership. Greenwich has not yet accepted my invitation to a discussion about the possibility of a trust for Thamesmead.

House Sales (Computer Services)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to which local authorities have adopted computer services and methods for recording and responding to inquiries regarding local land charges and additional inquiries relating to residential properties undergoing conveyancing;

(2) if he will introduce measures to enable him to grant funds to local authorities to enable them to convert to computer their local land charges register and additional inquiries information.

Mr. Macfarlane: Local authorities were first empowered to maintain computerised local land charge records by the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982. A report by LAMSAC in January this year indicated that at least 5 authorities were developing such systems. I understand that LAMSAC will shortly finalise a specification of a computerised record of local land charges and additional inquiries which will be made available to local authorities generally. The contribution which might be made by computerisation to speeding local searches and simplifying house buying is being considered by the conveyancing committee chaired by Professor Farrand. We shall consider how any extension of computerisation might be financed in the light of the committee's second report.

Mining Exploration

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to permit all preliminary drilling for general mining exploration to proceed without the need to obtain planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Some forms of exploratory drilling can be so environmentally intrusive that it is clearly proper for them to continue to require an express planning permission. The planning authority can then consider the proposed development in the light of the particular circumstances and, where necessary, impose conditions to minimise the impact on local people and amenity. I am, however, proposing to amend the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 to introduce a new class to permit, subject to conditions, certain less obtrusive exploratory operations for the purpose of ascertaining the presence, extent or quality of a deposit of a mineral with a view to its exploitation. It is hoped to effect this change in the first half of next year as part of a broader package of General Development Order amendments which are being formulated.

Tenants Charter

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that local authorities are fulfilling their obligations to maintain lists available to the public of their tenants who are prepared to take advantage of the provisions of the tenants charter; and whether he has any plans to monitor the effectiveness of this section of the tenants charter.

Sir George Young: Local authorities are not obliged to maintain such lists.

Local Authority Grants (Contractors)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to suggestions that a system be introduced whereby local authority grants for building improvements are made only to value added tax registered contractors.

Sir George Young: We hope shortly to publish our proposals for changes to the home improvement grant system. These will include measures to help ensure that grant-aided work is carried out cost-effectively by competent builders.

Housing (Repairs and Improvements)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total sums spent by United Kingdom householders on (a) repairs to their properties and (b) improvements to their properties in each of the last five years for which figures are available at current values.

Sir George Young: Information in the form requested is not available. However the Department has information for 1981 from the "English House Condition Survey", which indicated that £5·9 billion was spent by households of all tenures in England on their homes in that year. The statistics do not distinguish between improvements and repairs.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total value of housing repairs and improvements with publicly funded grants carried out by firms engaged in construction work during the last three years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: The information requested for the last three years is not available. However, from information available for 1983, the Department estimates that the total value of grant-assisted work was around £1,400 million, of which some 90 per cent. was for work carried out by firms engaged in construction.

Building Firms (Complaints)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints have been brought to the attention of his Department in each of the last three years for which figures are available concerning dissatisfaction with work undertaken by building firms.

Sir George Young: Although we receive such complaints from time to time, my Department does not keep a detailed record of these, since in practice the large majority are made locally to the Citizens' Advice Bureaux or the trading standards department of local authorities. The number of consumer complaints notified by these bodies to the Office of Fair Trading about construction, double glazing and house insulation work in the United Kingdom since 1981 is as follows:

Year	Numbers
1981	24,673
1982	28,727
1983	36,316
*1984	23,015

* First six months only.

The Government are well aware of the public concern about the quality of building work. It welcomes the initiative now being taken by the construction industry to tackle this problem. The Federation of Master Builders has operated a national register of warranted builders for several years and the Building Employers Confederation has just launched its own guarantee scheme. As these schemes are taken up by consumers they will make an important contribution towards alleviating this problem.

Housing Stock

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the sum necessary to ensure adequate renovation and replacement of existing housing stock.

Sir George Young: The amount required annually for renovation and replacements will depend on a variety of factors including the rate of deterioration; the standard to which houses are repaired or improved; and the balance between renovation and clearance. It is for local authorities to decide, in the light of changing circumstances, how much should be allocated to renovation and replacement from within the total capital resources available to them. It is also for private individuals to decide how much to spend on the renovation and replacement of their properties.

Rivers (Pollution)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what fishing rivers have been polluted in the area of the Yorkshire water authority during the past two years; what is the authority's policy on prosecution following pollution by industrial enterprises; whether it has a policy on re-stocking of the lost fish due to pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984]: During 1982-83 and 1983-84 there were significant pollution incidents on the Rivers Swale, Ure, Calder, Aire, West Beck, Don and Dearne and their tributaries.

In mounting a prosecution for pollution the authority has regard to the severity of any fish kill as well as the available evidence and the particular circumstances. Requests for aid towards the restoration of any fish stocks affected by pollution are considered sympathetically.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations committee on Disarmament will support article X of the proposed United States draft chemical weapons ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: We have made clear at the Conference on Disarmament that the verification provisions in the United States draft chemical weapons treaty point to the path which the negotiations must follow if full compliance is to be assured. The United States has indicated its willingness to consider alternatives. We trust that other countries, including the Soviet Union, will demonstrate the same readiness to be flexible when the negotiations resume in January 1985.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom delegation to the Geneva committee on disarmament plans to propose further measures which might ensure that during the chemical weapons destruction process, production facilities remain completely inoperative.

Mr. Renton: Allied proposals for verification of non-operation and destruction of chemical weapons production facilities are already on the Geneva negotiating table. We await a detailed Soviet response. The United Kingdom stands ready to contribute to agreement on this aspect of verification, particularly in the light of its experience in the dismantling of its own pilot plant at Nancekuke in the 1970s.

The United Kingdom is considering tabling a further working paper in early 1985 on the related verification issue of the non-diversion of industrial chemicals to illicit military stockpiles.

Ethiopia

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the United Nations Commission for Human Rights allegations of persecution of religious groups in Ethiopia.

Mr. Rifkind: We can find little evidence of any worsening of the situation of religious groups in Ethiopia, which has been unsatisfactory in certain areas for some time. Under the circumstances we have no plans to raise this matter with the United Nations Commission for Human Rights.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Foreign Ministers of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries the need for a concerted response by developed states to the famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Nations has appointed a special co-ordinator to oversee national and international efforts to alleviate the famine in Ethiopia. He will, no doubt, be looking for contributions from all Governments in a position to help.

Embassies (London and Moscow)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the negotiations with the Soviet authorities on the reciprocal provision of sites for new embassy premises and staff accommodation in London and Moscow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Negotiations with the Soviet Government over the reciprocal provision of embassy sites in London and Moscow have taken place, intermittently, over many years. The current position is that we are considering two central sites in Moscow which the Russians have offered to us: one for the embassy offices and staff accommodation and one for the ambassador's residence. In London, the Soviet Government have been offered two sites: one at 1-7 Kensington Palace gardens, for new offices and some staff accommodation and the other at 245 Warwick road, for further staff accommodation and amenities. The normal planning procedures will be followed in developing these two sites. We are very conscious of the need for sensitive architectural treatment, particularly in relation to the Kensington Palace gardens site. The Soviet ambassador's existing residence at 13 Kensington Palace gardens will be retained, but we expect other properties leased by the Soviet Embassy in Kensington Palace gardens to be given up once the new offices and staff accommodation are occupied. Negotiations are continuing.

Israel (Arms Embargo)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will set out in tabular form the date or dates on which (a) the European Community Council of Ministers imposed an arms sales embargo on Israel, (b) the United Kingdom announced its compliance with the embargo, (c) each other Community state did the same, (d) the embargo was lifted by the Community and (e) the embargo was announced to have been ended by any individual Community state.

Mr. Renton: Defence sales policy is determined by individual Governments. Following discussions at the European Council in Brussels on 28-29 June 1982 the Belgian Prime Minister in his role as President stated that no member was supplying arms to Israel. On 30 June 1982 we announced that approval of licences for the export of British military equipment to Israel would be withheld until further notice. We are not aware that any member state has announced the lifting of restrictions.

Hong Kong

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the further development of representative government in Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Honk Kong Government have today published a White Paper on the further development of representative Government in the territory. Copies of this paper have been placed in the Library of the House.

After the publication on 18 July of the Green Paper on representative government, two months were allowed for public comment, which was received from a wide variety of sources. There was general support for the aims of the Green Paper and the gradual and progressive nature of the proposals made in it. The White Paper, which takes account of these views, sets out the Hong Kong Government's intentions for the 1985 elections to the Legislative Council.

The main points in it are:

(a) Twelve members (rather than six as proposed in the Green Paper) will be elected to the Legislative Council by an electoral college in 1985. Ten will be elected by groups of district board members, organised on a regional basis, and one each by the urban council and the proposed new regional council.

(b) Twelve members (instead of the six originally proposed) will be elected in 1985 from nine functional constituencies representing various important sectors of the community.

(c) The number of appointed members of the Legislative Council will be reduced in 1985 from the present total of 30 to 22 (instead of the 23 envisaged in the Green Paper) and the number of official members from the present 16 to 10 (instead of 13).

(d) As a result of the above changes the membership of the Legislative Council will increase from 46 to 56. 24 of these will be elected.

(e) A further review of progress towards representative government will be made in 1987 (rather than 1989 as envisaged in the Green Paper).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Peace Education

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many complaints about the teaching of peace education he has received in the current year.

Mr. Dunn: Since the beginning of this year, 67 letters expressing concern about the teaching of peace studies have been received in the Department.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Opportunities Scheme

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of those trained under the Manpower Services Commission's training opportunities scheme in (a) skillcentres, (b) colleges of further education and (c) private institutions obtain jobs in the occupation for which they are trained.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, 46 per cent. of those who completed training opportunities scheme occupational courses at skillcentres in 1983-84 and 53 per cent. of those who completed such courses at other training institutions were in employment three months after completion of their training using the skills they had acquired.

Skillcentre Courses

Mr. Carttiss asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost per trainee of (a) the most expensive and (b) the least expensive skillcentre courses; and how this compares with the cost of similar training by other providers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The most expensive skillcentre course, which is not run by other providers, is boring, setting and machining at £233·15 per training place per week.

The least expensive skillcentre course under the training opportunities scheme is the new work-related skills and assessment course at £81 per training place per week. A comparable course in a college of further education would cost £59·25 per training place per week. The average cost among other providers is £68 per training place per week.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Mhrampbell asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many teenagers who have now concluded youth training schemes in Lancashire are currently unemployed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Comprehensive information on the destinations of youngsters leaving the youth training scheme in Lancashire is not available. However, a recent sample survey of 3,500 young people in nine Manpower Services Commission areas who left individual programmes within the scheme between 1 April and 31 July 1984 showed that 58 per cent. of those leavers responding went into employment, 6 per cent. went into training or further education and 34 per cent. were unemployed. One fifth of this last group indicated an intention of going into full-time education or training. Most—64 per cent.—of the young people responding had left before completing a full year on the scheme, but subsequent surveys of destinations will cover larger proportions of youngsters who complete a full year. A copy of the paper containing the results of the sample survey has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by industry, the numbers and percentages of trainees placed in permanent jobs on completion of the first year of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, Vol. 68, c. 135]: Information in the precise form requested is not available. However, a recent sample survey of 3,500 young people in nine Manpower Services Commission areas who left individual programmes within the scheme between 1 April and 31 July 1984 showed that 58 per cent. of those leavers responding went into employment, 6 per cent. went into training or further education and 34 per cent. were unemployed. One fifth of this last group indicated an intention of going into full-time education or training. Most—64 per cent.—of the young people responding had left before completing a full year on the scheme, but subsequent surveys of destinations will cover larger proportions of youngsters who complete a full year. A copy of the paper containing the results of the sample survey has been placed in the Library.

Asbestos

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many licences have been issued under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 to organisations with three prohibition or improvement notices issued against them under asbestos-related health and safety legislation, with two and with one prohibition or improvement notices issued against them under asbestos-related health and safety legislation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of licensees who have had improvement and/or prohibition notices issued against them at some time for asbestos related offences is as follows:

(a) 3 notices — 4 licensees
(b) 2 notices — 5 licensees
(c) 1 notice — 42 licensees

Health and Safety

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment, in assessing the costs and benefits of health and safety legislation on small businesses, what weight he gives to the opinion of the Chief Inspector of Factories in the introduction to the 1983 report on manufacturing and service industries about the extent to which new small enterprises are alert to the hazards to which their employees are exposed and the role of inspectors in exerting positive and continuing pressure to secure minimum standards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I support the Chief Inspector of Factories in his view that there are many small enterprises where there are potential risks to health and safety and that a sustained effort is needed to ensure that the minimum standards required by health and safety legislation are achieved.

Employment Transfer Scheme

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the operation of the employment transfer scheme to ensure that it does not prevent the best eligible unemployed candidate from being offered and accepting a job opportunity away from his home area when local candidates have also applied for that job.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. I do not believe it would represent a cost effective use of taxpayers' money to give financial assistance where a person moves to take up a job which could have been filled by a local unemployed person.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of firms which are, for the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Newcastle, Birmingham, Stoke on Trent, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas and nationally (a) included in the quota scheme, (b) meeting the quota scheme, (c) failing to employ the required quota and holding a permit, (d) failing to employ the required quota but not holding a permit and (e) issued with bulk permits not to employ disabled people.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is in the table and relates to 1 June 1984.

Travel-to-work area	Number of employers subject to the quota scheme (ie those with 20 or more workers	were meeting the 3 per cent. quota		Employers included in column (1) and who: were below quota but had been issued with permits in the previous 12 months		were below quota and had not been issued with permits in the previous 12 months		*were below quota and had been issued with BULK permits in the previous 12 months

Great Britain	36,680	11,130	30·3	18,769	51·2	6,781	18·5	18,300	49·9

Notes:

(1) The issue of a permit does not exempt an employer from his duty under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts to employ a quota of registered disabled people. It authorises the engagement of a specific number of people who are not registered as disabled by an employer who is below quota.

(2) Employers who are below quota and who have not been issued with a permit (Cols. 6 and 7) are not necessarily breaking the law unless they have engaged workers who are not registered as disabled.

(3) The percentage figures in columns 3, 5, 7 and 9 are based on the total number of employers subject to quota in column 1.

* (included in the overall figure in column 4).

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what assistance the Manpower Services Commission gives to the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Manpower Services Commission provides assistance to the employment of disabled people both through general services in which disabled people take part alongside able-bodied people and through specialist services, exclusive to disabled people.

The services especially relevant to disabled people include occupational assessment and work preparation through public employment rehabilitation centres;

occupational assessment and work preparation through agency rehabilitation arrangements, for example, Rock Rehabilitation Workshop in Blackpool and the Spastics Society's Sherrards Training Centre in Walwyn; skill training under the training opportunities scheme for which there are priority access arrangements for disabled people; training at residential training colleges where appropriate; individual training with an employer, where the employer is prepared afterwards to keep the trainee on the payroll; extended training lasting more than a year to meet special needs;

vocational guidance and help in finding suitable employment, through the jobcentre service, through disablement resettlement officers, and through professional and executive recruitment; training under the youth training scheme under preferential entry conditions; temporary employment within the community programme, under relaxed entry conditions;

the provision of special aids to employment on indefinite loan to severely disabled people; grants to employers towards the cost of adapting premises or equipment; assistance with fares to work for those disabled people who are unable to use public transport;

grants to employers to induce them to take on disabled people where the individual's suitability is in doubt;

help towards the cost of employing a personal reader to assist a blind or partially sighted worker;
financial help for disabled people to set up their own business if they are unable to work either in open or sheltered employment;
reminders to employers about and administration of the statutory duty to employ the 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people, and to reserve entry into designated occupations for registered disabled people;
the provision of employment for severely disabled people in sheltered workshops; promotion and provision for sheltered industrial groups also for severely disabled people; promotion of the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people through the disablement advisory service; promotion of disabled people's abilities through the fit for work campaign.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the estimated and actual expenditure on special resettlement scheme grants for the employment of disabled people in the years 1982, 1983, 1984 on the job introduction scheme, adaptations to premises and equipment, assistance with fares to work, special aid to employment and business on own account; how many disabled people were helped on projects involved in each case; and what is the estimated expenditure on each of these schemes for 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information, which is collected on a financial year basis, is as follows:

Job Introduction Schemes

	Estimated Expenditure £	Actual Expenditure £	Beneficiaries
1981-82	425,000	354,588	1,434

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment at what rate, for each year since 1979 (a) disabled people and (b) able-bodied people have been placed in employment nationally and for the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Newcastle, Birmingham, Stoke on Trent, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas; what percentage has been placed through jobcentres; what percentage of disabled people has been placed through resettlement officers; what these figures are for disabled people registered as (i) section 1 and (ii) section 2; and how many disablement resettlement officers are employed in each area and nationally.

Mr. Alan Clark: The total number of labour market engagements in Great Britain in the relevant financial years is estimated to have been as follows:

	Engagements (millions)
1979-80	8·4
1980-81	6·1
1981-82	5·6
1982-83	6·3
1983-84	6·5

Separate figures for able-bodied and disabled people are not available nor is information for individual travel-to-work areas.

The total number of placings by jobcentres as a proportion of these total estimated engagements in the labour market for the relevant financial years was as follows:

	Percentage
1979-80	23
1980-81	25
1981-82	26
1982-83	24
1983-84	27

Before 1983-84, all separately identifiable placings of disabled people through jobcentres were made by disablement resettlement officers or their assistants. For 1983-84, the information required is set out in the table.

Placings by disablement resettlement officers as a proportion of total jobcentre placings of disabled people percentage

	Section I	Section II
Great Britain	68·1	91·3
Travel-to-work areas
Manchester	81·3	97·1
Sheffield	55·3	96·4
London	78·2	99·4

	Section I	Section II
Newcastle	36·6	91·2
Birmingham	98·3	100·0
Stoke-on-Trent	96·1	100·0
Leeds	53·0	94·1
Wakefield	77·5	100·0

Notes:

1. Placings of disabled people through self-service vacancy displays are not included in total placings for the purpose of this calculation.
2. The proportions in this table vary widely between the areas shown because general employment staff become involved in placing disabled people at different dates in different areas.

During 1984 there will be around 450 disablement resettlement officers nationally.

The numbers for each of the relevant travel-to-work areas, as at November 1984, is as follows:

Travel-to-work area	Number of DROs
Manchester	17
Sheffield	5
London	53
Newcastle	6
Birmingham	13
Stoke-on-Trent	4
Wakefield	4

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many and what percentage, for each year since 1979, of (a) able-bodied people and (b) registered disabled people have been unemployed nationally and in the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Newcastle, Birmingham, Stoke on Trent, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas for (i) over three months, (ii) over six months, (iii) over one year, (iv) over 18 months and (v) over two years; and what these figures are for disabled people registered as (i) section 1 and (ii) section 2 disabled;

(2) what, for each year since 1979, is (a) the unemployment rate, (b) the number of registered disabled people and (c) the unemployment rate for registered disabled people, nationally and for the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Stoke on Trent, Newcastle, Birmingham, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas; and what are these figures for disabled people registered (i) section 1 and (ii) section 2 disabled.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Community Programme

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to discuss with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission recent changes in community programme regulations as they affect married women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission frequently to discuss many matters including the community programme. We are satisfied that the recent changes will ensure that places go to those most in need of help.

Wages

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average adult wage for (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) the United Kingdom at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest figures on the average earnings of full-time adult employees working a full week relate to April 1984. Separate details for Wales, for England and for Great Britain are given in tables 12 and 13 of "New Earnings Survey 1984, Part A", a copy of which is in the Library. Comparable 1984 figures for the United Kingdom are not yet available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what consultation has taken place on the proposed closure of the Golden Square hospital for ear, nose and throat services; if he has yet given his approval for this closure; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to accommodate patients and staff of the Royal National throat, nose and ear hospital in Golden Square if the closure of this hospital takes place in three months' time.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Bloomsbury health authority issued a consultative document on 9 November on the proposed closure in February 1985 of the Golden Square branch of the Royal national throat, nose and ear hospital and the consolidation of the hospital's services in the Gray's Inn Road branch. The concentration of services on one site in Gray's Inn road was first proposed by the former board of governors of the RNTNE and the outline proposal was included in Bloomsbury health authority's November 1983 and February 1984 consultative documents on the district's overall strategy. The latest document sets out the authority's detailed proposals for accommodating services at Gray's Inn road and the staffing implications of the proposal. Because the proposals are currently the subject of consultation the question of my right hon. Friend's involvement does not yet arise.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the trend, in the last year, in the incidence of cervical cancer among women under the age of 35 years due to (a) fast-growing cancers and (b) endocervical adenocarcinomas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information relating to fast-growing cancers is not available. The extraction of the histological data needed to produce statistics on the incidence of endocervical adenocarcinomas could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when his Policy Inspectorate's report on single payments for furniture will be published;

(2) when his Policy Inspectorate's report on single payments for furniture was made available to the Social Security Advisory Committee;

(3) when his Policy Inspectorate's report on single payments for furniture was completed.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 30 October, at column 965. The report has not yet been given to the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change is to be made after the uprating on 26 November in the amount that is deemed to be paid by a trade union to its members on strike in the course of a dispute, which is then deducted from any supplementary benefit paid to such families.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 12 November 1984, c. 141]: As in previous years the specified sum deducted from benefit in a trade dispute will increase from the uprating date in accordance with the formula set out in section 6(2) of the Social Security (No. 2) Act 1980. The figure produced by that formula this year is £16, and my right hon. Friend has accordingly today made an order stating that sum, as he is required to do by the same section. The deduction does not depend on the payment of strike pay. The increase from £15 to £16 will, of course, take place at the same time as supplementary benefit rates themselves are increased by the uprating so that, for example, the rates for an adult dependant will rise by £1, and for an adult dependant and two children under 11 by £1.90.

Social Security Advisory Committee

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the appointment of the chair of the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Mr. Newton: We hope to make an announcement about the chairmanship of the Social Security Advisory Committee in the near future.

Population Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 30 English non-metropolitan districts which have shown the greatest percentage growth in their electorate since 1979; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is in the table.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have received the whooping cough vaccine since it was introduced by the National Health Service broken down between (a) boys and (b) girls.

Mr. John Patten: Whooping cough vaccination was first recommended as part of the childhood immunisation programme in 1957 and central collection of statistics of the number of children vaccinated against whooping cough started in 1958. Between 1958 and 1983 in England and Wales 12·9 million children were recorded as completing primary courses of vaccination against whooping cough. No analysis by sex is available.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 798 vaccine damage children were damaged by whooping cough vaccine.

Mr. John Patten: 788 awards have been made under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act, 1979. Information is not available on how many of these have been made because my right hon. Friend is satisfied that severe disablement is the result of vaccination against whooping cough, but in 632 cases which resulted in an award, the claimants cited pertussis vaccine as the one they thought caused the severe disablement.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what moneys have been allocated by his Department to publicise the severe disablement allowance; what media advertising has been undertaken; what results have been achieved; and whether he is satisfied with the take-up.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 23 October at column 570-71. As a direct result of the publicity campaign we have already received over 38,000 requests for leaflets and claim forms and, as at 23 October, some 2,500 claims for severe disablement allowance had been received in the Department's local offices. The success of the advertising campaign is also reflected in the significant increase in the number of claims for the existing non-contributory invalidity pension and housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension.

The publicity campaign has been backed up by the special exercise to invite claims for non-contributory invalidity pension from those currently drawing supplementary benefit. As at 23 October, some 56,600 invitations had been issued, and 31,600 claims had been received of which 16,300 have so far resulted in awards of benefit.

Mr. Gerald Bowskill

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the reasons for the Civil Service appeals board recommendation to reinstate Gerald Bowskill as a staff nurse at the Rampton special hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The appeals board held that the decision to dismiss Mr. Bowskill was unfair. Ministers are not responsible for the decisions and recommendation of the board.

Births

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out the number of births in England and Wales to resident girls aged 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 years for each of the years from 1969 to 1983; and if he will also show the rate of births to these age groups per 1,000 girls.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is given in the table.

This information on live-births cannot be compared exactly to information on the number of abortions performed in England and Wales to resident girls of the same ages, as provided in my reply to another question by the hon. Member on 20 November at columns 128-129. This is because live births occur on average nine months after conception whereas abortions take place on average three months after conception. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has, however, published detailed statistics on abortions and births combined, analysed by the age of the mother at conception, and these can be found in OPCS Monitor No. FMI 84/6 dated 17 July 1984, a copy of which is in the Library.

* The figures may include a very small number of births to girls whose usual residence was outside England and Wales.

† All rates have been based upon estimates of the resident population revised following the 1981 Census. Rates per 1,000 have not been calculated where there is only one recorded birth in the age group.

‡ The 1981 figures are estimates based upon a 10 per cent. sample of births; small numbers are therefore subject to particular uncertainty.

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the Government's total expenditure on war widows' pensions in the financial year 1983-84; and how the figure compares with that for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Whitney: The total expenditure on pensions, grants and allowances paid to war widows and dependants was £177 million in 1983-84. The corresponding figures for previous years are as follows:

Year	£ million
1978-79	117
1979-80	129
1980-81	146
1981-82	166

One-parent Families

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figures for the number of (a) one-parent families headed by a woman, (b) one-parent families headed by a man and (c) two-parent families who rely on (i) state benefits, (ii) earnings from employment, (iii) maintenance payments and (iv) other items as their main source of income.

Mr. Whitney: The latest available figures for the "Family Expenditure Survey 1981" for Great Britain, are:

Main source of income	One parent families headed by:		Two parent families
	Woman	Man
State benefits	450,000	30,000	500,000
Earnings from employment	280,000	80,000	5,630,000
Maintenance payments	80,000	—	—
Other items	10,000	—	10,000

Note:
All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 and are subject to sampling error.

Earnings Rule

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to relax the earnings rule for pensioners.

Mr. Whitney: From 26 November the amount that can be earned by a pensioner before his or her pension is reduced, will rise by 7·7 per cent. from £65 to £70. This compares with a rise in prices and pensions of 5·1 per cent. in the year to May 1984 and thus represents a further relaxation of the earnings rule.

The abolition of the earnings rule, to which the Government remain committed, depends on the availability of resources and competing priorities.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for each of the past five years how many applicants who were claiming mobility allowance succeeded in their claim on their first application;

(2) how many claims for mobility allowance have been made for each of the past five years;

(3) in each of the past five years how many claims for mobility allowance in England and Wales have been made by or on behalf of physically handicapped people;

(4) over each of the past five years what was the average time required for each stage of a mobility allowance claim (physically and mentally handicapped) to be processed;

(5) how many applicants who claimed for mobility allowance did not appeal after an initial refusal during each of the past five years;

(6) how many applicants succeeded in their claims for a mobility allowance after an appeal to the Medical Board in each of the last five years;

(7) how many applicants succeeded in their claims for a mobility allowance after an appeal to the Medical Appeal Tribunal over each of the past five years;

(8) what guidance is given to the doctors who make assessments for mobility allowance;

(9) what proportion of applications for mobility allowance are successful, broken down by city or region in each of the last five years;

(10) how many claims for mobility allowance have been made by or on behalf of mentally handicapped people for each of the past five years.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 143-44]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The information available for Great Britain is as follows. All figures relate to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years. It is not possible to provide separate figures by nature of disability or by region.

Notes: Columns (1) and (2) for 1980 and 1981 figures for renewal claims are not available. For 1982 onwards such figures are shown separately in brackets marked * but included in the total. The figures for 1983 correct those given in a reply to the hon. Member for Burnley on 25 April [Official Report Vol. 58 column 562].
Columns (3) to (6)—Figures include renewal claims.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services over each of the past five years, what was the average time required for each stage of a mobility allowance claim (physically and mentally handicapped) to be processed.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 143-44.]: The information is as follows:

	Average time in weeks
	†1980	†1981	†1982	†1983	‡1984

‡ Four-week period ending 2 November.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given to the doctors who make assessments for mobility allowance.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 143-44.]: The guidance is published in leaflet NI 213 "Mobility Allowance, Notes for Medical Practitioners", copies of which are in the Library.

Social Security Reviews

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many meetings, in addition to the formal hearings, have been held by each of the social security review teams.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 385-86.]: In addition to oral hearings to hear evidence from individuals and organisations, the social security reviews have so far had 54 meetings:

	Meetings
Inquiry into provision for retirement	22
Reviews of benefits for children and young people	7
Supplementary benefit review	10
Housing benefit review	15

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a list of the Government Departments that have given evidence or made representations to the social security reviews, either to individual review teams or to the review generally;

(2) if he will list the Departments represented on the social security teams;

(3) if he will list the names and numbers of advisers from outside Government, and civil servants from outside the Department of Health and Social Security, who are engaged in work for the social security reviews.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984; c. 985-86]: The following people from outside Government are assisting in the work of the social security reviews:

Inquiry into provision for retirement
(Chairman: The right hon. Norman Fowler, MP).
Mr. Stewart Lyon, general manager (finance)—of Legal and General and president of the Institute of Actuaries.
Mr. Marshall Field, general manager and actuary of Phoenix Assurance and chairman of the occupational pensions schemes and joint working group.
Professor Alan Peacock, vice-chancellor of the university of Buckingham.
Mr. Mark Weinberg, director of Hambro Life.

Review of benefits for children and young people
(Chairman: The right hon. Norman Fowler, MP).
Mrs. Barbara Shenfield, chairman of the Women's Royal Voluntary Service.
Mr. T. G. Parry Rogers, director, personnel and Europe, of the Plessey Company.

Supplementary Benefits Review
(Chairman: Mr. Tony Newton MP).
Mr. Robin Wendt, chief executive of Cheshire county council and member of the social security advisory committee.
Mr. Basil Collins, CBE, chairman, Nabisco Brands Ltd.

Housing Benefit Review
(Chairman: Mr. Jeremy Rowe, CBE, chairman of the Peterborough Development Corporation and deputy chairman of the Abbey National building society).
Mr. Alan Blakemore, CBE, formerly chief executive of the London borough of Croydon.
Mrs. Rhea Martin, lecturer in Law at the Hatfield polytechnic and a vice-chairman of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Central Review Unit
Mr. J. Q. Thompson, consultant with Coopers and Lybrand Associates.

The membership of the inquiry into provision for retirement also included three Ministers — from the Treasury, the Department of Employment, and the Department of Trade and Industry—and the Government Actuary. No other Government Departments are represented on the review teams themselves. Officials from a number of Departments, however, have provided information and evidence to the reviews, and have attended meetings of the review teams when the chairmen have considered it appropriate. The names of civil servants in departments outside the Department of Health and Social Security who have been or are engaged in work connected with the reviews are not held centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend eligibility for exemptions from paying prescription charges.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 68]: The existing exemption arrangements together with the prepayment certificate system ensure that no one need be deprived of necessary medication on financial grounds; some 72 per cent. of prescribed items are dispensed free of charge and a further 6 per cent. are dispensed to holders of pre-payment certificates. While we have sympathy for anyone with continuing prescription needs who does not qualify for exemption we have no proposals for change.

Prescriptions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what could be the saving per year to the National Health Service budget if generic prescribing were extended to all drugs.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1984, c. 71]: If doctors were required to prescribe generically wherever possible the potential savings, based on present relative prices of generic and branded drugs, are estimated at about £35 million a year in England.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Salmon

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many salmon were taken by anglers in the river Bush in each year since the Department of Agriculture Northern Ireland took over the river; and in each of those years how many salmon were taken in each of the specially designated sections and in the unrestricted section.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Year	New Stretch	Town or Special Stretch	Leap or Restricted Stretch	Unrestricted (Reported)
1973	—	68	37	20
1974	—	129	89	30
1975	—	170	135	111
1976	—	73	39	34
1977	—	79	15	13

1982	—	96	63	30
1983	—	89	30	1
1984	14	42	9	12

Accurate angling catch returns are not available in respect of the unrestricted stretch of the River and the figures given represent only those catches reported to the Department of Agriculture.

*An additional stretch of the River, downstream of the special or town stretch, was acquired for angling in 1984.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many salmon grilse were taken in the Foyle fisheries area in each of the last five years and the current year by (a) anglers, (b) draft nets, (c) drift netting and (d) fixed nets; and what were the sums received by way of licences in each of those years from (i) anglers and (ii) netsmen.

Dr. Boyson: The final returns for the 1984 season are not yet available but the information for the previous five years is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Reported Angling Catch	966(11)	1,134 (6)	1,517(12)	2,125(19)	831 (7)
Draft Net Catch	17,363	16,438	11,781	20,304	15,481
Drift Net Catch	16,302	29,822	21,252	37,165	65,654
Fixed Net Catch	3,338	2,963	1,748	2,688	2,117
Angling Licence Revenue (£)	20,262	27,678	28,916	28,691	29,800
Commercial Licence Revenue (£)	21,740	23,257	25,375	27,338	32,763

The angling catch figures include only the number of salmon and grilse caught by those licensed anglers who made returns to the Foyle Fisheries Commission. The figures in brackets indicate the number of returns received as a percentage of the total number of angling licences issued for each year.

Cattle (Exports)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cattle in each of the following categories have been exported from Northern Ireland and to where in each month to the latest available date since 1 January 1983: (a) bulls, (b) cows for slaughter, (c) milk cows, (d) maiden heifers, (e) in-calf heifers, (f) fat steers, (g) fat heifers and (h) dropped calves; and in each category how many were of recognised milk breeds.

Dr. Boyson: Customs and Excise data on the various categories of cattle exported from Northern Ireland in each month since 1 January 1983 are as follows: all exports were destined for the Republic of Ireland. Also given are numbers of the various categories of cattle shipped from Northern Ireland to Great Britain in each month over the same time period. Data for milk cows, maiden heifers and dropped calves are not separately available from export and shipping statistics while numbers of in-calf heifers are available only from shipping statistics. Further, "recognised milk breeds" are not separately identified in the collected statistics.

Health Centres (Union Flag)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Union flag is flown at health centres in Northern Ireland on the statutory days.

Mr. Chris Patten: By Her Majesty's command, the Union flag is flown on prescribed days from Government buildings. Health centres do not come within this category.

Timber

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much timber, in hoppus feet, has been produced from Northern Ireland forests; how much has been used in Northern Ireland; how much has been exported; and how much timber was imported from the Republic of Ireland for use in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years.

Details of the volume of timber produced from privately owned forests are not available.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the extent of private planting of trees for timber production in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years; and what sums were paid by the Government in grants in aid of private forestry in each of those years.

Dr. Boyson: The areas for which the first instalments of planting grants were paid and the sums paid in grant aid in each of the past 10 years were as follows:

Financial Year	First Instalment of Planting Grant—Area (hectares)	Total Grant Aid £
1974-75	137·3	16,449

Statistics of areas planted without planning grants are not available.

Afforestation

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what acreage of land has been purchased by the Department of Agriculture in each of the last 10 years for afforestation purposes; what was the reserve acreage in each of those years and at the present time; and how much of the reserve lands is in each county.

Dr. Boyson: The area acquired for afforestation and the plantable reserves in each of the past 10 years are set out below.

It is not possible to relate precisely acquisitions and new planting with the plantable reserve, for example acquisitions include unplantable and planted land as well as plantable land; some land is classified as unplantable on economic grounds due to its size and location but it will become plantable when adjoining land is acquired.

Areas acquired by Department of Agriculture from 1974 to 1984 (Hectares)

(c) Period 31 March 1981 to 31 March 1984
The figures show the reserve without planting in the autumn of the previous year and spring of the current year having been deducted.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the extent of the forestry plantings by the Department of Agriculture in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years; and what has been the income from sales of forestry products by the Department in each of those years.

Dr. Boyson: Following is the information:

Foyle and Craigavon Bridges

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is now the average daily and hourly traffic flow across the new Foyle bridge and the Craigavon bridge, respectively; what are the daily and hourly capacities of these two bridges; and when he expects that capacity to be reached.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

	Average flow	Design capacity
Foyle bridge:
vehicles per day	10,000	30,000
vehicles per hour	730	5,000
Craigavon bridge:
vehicles per day	26,000	40,000
vehicles per hour	2,130	6,000

It is not expected that either bridge will reach its capacity before the end of the century.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the final construction cost of the new Foyle bridge; what further sums were expended on ancillary works such as approach roads and roundabouts; and how these sums compare with the various estimates made when the scheme was first proposed.

Mr. Chris Patten: The final accounts are not yet available but the costs are estimated to be £23·9 million for the bridge, and £3 million for approach roads. These figures represent a reduction in constant price terms from the pre-construction estimates.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the total sums or approximate sums spent on steelwork purchased for the new Foyle bridge; and, of these, how much was spent in Londonderry city.

Mr. Chris Patten: The total cost of fabrication, transportation and erection of steel for the Foyle bridge was approximately £10·4 million. It is not possible to quantify the proportion of this expenditure spent in Londonderry city.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many engineering firms in Londonderry city were invited to submit tenders for items required for the new Foyle bridge; and how many engineering firms from Londonderry city submitted tenders for such work.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the contractors involved.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what preference was given to local firms in Londonderry city for the supply of items needed for the new Foyle bridge.

Mr. Chris Patten: The contractual arrangements between the main contractor for the Foyle bridge and the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland specified that preference should be given to the use of materials and fittings manufactured or originating in Northern Ireland, provided they complied with the contract specification and were readily available at competitive prices.

Richmond Centre

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the final cost of the Richmond centre; and how this compares with the various estimates made since the scheme was first proposed.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Richmond project, including the office accommodation, will not be completed until April 1985; the estimated cost is £9·5 million compared with a pre-tender estimate of £11·1 million in November 1980.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the total sums or approximate sums spent in Londonderry on items and work needed for the Richmond centre; and in general terms what was the nature of the items and work so purchased.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is not possible to estimate the sums spent in Londonderry by the main contractor and the nominated sub-contractors in respect of the Richmond project. However, at least 17 domestic sub-contractors or nominated suppliers in or near to Londonderry city provided goods and services to the value of some £1·2 million; examples are general building materials, metal work, plaster work, painting and roofing.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firms in Londerry city were invited to submit tenders for items required for the Richmond centre; and how many firms from the city submitted tenders.

Mr. Chris Patten: In respect of nominated sub-contractors, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland invited two Londonderry city contractors to submit tenders. Both did so, but were unsuccessful. In addition, nine nominated suppliers or domestic sub-contractors from Londonderry city supplied goods and services to the main contractor.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what preference was given to firms in Londonderry city for the supply of items needed in the construction of the Richmond centre.

Mr. Chris Patten: The contractual arrangements between the main contractor for the Richmond project and the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland specified that preference should be given to the use of materials and fittings manufactured or originating in Northern Ireland, provided they complied with the contract specification and were readily available at competitive prices.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 22 November 1984

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Small Claims Courts

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General what consideration the Lord Chancellor has given to allowing small claims courts to sit during the evening or on Saturdays.

The Attorney-General: I understand that the possibility of providing evening hearings in the county court for small claims cases was considered under the previous Administration a few years ago, but that the idea was not pursued because preliminary inquiries did not suggest there was sufficient demand for it. Any fresh consideration of this idea would, of course, also have to take into account the resource implications.

Legal Aid

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the report "Management Scrutiny of Legal Aid Administration."

The Attorney-General : Both the Government and the Law Society have welcomed the report as a valuable contribution to their consideration of the effectiveness of legal aid administration. Decisions on its main recommendations will be announced in due course.

Legal Aid Act 1974

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Attorney-General whether Her Majesty's Government will now implement section 16 of the Legal Aid Act 1974.

The Attorney-General: There are no present plans to do so.

Consolidation of Enactments

Mr. Lawrence asked the Attorney-General whether he has considered the Report of the Statute Law Society working party on the consolidation of enactments; and whether he proposes to act upon the recommendations made therein.

The Attorney-General: Together with the Lord Chancellor, I have considered this report. However, I would not wish to propose amendments to consolidation procedure until we are both satisfied that the proposals have general parliamentary support.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Attorney-General how many stipendiary magistrates he intends to appoint in order to deal with cases arising from the miners' dispute; which authority will be responsible for paying them; and if he intends to meet the full cost of their salaries and of other supporting staff.

The Attorney-General: To date, 12 stipendiaries have been appointed by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor to sit between 22 November and 21 December at Birkenhead, Chesterfield, Pontefract, Rotherham, St. Helen's and Scunthorpe. The sittings are continuous at Chesterfield and Rotherham; elsewhere they are occasional or intermittent. Further appointments will be made if requested by the relevant magistrates' courts committees. The full cost of the salaries, fees and expenses of the stipendiaries is as always met by the Crown. If additional supporting staff is required, the cost will be included in the expenses of the magistrates' courts committee concerned in the normal way.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the equivalent in tonnes of coal of the current supply of nuclear electricity.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest issue of my Department's Energy Trends shows provisionally that, in August 1984, the supply of nuclear electricity sent out from the public supply system would have required the consumption of 1·15 million tonnes of coal in coal-fired power stations.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much electricity, in terms of millions of tonnes of coal, each envisaged pressurised water reactor will produce.

Mr. Goodlad: The quantity of electricity produced by a PWR would depend on its capacity and the extent to which it is available for use.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the mining dispute.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 5 November over 11,000 former strikers have returned to work. 43 per cent. of those employed in the industry are now not on strike.

Gas and Electricity

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate, for gas and electricity, the amount of assistance provided to small consumers, tabulating, for the latest date for which figures are available (a) the total amount of assistance provided for consumers of (i) gas and (ii) electricity, (b) the average payment and (c) the percentage of total consumers in each industry represented by these payments; and if he proposes to raise the levels of assistance available to compensate for inflation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Help with fuel costs is available under the social security system for those on supplementary benefit. Small consumers are covered by schemes operated by British Gas Corporation and the area electricity boards whereby standing charges are limited in small bills. In 1983-84 the total cost of these schemes to BGC was £41·7 million and to the electricity supply industry £14·6 million. Twenty-one per cent. of gas consumers and 11 per cent. of electricity consumers received some rebate under the schemes. The average rebate was around £5 per quarterly bill for gas and about £2 for electricity. Decisions on the future of the schemes are a matter for the industries.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Newman College, Birmingham

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his decision on the future of Newman college, Birmingham.

Mr. Brooke: The future of Newman college is not currently under review.

EMPLOYMENT

Clothing and Footwear

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of people employed in the clothing and footwear manufacturing industries in each member country of the European Economic Community in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is given in the following table.

Employees in employment in clothing and footwear industry

Manchester

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list each ward in the Manchester travel-to-work area where the number of people working there exceeds the number of workers living there by 30 per cent. or more;

(2) if he will list each ward in the Manchester travel-to-work area where those living and working in the ward accounted for at least 55 per cent. of those working there.

Mr. Alan Clark: The census of population data used in the review of travel-to-work areas identify the following wards (as defined in 1981) in the Manchester travel-to-work area for which the number of people working there exceeds the number of workers living there by 30 per cent. or more.

In Manchester: Ardwick, Beswick, Bradford, Collegiate Church, Crumpsall, Hulme, Moss Side, Newton Heath, Northenden, Woodhouse Park

In Salford: Ward Nos 1, 9, 10, 12, 14 and 18

In Stockport: Brinnington, South Reddish

In Tameside: Ashton St. Michael's, Ashton St Peters', Hyde Newton

In Trafford: Altrincham, Broadheath, Davyhulme East, Longford, Park, Priory, Talbot

The same data identified Collegiate church in Manchester as a ward where those living and working in the ward accounted for at least 55 per cent. of those working there.

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those wards in the Manchester travel-to-work area combined to produce job foci as defined by paragraph 6(ii) of his review of travel-to-work areas of July.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Manchester travel-to-work area contains the following 10 job foci, as defined for the review of travel-to-work areas.

Focus 1: The Ardwick, Beswick, Bradford, Collegiate Church, Crumpsall, Hulme, Moss Side and Newton Heath wards of Manchester with Wards No. 9 and No. 12 of Salford.

Focus 2: The Northenden and Woodhouse Park wards of Manchester.

Focus 3: Ward No. 1 of Salford.

Focus 4: Ward No. 10 of Salford.

Focus 5: Ward No. 14 of Salford.

Focus 6: Ward No. 18 of Salford.

Focus 7: The Brinnington and South Reddish wards of Stockport.

Focus 8: The Ashton St Michael's and Ashton St Peters' wards of Tameside.

Focus 9: The Hyde Newton ward of Tameside.

Focus 10: The Altrincham, Broadheath, Davyhulme East, Longford, Park, Priory and Talbot wards of Trafford.

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of self-containment was accepted for the Manchester travel-to-work area.

Mr. Alan Clark: The self-containment ratios for the Manchester travel-to-work area are 92 per cent. on a residence base and 84 per cent. on a workplace base.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in order the 40 parliamentary constituencies in England where unemployment has risen the most since May 1979; and if, in each case, he will give the percentage increase.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is not available. The recently introduced analysis of unemployment data by parliamentary constituencies is only available back to June 1983.

Youth Training and Work Experience

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged between 16 and 25 years have been engaged on various youth training and work experience schemes since 1979; how many are currently without permanent employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on the number of young people who have entered youth training and work experience schemes since 1979 is contained in the following table:

Scheme	Period	Number of entrants*
Youth Oppportunities Programme	April 1979 to March 1984	1,699,500
Youth Training Scheme	April 1983 to October 1984	647,500
Special Temporary Employment Programme	April 1979 to March 1981	‡21,000
Community Enterprise Programme	April 1981 to Septenber 1982	†24,000
Community Programme	October 1982 to October 1984	†138,000
Community Industry	April 1979 to October 1984	50,000

* The figures quoted in this column will include a number of young people who have entered the respective scheme more than once.
† This figure relates to entrants aged 18 to 24.
‡ This figure relates to entrants aged 19 to 24.

Comprehensive information on the destination of leavers from these schemes is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the availability of unemployment statistics on a parliamentary constituency basis to professional bodies and other external organisations.

Mr. Alan Clark: The recent development to provide unemployment data by parliamentary constituencies was publicised in an article in the September 1984 edition of Employment Gazette, which included the figures for August. As indicated in that article, these statistics are made available to those who request them.

Wages (Underpayment)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages council establishments in Wales were found to be underpaying in 1983-84; how many workers were involved; and what was the amount of arrears paid.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1983, the latest period for which figures are available, 722 establishments inspected in Wales were found to have underpaid 1,714 workers. Arrears totalling £189,614 were paid.

PRIME MINISTER

"Britain's Undefended Frontier"

Q22. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister if she has studied the Institute for European Defence and Strategic Studies' publication, "Britain's Undefended Frontier", a copy of which has been sent to her.

The Prime Minister: I have read this, and other recent documents on Northern Ireland, with interest. Our policy is to encourage the constitutional parties in Northern Ireland to seek a political way forward which is likely to command widespread acceptance throughout the community.

Taoiseach (Talks)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister if she will consider in advance of her forthcoming meeting with the Taoiseach, the recommendations made by the Macrory Report, on "Britain's Undefended Frontier", for the improvement of local administration in Northern Ireland on a basis acceptable to all sides of the community and for the maintenance of good relations with the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and if she will take into account the Kilbrandon enquiry into Northern Ireland and in particular the minority report of her right hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell), Dr. Gillian Peele, and Dr. A. T. Q. Stewart, contained in chapter 13 of that report.

The Prime Minister: I took note of the proposals in these and other published documents before I met the Taoiseach on 18 and 19 November.

Engagements

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 November.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 November.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 November.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Ground asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Departments whose expenditure will be affected by the proposals in the document "Abolition of the Greater London Council and the Metropolitan County Councils", published by Her Majesty's Government in July; if she will give, by Department and in total the effects on public expenditure, including local government spending; and if she will place the details of the calculations in the Library.

The Prime Minister: Estimates of the public expenditure effects of the proposals are being published in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the abolition Bill.

Paymaster General (Sermon)

Mr. Ewing asked the Prime Minister if any Civil Service time was involved in writing the sermon preached by the hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) on 18 November.

The Prime Minister: No.

Data Protection

Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister how she envisages Ministers exercising the powers granted by section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Section 27 provides that personal data are totally exempt from the provisions of the Act if an exemption is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security. Personal data are also exempt from the non-disclosure provisions in any case in which the disclosure is for the same purpose. It will be for a Minister of the Crown—who must be a member of the Cabinet, the Attorney-General or the Lord Advocate — to determine whether the exemption is or was required at any time and a certificate signed by him will be conclusive evidence of that fact. Any determination that an exemption is required under the Act will, of course, be made only after the most careful consideration.

EC Foodstuffs (Surpluses)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the location of centres for the denaturation of surplus European Economic Community foodstuffs in Britain; and what has been the type of produce and the amount denatured in the past year in each location.

The Prime Minister: There are no Government denaturing centres. In the year ended 31 October 1984, 25,000 tonnes of wheat and 117,000 tonnes of skimmed milk power were denatured for animal feed at commercial premises. The quantities treated at particular locations are not recorded.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Illegal Radio Stations

66. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to prevent the operation of illegal radio stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Radio Investigation Service is continuing to trace land-based stations and, where possible, the operators are prosecuted. So far this year transmitters have been traced on over 100 occasions and 37 people have been prosecuted. More prosecutions are pending.

The offshore stations operate from vessels anchored in international waters, and this raises issues of jurisdiction. However, information about contraventions in this country of the Marine, etc., Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 is investigated with a view to prosecution, where appropriate, by the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Invest in Britain Bureau

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report his letter of 28 June to West Yorkshire metropolitan county council concerning the co-ordination of responses to requests from the Invest in Britain Bureau for details of industrial sites in the West Yorkshire region.

Mr. Trippier: The letter was sent not by the Secretary of State, but by an official of the Department's regional office in Leeds. It concerned a point of administrative procedure, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Minerals

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement of the policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to the problems arising for mining companies seeking mineral rights from the perplexity of mineral ownership.

Mr. Trippier: Mineral operators obtain the privately held mineral rights they need by negotiation with the owners. Where this is not practicable, the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts 1966 and 1974 are designed to allow mineral operators to apply through the Secretary of State to the High Court for the compulsory grant of the right sought. Should the mineral industry generally find the current position unsatisfactory, I should be prepared to consider co-ordinated and well supported representations from them. Mineral rights is a complex issue affecting a number of interests. As part of my consideration I would need to seek the views of all those concerned.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to make a statement on grants to aid exploration for minerals in the United Kingdom, pursuant to powers granted in section 1 of the Mineral Exploration and Investment Grants Act 1972.

Mr. Trippier: In the next few weeks.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which countries in Western Europe retain a stockpile of strategic minerals.

Mr. Trippier: Of the countries of western Europe, only Finland, France, Sweden and Switzerland are known by my Department to maintain a stockpile of strategic minerals.

Mines Working Facilities and Support Acts

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to make changes in the Mines Working Facilities and Support Acts 1966 to 1974.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to do so.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Bulmer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many members of his Department of the rank of assistant secretary or above have held a job in industry or commerce for at least a year; of these, how many have held a profit accountable job in industry; and what proportions these represent in each case.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

British Telecom

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why shares in British Telecom are not to be issued on the Paris and Frankfurt Stock Exchanges.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Privatisation

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those enterprises for whose privatisation his Department has been responsible since 1979; and if he will specify in each case the form which privatisation took.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the funds allocated to the United Kingdom from the European regional development fund so far in the current year has gone to British Telecom; how much it has received in sterling terms; for what purposes it has received such assistance; and what account was taken in making this allocation of British Telecom's new status as a privately-owned enterprise.

Mr. Lamont: The commitments so far allocated to the United Kingdom under the "quota" section of the European regional development fund for industrial and infrastructure projects for this year total £145,491,621, of which £29,732,120 is for British Telecom projects. The proportional assistance for British Telecom is, however, likely to be very much lower by the end of the year as a further £203,239,514 has been sought by the United Kingdom, none of which concerns British Telecom. The payments will be made as the projects progress.

The projects can in the main be described as modernisation and replacement of obsolescent networks. A full list of all projects given commitment this year is in British Business 25 May 1984 and 21 September 1984.

Allocations of European regional development fund resources are a matter for the European Commission, but the Government have thought it right to continue to make use of European regional development fund assistance available for British Telecom projects and applications have been approved by the Commission.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration is given to the present profitability of a firm applying for a grant from the European regional development fund before his Department comments on it.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Firms in the United Kingdom allocated grants under the European regional development fund for industrial projects must first be in receipt of United Kingdom regional aid and must therefore already have satisfied the financial criteria of the regional aid schemes.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will estimate the number of new jobs which will be created, and in which industries and areas, from the grant of £15 million from the European regional development fund to improve roads and telecommunications links in the west midlands.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In order to qualify for European regional development fund aid, an infrastructure project must contribute to the development of the region concerned. The project will help to bring about the level of infrastructure required to enable industrial users to create or maintain employment, but it is not possible to estimate the number of jobs created by this.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he sought or received any assurances from British Telecom on redundancies before commenting on its application for grant from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. The European regional development fund rules provide that British Telecom projects may qualify for assistance if they contribute to the development of the region and the aim is to provide the level of infrastructure necessary to enable industrial users to create or maintain employment.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will estimate the number of jobs likely to be created by the allocation of £7·42 million to British Telecom from the European regional development fund to improve telecommunications in the west midlands.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to estimate the number of jobs created by this allocation.

DEFENCE

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will give the total cost to Her Majesty's Government of the basing of ground-launched cruise missiles at RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Stanley: The bulk of the cost of basing ground-launched cruise missiles at RAF Molesworth will be met from NATO infrastructure funds, to which the United Kingdom contributes 12 per cent. The detailed costs in this case have yet to be finalised. Equally, it is not possible to say at this stage what additional host nation costs will fall directly on Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the impact on North Atlantic Treaty Organisation policy of the decision of the Dutch Government to defer deployment of cruise missiles.

Mr. Stanley: The Netherlands Government have undertaken important positive commitments in the decision announced on 1 June and subsequently endorsed by the Dutch Parliament. The Dutch have spelt out very clearly the circumstances in which they could deploy their full share of cruise missiles and that they would do so, if required, within the existing five-year schedule of the NATO programme.

NATO Meetings

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the agenda for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation ministerial meetings is confidential.

Mr. Stanley: Because the agendas for both the ministerial meetings of the defence policy committee and of the nuclear planning group carry NATO security classifications.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to make it the practice for the communiqué issued after each North Atlantic Treaty Organisation ministerial meeting to refer to all items on the agenda at the meeting.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Nuclear Tests (British Personnel)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that an independent survey is carried out into any possible genetic effects of the Australian and Christmas Island nuclear weapon tests on British personnel.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 31 October 1984, at columns 1120-21.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the survey being carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board into the health of British personnel who took part in the Australian and Christmas Island nuclear weapons tests includes the children of such personnel.

Mr. Butler: No.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress the National Radiological Protection Board is making in its health survey of British personnel who took part in the 1950's south Pacific nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 22 October 1984, at column 497.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now consider the possibility of seeking to establish a British Royal Commission of Inquiry into the effects of 1950s south Pacific nuclear weapon tests on British personnel.

Mr. Butler: I am always prepared to consider the possibility of inquiries beyond those currently in hand, but do not consider that a British Royal Commission is appropriate at this moment, whilst the independent study by the National Radiological Protection Board is in train.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of British personnel who took part in the 1950's Australian and Christmas Island nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Butler: The estimate of the number of United Kingdom personnel involved in the atmospheric tests of about 20,000 has not changed since the figure given in the debate in the House on 12 March 1984, at column 196, by my predecessor, the hon. Member for Chertsey and Walton (Mr. Pattie).

Service Children (Education)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from education authorities requesting a transfer of funds from his Department to local education authorities to meet the additional costs of educating service children; and what response he has sent.

Mr. Stanley: In the time available we have not been able to identify any such representations.

General Belgrano

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 345, in which documents, other than the captain's account, the information relating to (a) the time at which the General Belgrano was first sighted, (b) the course of the General Belgrano, *(c)*the time at which the General Belgrano was attacked, (d) the damage caused to the General Belgrano, (e) the time of signals to and from HMS Northwood and (f) the contents of signals to and from HMS Northwood is contained;

(2) if the information contained in the signals log of HMS Conqueror is contained and available in any other document.

Mr. Heseltine: The hon. Member appears not to understand the nature of a signals log.

It consists of a chronological record of all signals traffic to and from the submarine, irrespective of its importance. Some of those signals will be important, others routine and some of a personal nature for crew members. The communications department not only records the receipt and dispatch of classified signals, but keeps a copy of every message. However, its task is to forward all messages to the appropriate person. As I have explained to the hon. Member, it is not necessary to keep this information for more than a limited period and the log itself is regularly destroyed. All operational messages of importance are recorded in Flag Officer Submarines war diary. In addition, the captain's narrative account and report of proceedings gives a full account of the part played by HMS Conqueror in the Falklands campaign. Both these documents are available to my Department.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the signals log of HMS Conqueror has been seen by any officials of his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: Officials have access to other sources, including copies of relevant signals and would have no need to refer to the signals log of HMS Conqueror. But I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 19 November, at column 84.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if copies of the signals log of HMS Conqueror are available to him.

Mr. Heseltine: As I have already explained to the hon. Member, signals logs of submarines are destroyed as a matter of routine. If the logs have been destroyed they are not available to me. Until they have been destroyed they are available to me.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the signals log of HMS Conqueror contains (a) the times of signals to and from Northwood and (b) the contents of signals to and from Northwood.

Mr. Heseltine: The signals log of a submarine contains copies of all signals sent and received by the submarine. All signals include the times of despatch.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all formal reports, documents and logs aboard

HMS Conqueror during the Falklands conflict and for each one indicate (a) whether it is available to him, (b) where it is kept, (c) whether it has been seen by Ministers and (d) whether it has been seen by any officials in his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: It will require a detailed check to establish this information and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to receive the report of the board of inquiry into the disappearance of the log of HMS Conqueror.

Mr. Heseltine: I hope in the near future.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence on whose authority the board of inquiry into the loss of the log of HMS Conqueror was set up.

Mr. Heseltine: Commander-in-Chief Fleet.

Signals Logs

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a specimen copy of a signals log in the Library.

Mr. Heseltine: A signals log consists of a record of each classified signal received and sent together with copies of all signals themselves. I have placed a specimen log in the Library.

Boards of Inquiry

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the boards of inquiry which have taken place under the auspices of his Department since May 1979.

Mr. Heseltine: There has been no change in the practice relating to boards of inquiry since May 1979. The position under this Government remains as under the last Government.

Boards of inquiry are convened to investigate a wide range of matters, each being staffed at a level appropriate to its content. There is no central register of such boards and preparation of a list as requested would require disproportionate effort.

Lance Corporal A. A. Allen

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence where Lance Corporal A. A. Allen, No. 24618552, of the Second Regiment of the Royal Military Police, has served on duty since 1 October; and if he has been engaged on duties connected with the mining dispute since that date.

Mr. Stanley: We do not publish details of individuals movements in the course of their duties. As stated previously, some police brought in from other areas have made temporary use of service accommodation and messing facilities, but no members of the armed forces have been used in police operations in the miners' dispute.

Tornado

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornado aircraft have been destroyed or seriously damaged in accidents since its introduction into operational service; and how that figure compares with the expected attrition rate at this stage.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1984, c. 345]: Seven RAF Tornado aircraft. This is comparable to the accident rate for other RAF combat aircraft at an equivalent stage in their introduction into service.

WALES

Chronic Diseases

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the annual figures since 1970 showing the number of cases in the following categories (a) leukaemias, (b) myeloid leukaemia, (c) Hodgkin's disease, (d) lymphosarcoma, (e) all diagnoses of cancer and (f) abnormalities at birth, for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate expenditure incurred for training in food hygiene by health authorities in Wales in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Kitchens

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much expenditure took place on modernising hospital kitchens in Wales in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

School Leavers

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many school leavers who left full-time secondary education in July 1984 in (a) Mid-Glamorgan, (b) Clwyd, (c) Gwent and (d) Wales have so far (i) found full-time permanent employment, (ii) been placed on the youth training scheme and (iii) are registering unemployed; and if he will give the figures in each case for males and females.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 9 November, at column 11.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of 18-year-old school leavers from Welsh schools continued their education at universities and polytechnics in each of the years 1980-81 to 1984-85.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The percentage of school leavers aged 18 and over who intended to begin a full-time course at a university, polytechnic or higher and further education establishment in the years in question was as follows:

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Degree courses	47	47	43	43

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Other full-time higher and further education courses	18	18	20	20

Information for 1984-85 is not yet available.

Youth Training

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current mode B schemes approved and in operation within Wales; which of them are fully subscribed; and how many youth training scheme students are enrolled on each one.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales which Welsh health authorities have the longest waiting lists for (a) ear, nose and throat and (b) orthodontic treatment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on waiting lists by specialty is contained in the publication entitled "Bed Use Statistics". A copy of the latest edition is available in the Library and gives list figures for 31 March 1984.

M4 (Signposts)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the name of Pontarddulais to be added to the signposts at junction 48 on the M4.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The manufacture of the necessary signs is in hand and it is expected that they will be erected shortly.

Mental Illness

Mr. Hooson asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received a further report of the review group on mental illness services in Dyfed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We received the latest report of the review group during the summer recess. The report indicates that the group has been generally encouraged by continued progress in developing mental illness services in Dyfed. It is also evident that the commitment to progress must be sustained at all levels in order to ensure that the remaining problems are tackled effectively, and that the implementation of joint strategic planning between the authorities involved is placed on a firm footing for the future. This confirms the impression which my right hon. Friend took away from his visit to St. David's hospital in the spring. The review group has begun to look ahead to the conclusion of its work. We have asked the chairman to give clear guidance in the next and probably final report on arrangements for monitoring developments in services for the mentally ill after the group has disengaged from the process of major improvement to which it has made such a significant contribution. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Turkey

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made for the repayment by Turkey of programme aid provided from 1980 onwards.

Mr. Raison: The 1980 and 1981 programme aid loans, each for £15 million provide for the repayment of capital by biannual instalments over 20 years, starting on the 29 November 1985 and 20 January 1987, respectively. Biannual repayments of accrued interest on drawings, at 6 per cent. per annum, began on the 29 November 1980 and 20 January 1982 respectively.

St. Helena (Visit)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the visit to St. Helena by Sir Neil Marten was paid for by public funds.

Mr. Raison: Yes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Offenders (Cautions)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give a breakdown of the number of occasions on which cautions were given in each of the last five years to (a) all offenders, (b) offenders aged over 25 years, (c) offenders aged 20 to 25 years, (d) offenders aged 18 to 20 years and (e) offenders under 18 years.

Mr. Scott: The Royal Ulster Constabulary does not keep a detailed breakdown of statistics in the form requested. However, the number of juveniles—persons under 17 years of age—and adults—persons of 17 and over — who have received cautions for indictable offences in each of the last five years is set out in the table:

Year	Juvenile	Adults	Total
1979	505	114	619
1980	825	177	1,002
1981	895	194	1,089
1982	979	218	1,197
1983	1,378	288	1,666

Prison Chaplains

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department gives any financial support to the provision of prison chaplains in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: Under paragraph 9 of the Prison Act (Northern Ireland) 1953 the Secretary of State has appointed a number of prison chaplains who receive payment for hours spent on these duties and for travelling expenses to Northern Ireland's penal establishments including the young offenders centre.

The same Act allows for a minister of any denomination to visit prisoners of his denomination in a prison to which no minister of that denomination has been appointed. Ministers are paid for such visits.

TRANSPORT

Greater London Council (Roads)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the financial and manpower implications that would result from the transfer of responsibility for 80 miles of road from the Greater London Council to his Department in the event of the implementation of Cmnd. 9063.

Mrs. Chalker: With the transferred 65 miles of GLC metropolitan roads; my Department will take over the cost of completing any schemes in hand on them at that time, together with £3 million annual maintenance costs currently falling on ratepayers. The extra work arising from this transfer will be handled within the Department's existing staff complement.

Street Furniture

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the contribution of permanent roadside obstacles to road accidents, he will take steps to draw the attention of highway authorities to the potential of effective siting and design of street furniture.

Mrs. Chalker: Most street furniture contributes to overall road safety and, as the Department has already issued relevant advice to highway authorities, I cannot see any special reason at the present time to remind them again about their responsibilities. If the hon. Member has a particular situation in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

A1 (Wetherby Roundabout)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Transport when it is proposed that work will begin on the improvement to the A1 at the Wetherby roundabout.

Mrs. Chalker: The Wetherby roundabout improvement is part of the Department's proposals for the Kirkhamgate-Dishforth scheme. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are now considering the inspector's report on the 13-month public inquiry. We hope to announce our decision in the early part of 1985.

The start of work is, of course, dependent on the decision on the scheme.

Sidcup Bypass

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the programmed start date for the main works on the Sidcup bypass trunk road scheme when the project was being handled by the Greater London council as agents for his Department; and what is the current programmed start date now that control of the project has passed back to his Department.

Mrs. Chalker: When the GLC notified the Department in January 1983 that it was unwilling to continue as agents for this scheme, it was revealed that it was already well behind the planned programme start date of mid-1983. Given this and the delays involved in the handover and tendering processes, the current expected start date is next March.

Bypasses

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of those bypasses at present under construction and those which have passed all stages of approval and now await the necessary financing.

Mrs. Chalker: The following bypasses, including diversions and relief roads, are at present under construction on trunk roads in England:

A1 Alnwick bypass stage 2
A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass
A10 Ely/Littleport bypass
A12 Chelmsford bypass
A17 Swineshead bypass
A39 Bideford bypass
A39 Marshgate diversion
A40 Ross-on-Wye relief road
A43 Broughton diversion
A45 Ipswich bypass western section
A45 St. Neots bypass
A46 Lincoln relief road
A47 Great Yarmouth bypass
A56 Accrington eastern bypass
A57 Aston relief road
A57 Worksop southern bypass
A61 Chesterfield inner relief road
A66 Darlington bypass
A69 Greenhead diversion
A339 Basingstoke bypass

There are no trunk road bypass schemes which, having passed all stages of approval, are now awaiting the necessary financing. Information about similar schemes on roads other than trunk roads is not held centrally.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Transport which towns of a size about that of Bedford remain to be bypassed in (a) England and (b) East Anglia.

Mrs. Chalker: The following English towns with a population of 70,000 to 80,000* situated on trunk roads remain to be bypassed:

Bath, Bedford, Cheltenham, Chesterfield, Hastings and Lincoln.

There are no other such towns in east Anglia. Corresponding information for towns situated on roads other than trunk roads is not held centrally.

* Source: "Census 1981, Preliminary Report for Towns", published by HMSO, 1981.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Transport why further delays have been experienced in the completion of the project for bypassing Bedford.

Mrs. Chalker: Good progress is being made on preparatory work for a Bedford bypass. This has brought to light some change in the traffic patterns. Since this could affect the choice of alternative routes, further traffic studies are being carried out and it has been necessary to postpone public consultation about routes from this autumn to next summer. However, subject to the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures, we still expect to be able to begin construction in 1989.

London Buses (Privatisation)

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his intention to include London buses in his privatisation plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend has the power to require LRT to dispose of the whole or any part of the undertaking of any of its subsidiaries. He has no plans at present to exercise this power.

Driving Test Examiners

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving test examiners have been dismissed from their posts as a result of complaints received about their conduct during driving tests (a) nationally and (b) in East Anglia in each of the last four years.

Mrs. Chalker: One driving examiner has been dismissed in the past four years—in July 1984—as a result of complaints about his conduct during driving tests. The examiner in question was not stationed in East Anglia.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many complaints he has received (a) nationally and (b) in East Anglia about the conduct of driving test examiners in each of the last four years;

(2) how many investigations into allegations of intimidation by driving test examiners have been carried out by his Department (a) nationally and (b) in East Anglia in each of the last four years.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that this information is not readily available, but I am writing to the hon. Member.

Malaysian Airline System

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the reasons why he has refused the request from Malaysian Airline System to increase the frequency of its flights from Kuala Lumpur to Heathrow.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under our air services arrangements with Malaysia additional frequencies can be approved whenever this is justified by the traffic carried on the existing services. The agreed conditions for approving an additional frequency by Malaysian Airline System have not yet been met.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any evidence of Malasian Airline System having subsidies to promote its activities in competition with British carriers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Barking Relief Road

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans there are to compensate householders and allotment holders in the vicinity of the south Woodford to Barking relief road;

(2) what levels of noise and air pollution are expected to be generated from traffic using the south Woodford to Barking relief road as it passes through Newham, both before and after the opening of the east London river crossing;

(3) whether the decision to proceed with the overhead route for the south Woodford to Barking relief road takes into account the effect of additional traffic when the east London river crossing is opened;

(4) what representations he has received from residents of Newham about the proposal to build a viaduct over the Liverpool Street to Southend railway line for the south Woodford to Barking relief road;

(5) what consideration he gave to the aesthetic effect, and effect on local amenities, of building a viaduct for the south Woodford to Barking relief road; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I will answer these questions shortly.

M25

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what parts of the M25 are placed in cuttings.

Mrs. Chalker: There are considerable numbers of cuttings, of varying lengths and types, on all parts of the M25. It would be impracticable to identify them individually. If the hon. Member has a particular area in mind, perhaps he will write to me.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Assembly (Elections)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, under the proposals for Spanish accession to the European Communities, the Arab people of Oeuta and Melilla will have the same rights of franchise in European Assembly elections as will be available to the people of Spain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Electoral procedures for the European Parliament have not been fully harmonised in the European Community. It will be for the Spanish authorities in due course to decide the precise arrangements under which the representatives of the people of the kingdom of Spain are elected to the European Parliament.

Tristan da Cunha (Generators)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the maximum power that can be generated by the diesel generators on Tristan da Cunha owned by Tristan Investments Ltd.

Mr. Renton: Tristan Investments Ltd. has three 140-kilowatt generators and a standby generator of 48 kilowatts.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the maximum power that can be generated by the small emergency generator on Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Renton: The small emergency generator owned by the Government of Tristan da Cunha has a maximum capacity of 11 kilowatts.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the specifications of the wind-powered electricity generator that was blown down on Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Renton: The generator was of 45 kilowatt capacity, with a 12 metre diameter rotor mounted on a 12 metre high bolted tower.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number of wirebirds left on St. Helena; and whether their number is declining.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that between 100 and 300 pairs of wirebirds at present inhabit St. Helena. Numbers have fallen off since the 1960s, for no particular identifiable reason, but it is not thought that the wirebird is threatened with extinction.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken or supported at the United Nations to end the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Renton: We wish to see the earliest possible end to the tragic and wasteful conflict in the Gulf. We fully supported UN Security Council resolution No. 552 of 1 June, which called on all states to respect the right of free navigation in the Gulf, and the UN Secretary-General's call on 9 June to refrain from attacks on civilian population centres, which has largely been observed. We will continue to support any measures designed to limit the scope of the conflict.

Iran

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government at the United Nations to press the Iranian Government to end the torture and execution of political prisoners.

Mr. Renton: We have persistently made clear to the Iranian Government our disquiet about violations of human rights in Iran. We co-sponsored the resolution on this question at this year's UN Commission on Human Rights. The resolution, which was adopted on 14 March, urged Iran to respect its obligations as a State party to the international covenant on civil and political rights.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council of 20 November.

Mr. Renton: An extra Foreign Affairs Council was held in Brussels on 20 November in advance of the scheduled political co-operation ministerial meeting. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development and my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) represented the United Kingdom. Ministers had a further discussion of outstanding issues in the enlargement negotiations, including fisheries, wine and Spanish agriculture, in advance of the regular Foreign Affairs Council on 26-28 November, which is to be followed by an extended negotiating conference with Spain and Portugal.

Agreement was also reached on a revised figure for the sixth European development fund of 7·5 billion ecu—about £4,465 million. Of this, 7·4 billion ecu—about £4,405 million—will go to the African Caribbean and Pacific—ACP—countries and 100 million ecu—about £60 million—to the dependent territories of member states — OCT. These figures take account of the expected contributions of Spain and Portugal to the sixth EDF. Ministers also agreed on a text on human rights, and on the breakdown of EDF expenditure between different headings. A meeting is taking place today, 22 November, between EC and ACP co-presidents, at which it is hoped the negotiations can be completed thus paving the way for signature of the new convention in Lomé on 8 December.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the total amount of all benefits paid to families of striking miners since the commencement of the strike;

(2) what is the total weekly amount of all benefit paid to the families of striking miners;

(3) how many different benefits are available to families of striking miners; and if he will detail them together with their individual take-up.

Mr. Fowler: The total amount of supplementary benefit paid to families of striking miners since the strike began had reached about £23 million by 6 November. The weekly total paid has fluctuated but is now about £738,000. In addition recipients of supplementary benefit will, where applicable, have their rent and rates paid in full through housing benefit. The amount of supplementary benefit paid takes account of the fact that any family with children will continue to receive child benefit.

Depending on circumstances and on the satisfaction of relevant conditions either a striker or a member of his family may be entitled to receive other benefits including:

One-parent benefit;
Family Income Supplement;
Disablement benefits and related allowances;
War pensions and related allowances;
Mobility allowance;
Maternity allowances;
Sickness and other incapacity benefits.

Payment of some of these benefits is taken into account in assessing entitlement to supplementary benefit. Information about expenditure on these benefits for striking miners or their families is not recorded separately.

Children Act 1975

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make a report to Parliament on the operation of the Children Act 1975 in accordance with section 105 of the Act.

Mr. Fowler: I have today published the second report to Parliament on the operation of the Children Act 1975. (House of Commons Paper No. 20.) The Act represents a major landmark in children's legislation because of the way in which it safeguards and promotes the welfare and interests of children who need adoptive families and children in care. Substantial progress has been made in implementing the Act since the last report to Parliament in 1979. Part I of the Act provides a framework for professional adoption services centred on the welfare needs of children. This part is now largely in force and we are discussing with the local authority associations our intention to bring in the only unimplemented sections, namely those requiring every local authority to provide an adoption service in its area. Most authorities already do so. We plan to bring part II of the Act into force next spring. This will enable foster parents and relatives who have looked after a child for some time to apply for a custodianship order. The whole of part III which introduced new rights and safeguards for children in care and for both children and parents in court proceedings, is now in force.

The report also describes the benefits which are already flowing from the Children Act. For example, many children who were once thought to be unsuitable for adoption—because they are handicapped or of school-age or need to find a home together with brothers and sisters—are now being found new families in which to grow up.

The adoption allowance schemes which have been introduced will mean that more children will be able to find security in families which would otherwise be unable to afford to adopt.

Secure Psychiatric Units

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the policy of the Oxford regional health authority towards providing regional secure psychiatric units.

Mr. John Patten: At discussions with the Department earlier this year, the regional health authority announced a review of its regional secure unit policies which had not hitherto satisfied the Department. My right hon. and learned Friend is to meet the RHA on 12 December for its regional review when this subject will be on the agenda. He hopes that the region will then report that they are taking early steps to meet all the region's needs for secure accommodation.

Bed and Breakfast (Charges)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he has to monitor conditions and charges made to his Department for bed and breakfast and guest house accommodation used by his Department for families who are in receipt of benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Data on supplementary benefit payments to all people in board and lodging accommodation collected routinely as part of the "Annual Statistical Enquiry" which covers all supplementary benefit payments. As I have indicated in answer to the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) today, my right hon. Friend will shortly be publishing proposals for longer-term arrangements and for consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Dentists

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of dentists whose patients were interviewed by regional dental officers in 1983, and the number of dentists whose patients were not so interviewed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During the year 1983, 9,910 dentists in England had one or more of their patients examined by dental officers of our Department. This represents some 65 per cent. of dentists in contract with family practitioner committees on 30 September of that year.

Supplementary Benefit (Birkenhead)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average length of time it took to hear supplementary benefit claimants' appeals in Birkenhead in 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: Precise information is not available because of the effects of current industrial action within the Department. It is estimated that the present waiting time for supplementary benefit appeals in the Birkenhead area is about 10 weeks. Times for previous years, recently estimated, are as follows:

	Weeks
1980	4·7
1981	7·8
1982	8·9
1983	13·9

Prescription Charges

Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the annual cost if private patients, who at present pay the full cost of the drugs prescribed for them, were in future to receive drugs on the same basis as National Health Service patients; and what proportion this would be of the present National Health Service drugs bill.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no reliable information on the number of prescriptions issued to private patients and we cannot therefore estimate the annual cost of drugs supplied in this way. Supply by the National Health Service would, however, inevitably add to the drugs bill which already stands at £1,400 million a year.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to give details of his proposals concerning supplementary benefit payments for board and lodging.

Mr. Newton: We are today laying before the House the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Amendment and Temporary Provisions Regulations 1984, which will enable us to control local limits governing board and lodging payments. My right hon. Friend shall shortly be publishing proposals for longer-term arrangements and for consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not given a substantive answer to the question put down by the hon. Member for Oldham, West for priority written answer on 12 November regarding the uprating of the £15 deemed strike pay for strikers' families claiming supplementary benefit.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member yesterday.

Pensions

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figures showing comparisons between old-age pensions paid to women over the age of 60 years and men over the age of 65 years in all member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to section IV of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the Member States of the European Communities, Portugal and Spain (Position at 1 January 1984)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Cigarette Advertising

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now seek to make all cigarette advertising illegal.

Mr. John Patten: Cigarette advertising is at present controlled by means of a voluntary agreement between the Government and the tobacco industry. That agreement will continue to apply until March 1986.

Salmonella Poisoning

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he issues to local authorities about measures taken to inspect premises in the prevention of salmonella poisoning.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cardiac Surgery Service

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of health authorities in England which are proposing to close the cardiac surgery service in hospitals; and what steps are being taken to provide alternative facilities.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has been notified by two health authorities, Victoria health authority and the National Heart and Chest hospitals special health authority, that they are undertaking formal consultation on proposals for the permanent closure or change of use of health buildings which involve services for cardiac surgery. My hon. Friend may wish to consult these authorities direct for further details.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of operating a cardiac surgery service in a hospital; and if he has made any study of the effect of the closure of such a unit where no alternative facilities exist in close proximity.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to provide a general estimate since total revenue costs will vary according to such factors as the size and location of the department and the numbers and types of cases treated. Studies of the effects of closures are matters for health authorities, which are responsible for ensuring that there are adequate alternative facilities.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of patients in England who would benefit from cardiac surgical facilities but who are prevented from being operated on for heart surgery due to the lack of cardiac surgery services and the effect on such numbers of the proposed closure of the cardiac surgery service at Westminster hospital.

Mr. John Patten: The number of coronary artery by-pass grafts performed in the United Kingdom increased by 91 per cent., from 3,538 to 6,766, between 1979 and 1982, the latest date for which figures are available. Although no firm estimate of need has been established health authorities have been asked to give priority to the development of services for coronary artery surgery.

With regard to the proposed closure of the cardiac service at Westminster hospital I understand that the authority considers that there is sufficient spare capacity in other near-by cardiac surgery units to absorb the surgical workload that it currently undertakes.

Cervical Cancer

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the incidence of cervical cancer for the female population under the age of 35 years in England and Wales for the most recent period available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The latest available figures for England and Wales for newly diagnosed cases of cervical cancer are shown in the table.

Numbers of newly diagnosed cases of cancer of the cervix uteri and carcinoma in situ of cervix uteri and rates per 100,000 female population for ages under 35 years, 1981

Mr. K. Bales

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has refused to confirm the appointment of Mr. K. Bales as general manager of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Discussions about the appointment of individual officers are — and should remain—confidential.

Artificial Limb Centres

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to privatise artificial limb centres.

Mr. Newton: Some of the services of artificial limb and appliance centres are currently provided by private contractors. We have no plans to introduce changes in these services; but, when it has reported, we shall of course consider any proposals which may be made by the working party whose terms of reference and membership I announced in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 10 April at c. 209.

Cigarettes (Children)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the action taken during the past six months by the tobacco industry, the Tobacco Council and other related bodies, in conjunction with his initiatives, to discourage illegal sales of cigarettes to children; if he will list all the steps that have been taken in this campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Tobacco Advisory Council, representing the United Kingdom tobacco manufacturing industry, launched a nationwide campaign in July aimed at increasing awareness of the law on illegal sale of cigarettes to children and encouraging its observance among shopkeepers and staff. I understand that as part of their initiative about 250,000 action packs containing explanatory brochures and adhesive warnings notices for display in shops have been distributed to retailers. Special notices for use on vending machines have also been issued. The Government support the aims of this campaign and earlier this year, following consultation with retail bodies, published separate guidelines to discourage illegal sale of cigarettes to children.

Social Security Reviews

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement of the next stages of the work of the social security review teams following the public hearings.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 385]: The review teams are assessing the evidence they have received, and are aiming to report by the end of this year. We shall then seek to draw the results together with a view to publishing our conclusions and proposals in the early part of next year.

Kidneys

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service patients have received transplants of kidneys imported from the United States of America; and at what costs these were supplied.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, c. 127]: The United Kingdom Transplant Service has been notified of four NHS patients during 1983 and four so far during 1984 who received a kidney imported from the United States of America. Any cost of supplying the kidney would only be to cover transport and the procurement costs incurred by the American hospital which provided it, since payment to the relatives or estate of a donor is contrary to a Council of Europe resolution to which this country is a signatory. The costs would be a matter for the health authority concerned; details are not recorded either by the Department or the United Kingdom Transplant Service.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new initiatives he has to encourage more United Kingdom citizens to become kidney donors.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, c. 127]: The Government continue to support local initiatives to increase organ donation and to promote the donor card scheme. We will be evaluating the impact of the first year of the present national publicity campaign next March, and will decide at that point whether any major central initiatives are needed to maintain the campaign's momentum. The number of kidney transplants performed in the United Kingdom during the first 10 months of this year was 1,264, compared with 1,160 for the whole of 1983.

Civil Defence Planning

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent current civil defence planning allows for the existence of isolation hospitals and secure infectious disease units in each region of the United Kingdom to cope with the possible outbreak of infectious disease following the use of chemical or biological weapons.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, c. 128]: Existing facilities for handling communicable diseases are planned to meet present peacetime demands. Possible civil defence requirements would be different and planning has to be flexible, making the best use of whatever health facilities are available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Coal Industry Dispute

14. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many metropolitan police officers have been involved in duties associated with the dispute in the mining industry; and what was the cost involved.

Mr. Brittan: Between 14 March and 17 November the number of officers deployed on mutual aid and associated duties each week has averaged 930. The cost involved is estimated at some £11 million, almost all of which will be recovered from the aided forces.

48. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the policing of the disorder associated with the coal dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Major policing operations have continued to be necessary to ensure that people who wish to go to work may do so, and to prevent or deal with acts of intimidation. Between 13 March and the morning of 22 November inclusive, 1,195 police officers were injured while performing duties related to the dispute. In the same period 8,242 people were arrested for offences in connection with the dispute.

50. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current total of persons (a) arrested, (b) charged, (c) convicted and (d) acquitted for alleged participation in incidents of public disorder arising from the coal miners' dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Between 13 March and 20 November inclusive, 8,174 people were arrested in connection with the miners' dispute. 6,876 of these people have been charged with a variety of offences and 2,626 have been convicted. There have been 704 acquittals. The information available centrally does not distinguish between offences committed in incidents of public disorder and those committed on other occasions.

55. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support he is providing for the police during the mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) earlier today.

62. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate a public inquiry into the use of the police during the current coal mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of Government money so far spent on policing the miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information on the total costs of policing the dispute to date is not available. Up to 8 November the Home Office had paid advances of police grant and of the special payment which my right hon. and learned Friend is making available to police authorities on expenditure totalling some £89 million.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide details of the occupations of all persons arrested in connection with the mining dispute since 6 March;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of all service men arrested in connection with the mining dispute since 6 March between (a) firemen, (b) members of the armed forces, by service and (c) others.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information available centrally about the occupations of those arrested relates to the period 13 March to 13 November inclusive and is as follows:

Occupations given by pesons arrested between 13 March and 13 November inclusive

Occupation	Number
Miners	7,359
Retired miners	5
MPs (including MEP)	4
Transport workers	14
Students	64
Medical workers	5
Non-manual workers	26
Manual workers	173
Firemen	10
Members of HM Forces	1
Housewives	40
Unemployed	152
Retired (non-miners)	2
Not known/given	75
	7,930

I refer my hon. Friend also to the reply I gave to a question from him on 16 November at c. 366.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been (a) arrested and (b) charged with offences in connection with the mining dispute or while providing mutual aid in police areas other than their own.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been injured while maintaining order on miners' picket lines since 1 August.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the period from 1 August to 21 November inclusive 618 police officers were injured while carrying out duties in connection with miners' dispute.

Criminal Offences (Statistics)

17. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has national figures for the trend in reported criminal offences since the deployment of police in mining areas.

Mr. Mellor: The diversion of police effort for public order duties arising from the miners' dispute began in the middle of March. The number of notifiable offences recorded in the second quarter of 1984, seasonally adjusted, was about 1½ per cent. higher than in the immediately preceding quarter. This was broadly in line with the general trend.

Civil Defence

18. Sir Kenneth Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what study he has made of the costings of a 40-year civil defence shelter programme.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No detailed study has been made. The cost would vary according to the protection provided and whether the programme depended on adaption of existing buildings or purpose-built structures.

21. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the change in his Department's planning assumptions for civil defence.

64. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the change in his Department's planning assumptions for civil defence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The planning assumptions issued in Home Office circular No. ES.1/1984 in July expand on but do not change those issued in circulars ES.1/1981 and 2/1981. The new circular gives more details about the dangers of a conventional attack upon the United Kingdom, and further information on the effects of a nuclear attack.

22. Sir Edward Gardner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the Civil Defence Act 1948.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It remains this Government's intention, as we undertook in our 1983 manifesto, to seek an opportunity to amend the Civil Defence Act 1984 to enable civil defence funds to be used in safeguarding against peacetime emergencies as well as against hostile attack. It follows that we would support any private Member who introduced such a measure.

28. Sir Anthony Kershaw asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which local authorities include limited evacuation for the civil population living close to military targets in their civil defence plans.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not readily available.

35. Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to present the results of the local authority civil defence questionnaire in published form to the House.

58. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to announce the results of the civil defence questionnaire sent to local authorities.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friends to the reply given earlier today to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

36. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many volunteers have been recruited and have received training since the passage of the Civil Defence Regulations 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information sought has not so far been systematically collected. However, a recent informed estimate put the total number of volunteers recruited and trained as over 17,000.

37. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has consulted any universities in North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries involved in civil defence research projects.

Mr. Giles Shaw: With the agreement of the United States Government, the University of New Mexico has been consulted on its experience of high explosives trials simulating the blast effects of nuclear explosions.

49. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what films, audio-visual programmes and publications are available from Government sources for training community civil defence volunteers in chemical warfare defence and protective measures.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Whilst the Government believe that the best way of dealing with this threat is to obtain a comprehensive international ban on such weapons, they are examining ways of detecting and monitoring the presence of chemical agents and of warning the population who may be in danger. They are also considering what protective measures can be taken and what advice given to the population on precautions that can be taken in the home. Training material will be considered when this work is complete.

59. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in initiating light rescue training for civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under the 1983 regulations, local authorities are required to plan for a wartime rescue service which could inter alia involve civil defence volunteers. Information about local authority progress is not collected centrally, but it is intended that development of detailed guidance on training will be included in the tasks of the Home Office working party on standardisation of volunteer training.

61. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will examine the results of the simulated nuclear explosions research carried out in the United States of America with a view to establishing whether his Department's blast and casualty figures will require major changes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: These results have indeed been used in the revision of the blast and radiation casualty notes which we expect to publish early next year.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of the working party looking at the training of civil defence volunteers; and whether he will make their recommendations available to the House.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has received the report of the working party on the standardisation of training of civil defence volunteers and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. It recommends a standard pattern and syllabus of training, and the production of standardised instructional material by the Home Office. We welcome this. We are arranging for the report to be sent to the local authority associations for their information and comments, and subsequently to local authorities for their guidance.

Drugs

19. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made to counteract drug abuse.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar).

26. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority his Department gives to the prevention and detection of drug trafficking.

32. Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to introduce so as to increase the effectiveness of action against drug traffickers.

43. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special provision his Department is making to combat the hard drug problem.

52. Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to tackle drug abuse.

Mr. David Mellor: I would refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar).

Kerb Crawling

20. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards introducing legislation to make kerb crawling an offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend very much hopes that a way will be found shortly to give effect to the Criminal Law Revision Committee's recommendations on kerb crawling and related matters. We would be prepared to offer our full support to a private Member who wished to introduce such a measure.

Shotguns

23. Mr. Baldrey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that the present controls on shotguns are adequate.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no plans at present to introduce amending legislation, but my right hon. and learned Friend will continue to keep the law on shotguns under close review.

Drug Trafficking

24. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to introduce legislation to provide for the confiscation of assets of drug traffickers, including assets acquired as a consequence of criminal activities earlier than those for which the individual is convicted.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to seek an opportunity for legislation during the life of the present Parliament for the purpose of depriving offenders, including drug traffickers, of the proceeds of their crimes. The nature and scope of the proposed powers are being considered in the light of the recommendations of the Hodgson committee.

Fine Defaulters

25. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fine defaulters have been sent to prison during 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: About 16,400 fine defaulters were received into custody in England and Wales in the first nine months of 1984.

Iranian Nationals

27. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards Iranian nationals who apply for asylum on the grounds of a well-founded fear of persecution because of the length of time they have remained in the United Kingdom since the Iranian revolution.

Mr. Waddington: Every application for asylum is carefully considered in accordance with the immigration rules and the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees. Where an applicant expresses a fear of return to Iran but does not qualify for asylum here, he may be allowed to remain in this country exceptionally, outside the immigration rules. Officials have instructions to consider applications from Iranians sympathetically and cases of continuing doubt are referred to me, but there are, nevertheless, occasions where it would be inappropriate to grant exceptional treatment.

Cable Authority

29. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will establish a Cable Authority under the terms of the Cable and Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 12 November, at column 70, my right hon. and learned Friend announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) the appointment of the deputy chairman and three other members of the authority to serve alongside the chairman, whose appointment was announced in August. He has now signed a commencement order under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984, by means of which the Cable Authority will come into existence as a statutory corporation on 1 December and assume its licensing powers on 1 January.

Picketing (Offences)

30. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to speed up the rate at which alleged offences committed on or near picket lines are being dealt with in the magistrates' courts.

Mr. Mellor: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has appointed stipendiary magistrates to help deal with the increased workload of courts in a number of places affected by the miners' dispute, and he has indicated his willingness to meet any other requests for such an appointment from magistrates' courts. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has taken action to encourage and facilitate local arrangements for the transfer of business to less hard pressed courts; the use of additional accommodation for courtrooms; and the loan of staff from other areas. He will continue to take action of this kind.

Sunday Trading

31. Mr. Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the committee of inquiry into proposals to amend the Shops Act 1950.

46. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the Auld report on the Shops Act 1950.

47. Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report of the Committee of Inquiry into the proposals to amend the Shops Act 1950.

41. Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friends and my hon. and learned Friend to the reply given earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

56. Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to announce the Government's response to the recommendations of the Auld committee on possible amendments to the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend will not be in a position to make such a statement until we have given careful consideration to the recommendations of the Auld committee and to the reactions to this report.

Mr. Michael Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he will repeal or amend section 47 of the Shops Act 1950 in order to permit Sunday trading;

(2) what proposals he has to amend the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to a question from my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Carlisle) on 21 November, at column 174.

Magistrates' Courts

33. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the speed at which justice is done in the magistrates' courts.

Mr. Mellor: The speed with which cases are dealt with in the magistrates' courts varies from place to place and depends on a number of factors, including the practices of prosecution and defence. We believe that there is room for improvement within the resources available. My right hon. and learned Friend has recently issued a circular to courts urging on them a number of measures which can reduce unnecessary waiting time, and the Prosecution of Offences Bill contains provisions enabling time limits to be imposed on criminal proceedings.

Vietnamese Refugees

34. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will broaden the categories of relatives of Vietnamese political refugees, now settled in the United Kingdom, who may be admitted to the United Kingdom so as to include all members of the immediate family.

Mr. Waddington: No. We already agree to the admission of the spouse and minor dependent children of refugees who are settled in the United Kingdom. All other applications are examined carefully on a case by case basis.

Licensing Laws

38. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to reform the licensing laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no immediate plans to introduce legislation to reform the licensing law, but my right hon. and learned Friend is keeping the matter under review.

Betting, Gaming and Lotteries (Amendment) Act 1984

39. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in framing the regulations under the provisions of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries (Amendment) Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor: We intend to issue a consultation document soon.

Teenage Courts

40. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the introduction of teenage courts on the lines of those working on an experimental basis in the United States of America.

Mr. Mellor: I am not clear what exactly my hon. Friend has in mind, but perhaps he could let me have details and I should then be glad to consider them.

School Premises (Entertainments)

42. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will be in a position to issue guidance to local authorities on the extent to which entertainments on school premises are subject to licensing requirements.

Mr. Mellor: A Home Office circular offering guidance on this matter will be issued to district councils next week.

Metropolitan Police

44. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reviewed the current establishment levels and deployment of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has told the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police will be allowed an additional 50 police and 132 civilian posts during the financial year 1985-86. This will bring the police establishment to 27,165 and the civil staff ceiling to 13,882, representing increases of 576 and 832 respectively since 1982. On 30 September 1984 the police strength was 26,779 and the civil staff strength was 13,301.

The deployment of officers is a matter for the Commissioner, but he agrees an overall policing strategy for the metropolis with the Home Secretary as police authority.

Television (Concessionary Licences)

45. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the present television concessionary licensing system.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We recognise that the present concessionary licence arrangements are anomalous in a number of respects. The concessionary scheme for retired people in residential care was modified earlier this year to enable disabled people to qualify on the same terms as retirement pensioners, but my right hon. and learned Friend has not ruled out the possibility of further examination.

Civil Defence College

51. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken to update and expand the library service of the civil defence college.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Expenditure on books and periodicals has risen from £1,635 in 1983-84 to an estimated £3,000 in 1984-85. Further improvements are planned, including structural alterations and arrangements for accessing data from other sources.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many directing and tutorial staff are currently employed at the Civil Defence college; and how many of these have had a full-time career in the services or police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are 17 directing and tutorial staff; of these 10 have had full-time careers in the services or the police and a further two are on secondment.

Immigration

53. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the number of fiancés who were refused entry clearance to enter the United Kingdom in the last 12 months on the grounds that their primary purpose was other than marriage.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is available only for the Indian sub-continent, for which the latest quarterly figures are given in the following table:

Fiances refused entry clearance in the Indian subcontinent solely or partly because the primary purpose of the marriage was to obtain admission to the United Kingdom.

Number

	Solely	Partly 1983
3rd quarter	140	50
4th quarter	240	30

Departmental Staff

54. Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff there are in the F6 division of his Department; and how many of them have visited local authorities during 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There are thirty-seven in F6 Division. Numerous visits have been paid to local authorities by the four staff most closely involved.

Emergency Planning Staff

57. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations to bring local authority emergency planning staff into a common national grading and salary structure.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Representations to this effect from the County Emergency Planning Officer's Society are currently receiving consideration.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

60. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will dismiss the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Brittan: The Commissioner is appointed by Her Majesty The Queen on my recommendation. He has my full confidence.

National Reporting Centre

63. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers man the national reporting centre daily; how many are on the roster for service there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The president of the Association of Chief Police Officers, colleagues in the association and one of Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary are at various times at the National Reporting Centre, which is co-ordinating responses to requests for assistance from chief officers of police in England and Wales. During the daytime they have at present the help at the centre of six police officers and two civilian staff. Overnight the staffing is normally at a lower level. Duties are arranged on a week to week basis; there is no regular roster.

Miss Hilda Murrell

65. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable for Salop about the conduct of the police investigation into the death of Miss Hilda Murrell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable of West Mercia constabulary that an investigation into Miss Murrell's death began on 24 March 1984 and is continuing. An inquest is expected to take place next month.

Firearms

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many weapons classified under firearms during 1983, coming into police possession, appeared in constabularies' annual reports under the heading (a) voluntary surrender or confiscation by the courts, (b) voluntary surrender and (c) confiscation by the courts, respectively;

(2) how many centre-fire cartridges, excluding shotgun and 0·22 rim-fire cartridges in 1983, were (a) voluntarily surrendered to the police, (b) seized by the police, with the owners subsequently agreeing to police disposal, or (c) confiscated by the courts (i) from persons not holding or who have never held part (1) firearms certificates, (ii) from the holders of current part (1) firearms certificates, (iii) from the holders after expiry of part (1) firearms certificates, who had not been issued with temporary certificates to enable them legally to dispose of the ammunition and (iv) from the holders after expiry of part (1) firearms certificates, who had been issued with temporary certificates to enable them legally to dispose of the ammunition;

(3) how many 0·22 calibre rim-fire cartridges were (a) voluntarily surrendered to the police, (b) seized by the police, with the owners subsequently agreeing to police disposal, or (c) confiscated by the courts (i) from persons not holding or who have never held part (1) firearms certificates, (ii) from the holders of current part (1) firearms certificates, (iii) from the holders after expiry of part (1) firearms certificates, who had not been issued with temporary certificates to enable them legally to dispose of the ammunition and (iv) from the holders after expiry of part (1) firearms certificates who had been issued with temporary certificates to enable them legally to dispose of the ammunition, during 1983;

(6) how many applications during 1983 for the renewal of shotgun certificates were granted.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the standard territorial conditions as proposed by his working party into the administration of the Firearms Act 1968, dated April 1984, for use in the case of firearm certificate holders with access to a number of different locations for the use of weapons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Chief constables have been asked to adopt the working party's recommendation, and my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to review the position next summer.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is considering taking to control the purchase and use of O.410, and other, smooth-bored shotguns with fitted sound moderators (silencers) and the purchase and use of sound moderators as accessories in line with the current controls in force on sound moderators as accessories for fitment, according to part (1) of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Giles Shaw: At present, none.

Prostitution

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fines imposed on people convicted of prostitution at the South Western magistrates' court during the last 12 months have been under £10, under £20, between £20 and £50, between £50 and £100, over £100, over £200, over £300, over £400 and over £500, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the following table and covers offences of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution by both males and females.

Persons fined for offences of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution at the South Western Magistrates' Court by amount of fine. 1983

Criminal Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give a breakdown by year of the numbers of females aged 14 years but under 21 years who were (a) found guilty of or (b) cautioned for, indictable offences per 100,000 of population in each of the last 15 years;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by year of the numbers of males aged 14 years and under 21 years who were (a) found guilty of or (b) cautioned for, indictable offences per 100,000 of population in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published in tables 5.18 and 5.19 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1983" (Cmnd. 9349) and in the corresponding tables in the publications for earlier years.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of juvenile offenders (a) found guilty of or (b) cautioned for offences of burglary, criminal damage and theft in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" for the years 1980 to 1983 in supplementary tables, vol. 3, tables S3.2(B), S3.2(C), S3.4(B), S3.4(C), S3.7(B) and S3.7(C); and for 1979 in the Command Paper (Cmnd. 8098), tables 3*(b), 3(c), 7(b), 7(c), 34(b)* and 34*(c)*.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give a breakdown by age of offender in years of the total number of offences committed by females under 25 years of age which resulted in either cautions or convictions for each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by age of offender in years of the total number of offences committed by males under 25 years of age which resulted in either cautions or convictions for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1983" (Cmnd. 9349) (table 5.19 for indictable offences and supplementary tables, vol. 4, table S4.1(B) and S4.1(D) for summary offences).

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has carried out on the results of the application of the short sharp shock treatment on young offenders; and on what basis of research he has made his decision to introduce this system in all young offender establishments.

Mr. Mellor: On 24 July my right hon. and learned Friend announced the publication of a report by the young offenders psychology unit evaluating the experiment with tougher regimes in selected detention centres and a programme of work to establish a consistent regime for the whole detention centre system. Much but not all of the experimental regime will be incorporated into the new regime on a permanent basis. Full account is being taken of the evaluation findings, experience of running the experimental regimes, and the way in which detention centres generally have geared their regimes to the new sentencing structure introduced in May 1983; and the prison service unions are being fully consulted. The new regime will come into operation next year.

Police Officers (Cautions)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of cautions given by police officers in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published in table 5.3 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1983" (Cmnd. 9349).

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown by police force in England and Wales of the number of occasions on which cautions are given to (a) all offenders, (b) offenders aged over 25 years, (c) offenders aged 20 to 25 years, (d) offenders aged 18 to 20 years and (e) offenders aged under 18 years.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" supplementary tables 1983, vol. 3 (tables S3. 8(A)—indictable offences—and S3. 8(B)—summary offences).

Remand

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time spent on remand in remand centres awaiting trial.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available on the average time spent on remand in different types of establishment. The information available centrally relates to the average time spent on remand in custody by all untried prisoners and is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2*(g)* of the latest issue for 1983, Cmnd. 9363).

Charities

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to regulate the methods by which charities raise funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to do so. Legislation already exists to control charitable collections in the street and from house to house; and the provisions of the criminal law relating to fraud and deception apply where appropriate.

Paedophilia

Mrs Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now introduce legislation to enable him to proscribe all organisations whose declared aim is to campaign for the freedom of adults to have sexual relationships with children.

Mr. Mellor: We will be considering carefully what lessons may be learned from the recent trial of leading members of the Paedophile Information Exchange. My right hon. and learned Friend would prefer to complete that consideration before reaching any conclusion about the adequacy of the existing law protecting children from the sexual attentions of adults.

Mr. Roy Meads

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the remand category on which Mr. Roy Meads has been held at Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, Birmingham, since his arrest on 12 July.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Mead's security category has been reviewed and it has been decided that he should continue to remain provisionally in security category A.

Released Prisoners (Accommodation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the provision of further hostel accommodation for released prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: Earlier this year my right hon. and learned Friend made available additional resources to enable some 600 new after-care hostel places to be funded by the end of 1984-85. He also put in hand a review of the voluntary after-care accommodation scheme, with a view to assessing need and effectiveness more accurately, and to achieving economies and greater efficiency. The review should be completed early next year, and he will then consider the future of the scheme.

Motorways

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions and in how many places it has been necessary for the police to restrain the passage of motorists on exits and entrances to motorways since 6 March;

(2) on how many occasions it has been necessary to divert the flow of traffic on motorways for reasons other than those connected with road traffic accidents and road works since 1 March.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Longmoor Base, Hampshire

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire police as to how many people were detained by police in a pit at Longmoor base firing range between 15 November and 20 November.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable tells me that no one was detained in a pit.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire police as to how many police were involved in the operation to guard the cruise missile convoy which entered Longmoor base, Liss, Hampshire, between Thursday 15 November and Tuesday 20 November;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire police as to why police involved in the operation to guard the cruise missile convoy based at Longmoor base have blocked A and B roads leading in and out of Greatham village.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable tells me that no police were used to guard the convoy to which the hon. Member refers. Some A and B roads were blocked for a few minutes in order to facilitate the passage of the convoy and for the safety of other road users.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire police as to how many persons have been arrested by the police at demonstrations outside and inside Longmoor camp and on which days; and how many were charged.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Edward Hopson

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inquiry to consider whether the arrangements for supervising and reporting on Mr. Edward Hopson after his discharge from Broadmoor were carried out satisfactorily.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend is inquiring into the efficacy of the arrangements made for supervising Mr. Hopson and he has asked for reports from those responsible. In the light of the reports he will consider whether any further action is required.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners of European nationality are currently detained in Her Majesty's prisons having been convicted of criminal offences; and if he will give a breakdown of the figures by individual countries of origin.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the following table. Information is not recorded centrally on the nationality of persons held in prison department establishments in England and Wales. Information on their country of birth is recorded centrally but is reasonably complete only for sentenced prisoners; of the total of 32,700 sentenced prisoners on 30 September 1984, information on country of birth was not available for 1,500.

Sentenced prisoners recorded as born in Europe in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1984: by country of birth.

	*Estimated number
United Kingdom, Channel Islands, Isle of Man	28,130
Irish Republic	620
Austria	5
Belgium/Luxembourg	5
Cyprus	80
Denmark	5
Federal Republic of Germany	120
France	15
Gibraltar	5
Greece	5
Holland	30
Hungary	15
Italy	45

	*Estimated number
Malta	20
Poland	15
Spain	20
Other Europe (excluding USSR)	30

* Rounded figures. The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate; detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to lay the statutory instruments referred to in section 9(2) of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes that an order under section 9(2) of the Act, bringing the Act into force, will be made early in the new year.

Trent RHA (Premises)

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of south Yorkshire under section 30(1) of the Police Act 1964 into (a) the policing of the premises of Trent regional health authority on 1 October, (b) the number of people charged and the offences with which they were charged and (c) the number of people who subsequently required hospital treatment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable tells me that on 1 October a small number of police officers were sent to the Trent regional health authority's premises in Old Fulwood road, Sheffield, because there was reason to believe that members of the National Union of Public Employees would be demonstrating against the employment of contract cleaners, who were due to begin work there that day. When the contract cleaners arrived for work, a number of demonstrators tried to prevent them entering the premises. Four people were arrested. Three of them were charged, with (i) assault on the police and conduct likely to cause a breach of the peace, (ii) obstructing a police officer and (iii) assault on the police. The fourth, who was arrested for obstructing a police officer and assault on the police, was reported for process by way of summons.

Two people, including a police officer, required hospital treatment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications he has received for compensation as a result of the introduction of milk quotas; what is his estimate of the number likely to qualify for compensation and the resultant cost to the taxpayer; and whether compensation will be payable regardless of the means of the applicant and the profitability of the farming enterprise as a whole.

Mr. MacGregor: Some 2,747 of the 4,826 producers in England and Wales who originally expressed an interest in the outgoers scheme were invited to commit themselves to the scheme at the beginning of October. As soon as it became clear that a significant proportion of these producers were not going out of production after all we sent out a further 380 invitations to make good the shortfall. On both occasions we gave priority to the smallest producers, as we will if we have to repeat the process in the future.

It is not yet possible to estimate how many producers will finally join the scheme, but on the basis of present indications the figure is unlikely to exceed 2,000. The aim of the scheme is to take in 289 million litres of quota in England and Wales. The total cost in England and Wales is expected to be £37·5 million, spread over five years.

We have not inquired into the means of applicants or the profitability of their farm enterprises by giving priority to the smallest producers we have tried to assist those who are most in need. Additionally, we have excluded a small number of producers because milk is only a relatively small part of their overall farming enterprises.

Forestry Commission (Sites of Special Interest)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the guidance he gives to the Forestry Commission regarding its management of forests in England containing sites of special scientific interest and, in particular, that part of a forest notified as a site of special scientific interest; if he is satisfied that the commission is following this guidance regarding its management of Salcey Forest, Northamptonshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: We have not given any specific guidance to the Forestry Commission regarding the management of its forests where these contain sites of special scientific interest. The commission does, however, consult the Nature Conservancy Council on the management of all SSSIs on its land.

There is a very good working relationship between the commission and the Nature Conservancy Council. Salcey forest has been managed since the late 1960s to a plan agreed with the council and the two local naturalist trusts. A new management plan was prepared recently.

Beef Producers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he plans to make to the French Government concerning its proposals to introduce national aid to beef producers.

Mr. MacGregor: We share my hon. Friend's concern about the French Government's proposed national aids and we made our views plain at last week's Agricultural Council. The European Commission is responsible for implementing the state aid rules under the EEC treaty. It was made clear to the French and the Council that, in accordance with their obligations under the treaty, they must properly notify their proposed measures to the Commission immediately to enable the Commission to assess their compatibility with the treaty. We made it quite clear that we would not agree to any measures which were not so compatible.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards he intends to introduce in order to maintain the competitive position of British beef producers in the event that other member states introduce national aids to their own beef producers.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom beef producers already receive substantial support from a number of measures, including the beef variable premium scheme, intervention and private storage arrangements and payments for suckler cows and hill cows.

The European Commission is responsible for deciding whether a national aid is compatible with the EEC treaty. In the case of any national aids to the beef sector being introduced by another member state, we have urged, and will continue to urge, the Commission to take immediate and positive action to ensure that the state aid rules under the treaty are observed.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the commodities covered by the common agricultural policy, including rapeseed, olive oil and so on (a) the amounts currently in surplus, (b) the target/intervention/threshold price in the United Kingdom, (c) the corresponding central price for the European Economic Community, (d) the corresponding price for West Germany, (e) the levy in the United Kingdom at the latest available date and (f) the world price.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Northern Agricultural Trade Board

Miss Maynard asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figure of those in the Northern Agricultural Trade Board area completing youth training schemes who are kept on as part of the work force after their period of training, who were not employed at the same work place before participating in the youth training scheme, either as employees or as members of the employers' family.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Poultry

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in his consideration of the development of a new welfare code for poultry.

Mr. Jopling: I met the Farm Animal Welfare Council recently, when I explained that revisions to the codes would be laid before Parliament after the Council of Minister had received and considered the report on laying hens in battery cages due from the European Commission by 1 January 1985.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. John Heddle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to introduce legislation to control the sale of Scotch whisky.

Mr. Jopling: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, I have withdrawn the proposals that we made last year for new whisky regulations because we are advised that it would not be appropriate to use food legislation to impose a minimum strength requirement. We are however considering ways and means of improving the labelling requirements for understrength spirits and we expect to make fresh proposals on this matter shortly. We will also be making proposals for regulations defining whisky to replace the definition in the Finance Act 1969, as amended.

We shall continue to press for progress in the Council of Ministers on the proposal for a Community regulation defining spirituous beverages, which includes a requirement that Scotch whisky shall be not less than 40 per cent. alcohol by volume.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Share Ownership and Profit Sharing

Mr. Murphy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will give consideration to introducing incentives for firms to provide employees with opportunities for share ownership and profit sharing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The Government welcome employee shareholding and profit sharing schemes, which give employees a direct financial interest in the fortunes of their employers. It is for that reason that tax concessions were introduced in the 1980, 1982 and 1983 Budgets to encourage profit sharing schemes and in the 1980, 1982 and 1984 Budgets to encourage share option schemes.

Companies (Taxation)

Mr. Maude asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is satisfied that no inconvenience is being or will be caused to taxpayers by the Inland Revenue's intention to deal with the affairs of a group of companies from a single tax office.

Mr. Moore: Handling the tax affairs of the larger groups of companies in a single tax office is the most effective and efficient way of doing the job, and I am satisfied that it will not in general cause problems for taxpayers. The Inland Revenue will be glad to look into any cases where it is claimed that inconvenience will be caused.

Isle of Man

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Government will compensate the Isle of Man for loss sustained due to the extension of United Kingdom territorial jurisdiction for tax purposes to cover areas of the Isle of Man pursuant to section 38 of the Finance Act 1973.

Mr. Moore: No part of the Isle of Man or the territorial waters around the island falls within the area specified by section 38 of the Finance Act 1973. The question of compensation for this does not therefore arise.

Companies (Christmas Entertainment)

Mr. Best asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost to the Inland Revenue of allowing companies to spend a maximum of £35 on Christmas entertainment for employees.

Mr. Moore: I assume that my hon. Friend has in mind the potential loss of income tax from not treating certain expenditure of this kind as a taxable benefit-in-kind. I regret that information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Correspondence

Mr. Bulmer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to write to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest as promised in the reply by the Minister of State on 1 August, Official Report, column 394.

Mr. Hayhoe: I wrote to my hon. Friend yesterday and apologise for the delay.

Clothing and Footwear Industries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total income tax revenue generated from employees in the clothing and footwear manufacturing industries in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moore: The available information relates to the amounts of income tax deducted from the earnings of employees under the pay-as-you-earn system. Employees are classified to the industry in which the majority of those paid from a particular location are engaged. Estimates for the last five tax years for which information is available are as follows:

Tax Year	Total deducted £ million
1977-78	145
1978-79	155
1979-80	165
1980-81	180
1981-82	200

Children's Clothing and Footwear (VAT)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Department has collected concerning the effect of the imposition of value added tax on children's clothing and footwear on sales of those products.

Mr. Hayhoe: All aspects of consumers' expenditure are kept under review. Although some information is available on the likely relationship between price and sales for clothing and footwear in general, there is very little specifically on children's clothing and footwear.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those European Economic Community member countries which collect value added tax or an equivalent from sales of children's clothing or footwear; and in which year this taxation was introduced in those countries.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following EC member states apply VAT at a positive rate to children's clothing and footwear, and have done so, according to the available information, since they first introduced the tax:

	Date of introduction of VAT
Belgium	1.1.1971
Denmark	3.7.1967
France	*1.1.1968
W. Germany	1.1.1968
Italy	1.1.1973
Luxembourg	1.1.1970
Netherlands	1.1.1969

* Date of the extension of VAT to cover retail transactions.

Greece has not yet introduced VAT, but applies a variety of indirect taxes, including turnover tax, to all clothing and footwear.

EC (Value Added Tax)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects that the European Court will make a decision on the proposition from the Common Market Commission that the United Kingdom should levy value-added tax on children's shoes, newspaper advertising and fuel supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The EC Commission has sent the United Kingdom Government a reasoned opinion under article 169 of the treaty of Rome, alleging that certain aspects of the VAT zero rates in force in the United Kingdom are contrary to the provisions of the sixth VAT directive. The opinion includes newspaper advertising, and fuel and power when supplied to businesses, but does not include children's shoes. The United Kingdom Government do not accept the Commission's views. The issue of a reasoned opinion does not necessarily mean that the matter will be put to the European Court; that is for the Commission to decide in the light of the United Kingdom Government's response: as to implementation of decisions of the court, we are of course bound by our treaty obligations.

Mortgages (Tax Relief)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the annual cost of tax relief on mortgage interest in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what is the average subsidy per owner occupier through tax relief on mortgage interest in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Double Taxation Agreement

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to prevent the abuse of double taxation agreements between the United States and the United Kingdom by international companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I am not aware of any abuse by international companies of the double taxation convention between the United Kingdom and the United States. If the hon. Member has some particular aspect in mind, I suggest that he should write to me about it.

Channel Islands and Isle of Man (Tax Liability)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellore of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to make United Kingdom citizens resident in the Channel Islands and Isle of Man liable to United Kingdom taxes.

Mr. Moore: Residents of the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands are already liable to United Kingdom tax on income and gains derived from the United Kingdom, in accordance with the Taxes Acts and subject to the terms of double taxation agreements.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will update the statistics given in tables 5 and 6 and chart 1 of the survey of personal incomes 1979-80 for all the subsequent financial years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax was paid by people with the highest (a) 5 per cent., (b) 10 per cent. and (c) 20 per cent. of incomes in each of the last 10 financial years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to improve control of the running costs of Government Departments; and what are the latest figures available, broken down by Departments, wages and salaries, personnel overheads, accommodation costs, office services and other services.

Mr. Peter Rees: The table shows how running costs have increased since the Government took office:

Percentage increase

	1979-80 to 1980-81	1980-81 to 1981-82	1981-82 to 1982-83	1982-83 to 1983-84
Running costs	19·2	11·5	*9·4	*6·3
			†7·6	†6·9
Inflation‡	18·7	9·9	6·8	4·7

* Figures for 1982-83 for the Ministry of Defence are distorted by the Falklands conflict.

† Excluding Ministry of Defence.

‡ GDP deflator.

Comparison between 1982-83 and 1983-84 is complicated by factors outside the Department's control; especially changes in the basis of accommodation costs and an increased notional allowance for pensions. Correcting for these factors reduces the figure of 6·9 per cent. to about 5·5 per cent. Ministers are continuing to take a personal interest in controlling the costs of their Departments and continuing savings of £60 million per annum have been identified from a wide variety of measures including up to £22 million per annum from a review of staffing allowances in the unemployment benefit service, £12 million per annum from contracting out cleaning and catering in the Ministry of Defence, and £4 million per annum from a new method for collecting and delivering mail in the Department of Health and Social Security.

The following table shows forecast outturn for 1983-84 for each Department. The figures for the Ministry of Defence cover military and civilian running costs which cannot be separated with precision.

Notes:

Wages and Salaries = wages, salaries, overtime payments, employers' National Insurance contributions and notional cost of accruing liability for pensions of serving staff;

Personnel overheads = travel, subsistence, removals, entertainment, catering support, protective clothing and training;

Accommodation costs = rates, heating, lighting, utilities, furniture and fittings, and notional market rental values for Crown and leased property;

Office services = postage, telecommunications, stationery, printing, binding, publication, library services, current expenditure on computers, office machinery and vehicles, and publicity and advertising;

Other costs = services provided by the Post Office, other agencies, and other departments.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the fuel duty rebate will continue to operators of buses after privatisation.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have been asked to reply. Yes.

SCOTLAND

Council House Sales

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list details of sales of council housing to sitting tenants up to the latest convenient date, by district within regional sub-totals; and if he will indicate the percentage of the relevant housing stock sold.

Mr. Ancram: The details requested on sales of council housing by local authorities new towns and the Scottish Special Housing Association are set out in the following table. The information given covers the period from 1 April 1979 to 30 September 1984.

Forestry Commission

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the figure of £100 million is the final amount the Government require from the sale of Forestry Commission assets.

Mr. John MacKay: The figure of £100 million is not a target imposed by the Government, but is the Forestry Commission's estimate of the total amount they expect to receive from the sale of assets during the eight year period to 31 March 1989. The question of sales by the Commission will be reviewed in a few years' time.

Agriculture (Expenditure Cuts)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the president of the National Farmers Union of Scotland to discuss the Government's proposed expenditure cuts on agriculture.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State is seeing the president of the union today, and they will be discussing, among other things, the question of Government support for agriculture.

Local Authorities (Capital Allocations)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the capital allocations to (a) Glasgow district council and (b) Scottish local authorities in each year since 1979-80, all expressed at November 1984 prices.

Mr. Ancram: The information is set out in the following table. The figures include capital receipts which automatically enhance capital allocations. The cash figures have been adjusted to a cost basis by means of the GDP deflator (1983-84=100).

Local Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the actual capital spending of (a) Glasgow district council and (b) all Scottish local authorities in each of the last five years for which figures are available, all expressed at November 1984 prices.

Mr. Ancram: The information is set out in the following table. The figures exclude capital expenditure met from current revenue which does not count against capital allocations. The cash figures have been adjusted to a cost basis by the GDP deflator (1983-84=100).

Housing Stock

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the proportion of the housing stock belonging to (a) Glasgow district council, (b) Edinburgh district council, (c) Aberdeen district council and (d) Dundee district council which consists of non-trading dwellings (i) built prior to 1960 and (ii) built after 1960.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not held centrally.

Housing Subsidies

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of state for Scotland what is the average subsidy per council tenant through housing support grant allocations to local authorities in Scotland in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

House Building

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the number of non-traditional houses (a) built before 1960 and (b) built after 1960 which have been demolished since 1979; and if he will list the housing authorities which carried out such demolitions, showing the number of dwellings each authority demolished in each or any year since 1979 and the cost to the authority of such demolition in that year.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not held centrally.

Roads

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in view of the number of fatal and other accidents on the A92 Aberdeen to Fraserburgh road and the A952 Toll of Burness to Peterhead road, he will now investigate the possibility of providing dual carriageways on these roads.

Mr. Ancram: The A92 between Toll of Burness and the A952 junction south of Rathen is a non-trunk route and is therefore the responsibility of Grampian regional council.

Improvements to dual carriageway standards are planned for the trunk route section of A92 at Tipperty; between Murcar and Balmedie; and on the southern section of the Ellon bypass. Traffic volumes and accident records do not suggest that additional dual carriageway standard improvements are needed on A92 or A952 at present.

Forestry

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of forest land in Scotland which have been sold under the Forestry Act 1981, giving the acreage in each case and the price paid in each case.

Mr. Younger: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 25 July 1984, at columns 665-83, which listed forest areas sold by the Forestry Commission between the passing of the Forestry Act 1981 and 21 June 1984.

From 22 June 1984 until 21 October 1984—the latest date for which information is available—further sales of forest land have taken place in Scotland as shown in the following table.

I am not in a position to give details of the prices paid; the recommendation made on this matter by the Public Accounts Committee in its eighteenth report is still being considered.

Land Sales

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what acreages of land have been sold off by (a) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and (b) the Highlands and Islands Development Board in each of the past five years.

Mr. Younger: The figures for each of the past five years for which information is complete are:

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement about the new arrangements he has agreed with his French counterpart on the channel tunnel;

(2) if he will make a statement on the revised arrangements for the channel tunnel political guarantees vis-à-vis the public sector borrowing requirement pursuant to arrangements recently agreed between the French Government and Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ridley: The basis of my agreement with French Ministers on 14 November, was that the two Governments remain willing to take the necessary steps to facilitate the construction of a link if a satisfactory proposal comes forward that can be financed without support from public funds or Government financial guarantees. It was agreed to set up a working group of officials to prepare guidance to potential promoters. I have placed a copy of the communiqué issued on that occasion in the Library.

The Governments consider that political guarantees would be necessary to cover the possibility of failure by either Government to permit the project to proceed to completion. The giving of such guarantees would not affect the public sector borrowing requirement.

ENVIRONMENT

Untreated Sewage

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations in England and Wales at which water authorities discharge untreated sewage into the sea.

Mr. Macfarlane: This information is not available centrally. However, I would draw my hon. Friend's attention to the report by the Water Research Centre on the quality of beaches and bathing waters in England and Wales which was sent to the Library on 1 November. This will provide much of the information he seeks.

Maltby Common

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he obtained, prior to the public inquiry in 1982 concerning Maltby common, to satisfy him on the ownership question.

Mr. Macfarlane: The evidence consisted of various documents including title deeds, and the opinion of Mr. Francis Ferris, QC, which was obtained by Rotherham metropolitan borough council.

Third London Airport (Siting)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he proposes to take to encourage public debate on the report of the inspector on the siting of a third London airport;

(2) whether he has received the report of the inspector on the siting of a third London airport;

(3) whether he proposes to publish the report of the inspector on the siting of a third London airport.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friends have not yet received the Inspector's report. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport promised when he moved the Second Reading of the Civil Aviation Bill, the inspector's report will be published as soon as possible after it has been received because of the relationship with the British Airways prospectus. The House will then have an opportunity to give its views before my right hon. Friends announce their decision.

System-built Dwellings (Demolition)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will (a) publish the number of industrialised and system-built dwellings built after 1960 which have been demolished since 1979 and (b) list the housing authorities which carried out such demolitions, showing the number of dwellings each authority demolished in each year since 1979 and the cost to the authority of such demolition in that year;

(2) if he will (a) publish the number of non-traditional dwellings built before 1960 which have been demolished since 1979 and (b) list the housing authorities which carried out such demolitions, showing the number of dwellings each authority demolished in each year since 1979 and the cost to the authority of such demolition in that year.

Sir George Young: The Department does not have this information.

Merseyside (Financial Provision)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what form he is hoping to hold talks with representatives of the county council and district councils on Merseyside about financial provision and other matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am quite prepared to meet representatives of the county and district councils on Merseyside about financial provision in respect of abolition if they ask to see me.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning the future of St. George's hall in Liverpool; if he has plans to discuss the matter with interested parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 29 October to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) at c. 868. Since then I have received a representation from Professor Basil Smallman of Liverpool university.

I have no plans at present to hold discussions on the future of St. George's Hall. I am still waiting to hear from Liverpool city council who are considering a number of possible uses. I have made it clear to them that I shall be happy to discuss their proposals as soon as they are ready.

Rates Act 1984 (Press Campaign)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of the public presentation of the Rates Act 1984 and the estimated cost of the press campaign (a) in the London borough of Haringey, (b) all the rate-capped authorities and (c) nationally, in promoting the Government's campaign explaining the purpose of rate-capping.

Mr. Waldegrave: The estimated total cost of the advertisements and leaflets issued in respect of the rate limitation provisions in the Rates Act 1984 was £418,630. Of this, £148,630 was the cost of the preparation and delivery of the information leaflet to 5 million households in the areas covered by rate limited authorities. Advertisements in local newspapers in these areas and in certain national newspapers cost a further £270,000. It is not possible to break down the total cost between different geographical areas.

"Protecting the Ratepayer"

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of preparation, printing and delivery of the leaflet "Protecting the Ratepayer" in (a) the London borough of Haringey and (b) all the rate-capped authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: The estimated cost of preparation, printing and delivery of the leaflet "Protecting the Ratepayer" in all ratecapped authorities is £148,630. It is not possible to break down the cost into individual areas.

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of the implications of the advice in the leaflet "Protecting the Ratepayer" for the level of spending by authorities for which he has determined a rate ceiling for 1985-86, he will withdraw the leaflet.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

GLC and ILEA

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the approximate number of persons employed by the Greater London council and the Inner London education authority in the year 1984; and if he will tabulate the future distribution of such persons into the various bodies envisaged in his legislative proposals under the respective headings and named services (a) continued on an all-London elected or joint basis, (b) becoming the responsibility of London boroughs, (c) becoming the employees of another statutory body and (d) surplus to future requirements, together with the respective totals.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to figures supplied by the Greater London council for the June 1984 joint manpower watch, the council employs about 110,000 staff, of whom about 88,000 are allocated to the ILEA. My right hon. Friend hopes to publish shortly a paper about the staffing aspects of our proposals, which will expand on what paragraph 4.3 of the White Paper (Cmnd. 9063) said about staff transfers. But decisions on future staffing will, in general, be a matter for the successor bodies.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the expected expenditure of the Greater London council, including the Inner London education authority, for its principal purposes for the financial year 1984-85 under the headings related to his legislative proposals for London local government services, namely (a) continuing on an all-London elected or joint basis, (b) becoming the responsibility of London boroughs, (c) becoming the responsibility of another statutory body and (d) to be discontinued, together with the respective totals for each category.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following is the available information about the GLC and ILEA 1984-85 budgeted net current expenditure:

	£ million
(a) (i) on services continuing on an all-London elected or joint basis	*127
(ii) ILEA	900
(b) on a services becoming the responsibility of London boroughs and on services to be discontinued	†380-400
(c) on services becoming the responsibility of another statutory body	‡203-223

* Fire and civil defence joint board.

† It will be for the boroughs to decide on the extent of continued spending on discretionary services.

‡ Passenger transport revenue support, land drainage and flood protection, expenditure on some roads becoming the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Tranpsort and some expenditure on Historic Buildings and the Arts. Estimates of these (apart from the first two) are not available from budget returns and an approximate range has therefore been quoted.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest (Scotland)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all sites of special scientific interest in Scotland along with their respective acreages.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are approximately 1,000 sites of special scientific interest in Scotland. A detailed list is being prepared and I will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it is available, and will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the results of his Department's exercise to examine the problem of long-term empty dwellings in the local authority sector.

Mr. Gow: The meetings with the 30 participating authorities have been completed, and a report has today been placed in the Library. Copies have been made available to the participating authorities and the local authority associations.

My right hon. Friend has decided to take the following initial steps as a result of the report—

a. to issue a Circular to local authorities setting out ways in which better management practices can reduce the number of empty dwellings. The Local Authority Associations will shortly be consulted about a draft of the Circular;

b. to examine the scope for restoring eligibility for Housing Association grant (Mini-HAG) to short-life properties in local authority ownership.

Local Government Finance Studies

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he is proposing to conduct the proposed local government finance studies.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The studies will be undertaken under the direction of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for local government finance, in association with Ministers from the Scottish and Welsh offices. Professor Christopher Foster, Leonard Hoffmann QC, Lord Rothschild and Professor Tom Wilson have agreed to act as independent advisors.

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, once the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils have ceased to exist, he plans to alter, for the London boroughs, the City of London and the metropolitan district councils in England, the existing limitation of the product of a two penny rate on expenditure, which may be incurred under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The latest information available to the Department does not indicate that, in general, the proposed successor authorities are unduly restricted, either by the current arrangements for section 137 or by the use of other relevant powers, in meeting the genuine needs of their areas, including the giving of grants to voluntary bodies and assistance to industry. While we see no reason to alter the limit so as to enable those successor authorities to accommodate the full amount of expenditure which the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils will be incurring under section 137 prior to their proposed abolition, I will, keep the position carefully under review, and will be prepared to take account of any fresh factors which authorities and the voluntary sector may put to me.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, in October; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; and in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being concluded.

Mr. Scott: During October, 30 strip searches were carried out on 18 female inmates in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh. Individual prisoners were searched the following number of times:

Number of prisoners	Number of searches in each case

No prohibited articles were found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched.

Tamnamore, Dungannon (Incident)

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the incident at Tamnamore, Dungannon on 19 October involving terrorists and the security forces which resulted in the death of Mr. Fred Jackson.

Mr. Scott: On the morning of 19 October a military patrol encountered a group it believed to be armed terrorists in a stolen van near Tamnamore, Dungannon. A pursuit ensued during which fire was exchanged between the soldiers and terrorists. Mr. Jackson was caught in this exchange of fire as he left his place of work and died from his wounds a short time later. The terrorists, who were acknowledged by the Provisional Irish Republican Army to be members of their organisation, abandoned their vehicle about a mile from the scene of the shooting and hijacked a further two vehicles in making good their escape. It was subsequently determined that the fatal shot came from the weapon of a member of the Army patrol. As the incident is currently the subject of an investigation by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and as there has not yet been an inquest, it would be inappropriate for me to comment at this stage, other than to express my profound sympathy to Mr. Jackson's family on their tragic bereavement.

WALES

Bison Wall Frame Buildings

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the faults (a) to (e) specified in his Department's letter of 5 October 1983, those authorities which have undertaken, are undertaking or are planing to undertake remedial works on Bison wall frame buildings with respect to each fault specified.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: According the information available to the Department, none at present.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those authorities which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame dwellings for possible faults (a) in the connections between wall and floor panels and in the restraint of load-bearing walls, (b) in parapet fixing, (c) in the ties between inner and outer leaves of external cladding panels and (d) with spalling concrete or loose aggregate finishes.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I understand that Wrexham Maelor borough council, Montgomery district council and Lliw Valley borough council have appraised their dwellings with these possible faults in mind.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those local authorities which have replied to his Department's letter of 5 October 1983 about Bison wall frame dwellings, together with the dates on which each reply was received.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is as follows:

Local Authority	Date of Reply
Montgomery District Council	19 October 1983
Wrexham Maelor Borough Council	8 November 1983
Lliw Valley Borough Council	15 November 1983
Delyn Borough Council	23 December 1983

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in consultations with Delyn borough council on the release to the National Asociation of Bison Tenants and others of the report on Bison wall frame buildings prepared for the council by the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Delyn has agreed to the information in the report being released.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

EC (Measures)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of European Economic Community measures enacted with the aid of article 235 of the Treaty of Rome since 1 January 1973.

The Attorney-General: Article 235 is the legal basis, or one of the legal bases, for several hundred European Economic Community measues, including most environmental, industrial, regional development and consumer protection legislation. An itemised list of such measures is not readily available, but if it can be made available, without disproportionate cost, I will send a copy to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Johnson Matthey Bank

Mr. Leighton asked the Prime Minister how much public money is at risk in the rescue of Johnson Matthey bank.

The Prime Minister: Any losses which the Bank of England may incur as a result of the Johnson Matthey bankers rescue will be met on the governor's authority from the resources of the banking department of the Bank of England. The extent to which contingent liabilities on the banking department may be called is a matter for the Bank of England to judge.

Student Grants

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will estimate the number and percentage of families required to contribute to student grant who are also entitled to housing benefit; and how the number will be affected by the proposed changes to student grant regulations.

The Prime Minister: An estimate of the number of housing benefit recipients who are required to contribute to a student grant is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The proposed changes to the student grant regulations should not affect the number involved, since the threshold of the parental contribution scale is to be indexed broadly in line with earnings.

Family Spending Power

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will publish a table showing for a married man with three children aged 20 years, 17 years and 15 years, all in full-time education, net spending power from paid employment as a percentage of net spending power on supplementary benefit, with net spending power defined as gross earnings plus child benefit, less income tax, national insurance contribution, mortgage interest, rates, water rates, work expenses and parental contribution to student grant, and using the following assumptions: earnings of (a) £15,000 and (b) £20,000, mortgage £30,000, rates and water rates £550, work expenses £1,000 and parental contribution according to the student grant regulations proposed for 1985-86.

The Prime Minister: The information is in the table. The figures are based on 1984-85 tax and benefit rates.

Net spending power from paid employment as a percentage of net spending power on supplementary benefit

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Mr. McCusker asked the Prime Minister how many meetings have taken place under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental council since its inception; and what has been the outcome of these meetings.

The Prime Minister: Since its inception in November 1981, there have been some 50 formal ministerial and official meetings held under the auspices of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental council. The meetings have contributed to the development of good relations between the two Governments. The pattern of co-operation was set out in detail in the communiqué released after the Anglo-Irish summit meeting in November 1983, published as Command Paper 9094. During the past year, as made clear in the communiqué released after the recent summit meeting, this co-operation has continued.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when she hopes to give the reply promised to the hon. Member for Linlithgow in her answer of 20 November concerning records of signals from HMS Conqueror.

The Prime Minister: I have written to the hon. Member.

General Belgrano

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a copy of her letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 19 November concerning the General Belgrano.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Following is the letter:

Dear Mr. Dalyell,

Thank you for your letter of 30 October.

The answers to your questions are covered by the detailed Annex to my letter of 19 September to Mr. George Foulkes. On 2 May 1982, there were clear and unequivocal indications available to the Government that the Argentine Navy, including General Belgrano, provided a real and direct threat to the Task Force. In the light of that threat, the precise position and course of Belgrano at that time were irrelevant. That was why the report that Belgrano had reversed course was not made known to Ministers at the time. No evidence has at any time become available to the Government which would make Ministers change the judgement they reached on 2 May that the Belgrano posed a threat to the Task Force.

Yours sincerely,
Margaret Thatcher

New Ireland Forum

Mr. McCusker asked the Prime Minister whether the statement of the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the right hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior), in the House of Commons on 2 July, Official Report, column 123-30, continues to represent Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the report of the New Ireland Forum.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

SCOTLAND

School Leavers

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people left school in the Edinburgh and Leith areas last year; how many went into further education; how many secured full-time jobs; how many went on to youth training schemes; and how many are unemployed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Denaturation Centres

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the location of denaturation centres for surplus EC food in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government do not run, nor do they pay private sector operators to run, centres for the denaturing of foodstuffs. Denaturing is carried out by commercial firms engaged in the animal feedstuffs industry. Feedstuff manufacturing plants at Cupar and Turriff are registered with the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce for the disposal of skimmed milk powder which cannot otherwise be sold.

Milk

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide estimates or figures for the level of uptake amongst Scottish farmers for the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme.

Mr. John MacKay: The scheme is intended to purchase 2·25 per cent.—29·8 million litres—of total Scottish milk quota. Some 370 applicants have offered a total of over 120 million litres. An initial invitation to proceed under the scheme has been extended to 169 applicants with quotas up to 268,000 litres and for whom dairying contributes at least a quarter of income. Of these applicants, 68 have accepted the offer to proceed, 36 have not done so and 65 await the outcome of their applications for additional quota before taking a decision.

In the light of the response so far, the invitation has been extended to a further 15 applicants with quotas of up to 300,000 litres. Further invitations will subsequently be made to producers with higher quotas until the target of 29·8 million litres is reached, and it is too early to say what proportion of the total applicants will finally be able to proceed under the scheme.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will express an estimated total for the cost to his Department of the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme.

Mr. John MacKay: It is estimated that payments under the scheme in Scotland will total £3,874,000, spread over the five years 1984-85 to 1988-89.

Dairy Cattle

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any evidence of reductions in the value of dairy cattle due to the introduction of quotas and the application of the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme.

Mr. John MacKay: No figures are available relating to the value of dairy cattle. Between 1 April and 31 October 1984, the price of all cast cows sold liveweight in Scotland was on average 9 per cent. lower than in the corresponding period of 1983. While the introduction of milk quotas will undoubtedly have had an effect on these prices, there are other factors which affect them, such as the export demand for cow beef, which has fallen off in this period.

No producer has yet ceased dairying under the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme which, in any event, does not require a beneficiary actually to dispose of his herd.

ENERGY

Pollution

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the question of emissions from large combustion plants was discussed at the meeting of the Energy Minister's Council on 13 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I represented the United Kingdom at the Energy Ministers' Council on 13 November.

The council discussed energy aspects of draft directives on emissions from large combustion plant. I emphasised the need to ensure that measures adopted take full account of advances in scientific and technical knowledge and are cost-effective.

The Council adopted a resolution on energy savings, defining guidelines to good practice in a number of areas. Following discussion about the need for Community support for investment in solid fuels, the presidency concluded that all member states were willing to achieve the aim of a balanced Community strategy in this area. The Council reaffirmed its commitment to principles designed to promote realistic pricing and avoidance of discriminatory practices. Approval was given to the latest round of Community support for projects to promote development of new technology in oil and gas exploration and development.

Nuclear Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what are the projections for the growth in the supply of nuclear electricity between now and the year 2010;

(2) how many nuclear reactors it will be necessary to build to accommodate the projected growth in amount of electricity produced by nuclear power stations between 1984 and 2010.

Mr. Goodlad: It is impossible to project with any accuracy the amount of electricity that will be produced by nuclear power in 2010.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the coal strike.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 5 November over 13,000 former strikers have returned to work; 43 per cent. of those employed in the industry are now not on strike.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce a decision on support for lead city combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: Ten proposals have been received, including two for London, covering all the nine towns recommended for further study by the Atkins report. These are being evaluated by my Department and a statement will be made in due course.

THE ARTS

British Museum (Repainting)

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts, if he has had any discussions with the director or board of trustees of the British Museum about the repainting of the entrance hall and the desirability of the recreation of the original polychromatic decorative scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs Officers

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessments he has made of the potential increased efficiency in preventing illegal importation of drugs for given levels of increase in the numbers of Customs officers.

Mr. Hayhoe: Attempting to assess the relationship between a given increase in the number of Customs officers and increased efficiency in preventing illegal importation of drugs does not seem the best way forward. Customs need to identify those areas where its controls can most advantageously be strengthened. This is a continuous process with the constant adjustment of these controls to meet the changes in routes and methods used by smugglers which inevitably follow from successful action by Customs against existing methods.

Pound Note

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect his statement on 12 November about the abolition of the £1 note will have on Ulster bank, Northern bank, Bank of Ireland and Allied Irish bank £1 notes issued in Belfast.

Mr. Lawson: The decision to cease issuing the Bank of England £1 note does not alter the position of notes issued by banks in Northern Ireland, on which decisions are a matter for the banks concerned.

Mr. Watson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many £1 notes were issued in 1983.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Approximately 660 million.

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he is not prepared to consider a plastic £1 note, similar to that used in the Isle of Man.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Plastic notes are too easily forged and therefore unsuitable for a country with a large currency circulation.

Pound Coin

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, following the introduction of the English, Scottish and Welsh versions of the £1 coin, it is proposed to introduce a Northern Ireland version.

Mr. Lawson: It is proposed to issue a Northern Ireland version of the £1 coin in either 1986 or 1987.

Building Societies

Mr. Weetch asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for the current financial year, the yield to the Exchequer from the taxation of building society profits on gilt edged securities.

Mr. Moore: I regret that insufficient data are available from which to produce an estimate for the current financial year. Had profits on gilt edged securities in 1983-84 been subject to corporation tax, the yield would have been about £200 million, but this figure cannot be regarded as any indicator of the current yield.

Cider

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of allowing farm house cider, produced only from apples without the addition of artificial sweetner, containing no artificial colouring and which is not artificially carbonated, in amounts of less than 100,000 gallons per annum, a tax option of a percentage based levy on sale price, worked out as the average tax paid by the industrial cider companies.

Mr. Hayhoe: Farm house cider is not specifically defined for revenue purposes and there is no official information on which to base a reliable cost estimate. The data available, mainly from trade sources, suggests that the loss of excise duty could be of the order of £300,000 per annum.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the number of registered and unregistered cider makers for (a) 1978 and (b) the last year for which figures are available, broken down to show the distribution in each year for each of the shire counties in England:

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs records indicate that on 31 March 1978 there were 55 registered and an estimated 35 exempt* cider makers, but information about their distribution by county is not available.

On 19 November 1984 the number of registered and exempt* cider makers was as follows:

County	Registered	Exempt*
Avon	12	8
Bedfordshire	1	—
Cheshire	1	—
Cornwall	2	1
Devon	15	16
Dorset	3	5

*Exempt by virtue of The Cider and Perry (Exemption from Registration) Order 1976 (SI 1976 No 1206) as amended by The Cider and Perry (Exemption from Registration) Order 1976 (Amendment) Order 1979 (SI 1979 No. 1218).

Isle of Man

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the breach of the 1966 agreement between the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man concerning petroleum revenue tax, Her Majesty's Government will compensate the Isle of Man for a reduction in its share of the revenue accruing to the United Kingdom from its share of the continental shelf.

Mr. Moore: The agreement to which my hon. Friend refers related to licence revenues and not to petroleum revenue tax. The Isle of Man has throughout received its full entitlement under the agreement.

Petroleum Royalties

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the collection of petroleum royalties relating to the area between the outer limit of the territorial waters of the Isle of Man and the median line between the island and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: The collection of royalties for the area in question is the same as for other licensed areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Taxation and Economic Performance

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statistical evidence is available to him about the correlation between the level and distribution of direct taxation on earned incomes and economic performance at the national and individual level.

Mr. Moore: The OECD and the European Commission both publish international comparisons of the level and distribution of taxation, including international comparisons of direct taxation on employment incomes. The Inland Revenue has recently published a note "International Comparisons of Direct Tax on Employment Incomes", based on this data. International comparisons of GDP growth rates are published by a number of international organisations from time to time.

Evidence on individual work incentives is reported in a number of research studies. Some of the main findings were summarised in evidence given to the Treasury and Civil Service Sub-Committee (Session 1982-83) on the structure of personal income taxation and income support.

Customs and Excise (Imported Literature)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the complaints procedure relating to actions of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in respect of the importation of materials by bookshops.

Mr. Hayhoe: If an importer does not agree that something seized is liable to forfeiture, he may so claim in writing within one month. The commissioners are then obliged to submit the matter to a court for civil condemnation proceedings.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which court decisions Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has used as comparisons when deciding on any prosecutions of bookshops for the importation of particular materials.

Mr. Hayhoe: In deciding whether material is indecent or obscene, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is guided by the decisions of the courts in civil condemnation proceedings or, where known, in proceedings under the Obscene Publications Act. Moreover, its judgment may always be challenged by appeal against seizure, which must be decided by the courts.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any legal advice has been sought by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officers from outside the Customs and Excise Department on the principles to be followed when deciding upon any prosecutions of bookshops for the importation of particular materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Commissioners of Customs and Excise generally rely on the services of their solicitor's office for advice on legal matters. However, the opinion of counsel is sought in appropriate cases.

Charities (VAT)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any plans to reduce the level of value added tax paid by registered charities, especially by homes for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no such plans. I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 18 May, at columns 269-70, to the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape).

Milk

Mr. Kennedy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide that payment for quota under the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme may be rolled over for capital gains tax purposes;

(2) whether he will take steps to exempt from capital gains taxation those dairy farmers who successfully apply for the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme.

Mr. Moore: Payments made under the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme will be liable to either income tax or capital gains tax. I have noted the hon. Member's suggestions, but I do not think that any departure from the normal rules would be justified.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he expects to accrue to the Consolidated Fund as a result of the introduction of, and operation of, the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme from capital gains tax payments.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts at 1984-85 prices that could be raised by 1p on the standard rate of income tax in England for the financial years 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Opportunities Scheme

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate how many more people could be resettled in jobs if the resources available to the Manpower Services Commission for the training opportunities scheme were concentrated on those courses which have the best results in getting people into jobs.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Just over half the 64,000 unemployed people who completed occupational training and work preparation courses under the training opportunities scheme in 1983-84 found jobs within three months. Changes are now under way to make the Government's adult training programmes more effective, and to increase the number of unemployed people helped. Once these changes are fully implemented, 125,000 unemployed people a year should benefit from training closely related to known employment needs; and the employment prospects of 125,000 employed people will also be improved through training programmes aimed at updating or extending their skills.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information on the 50 geographical regions in Great Britain with the highest unemployment rates (a) on a constituency basis and (b) on the regional and sub-regional basis used in the "New Earnings Survey" in April, broken down between (i) men aged 18 years or over, (ii) women aged 18 years or over and (iii) workers aged under 18 years and show the relevant unemployment rates.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available on the geographical basis requested. Unemployment rates are calculated for travel-to-work areas, counties and regions; unemployment rates by age are available only at the national level.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people at the latest available date were registered as unemployed in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland; what percentage of the total population available for work in those parts of the country the figures represented; and what were the comparable figures for 1979, 1981 and 1983;

(2) how many people at the latest available date were registered as unemployed in (a) Liverpool, (b) Manchester, (c) Newcastle, (d) Leeds, (e) Sheffield and (f) Plymouth; what percentage of the total population available for work in those cities the figures represented; and what were the comparable figures for 1979, 1981 and 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is available in the House of Commons Library. However, the figures for all the years requested are not directly comparable particularly because of the change from the registrant-based to claimant-based unemployment count in October 1982.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time male jobs in manufacturing have been lost in the United Kingdom since 1981; and how many part-time female jobs in all sectors have been created over the same period.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Other than at census of employment dates, a breakdown between full-time and part-time employees is not available for males and is available for females only for Great Britain. Between June 1981 and June 1984 the estimated number of males employed in manufacturing industries in Great Britain decreased by 421,000. Over the same period the estimated number of part-time female employees in employment in all industries in Great Britain increased by 360,000.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people at the latest available date have been registered as unemployed (a) for more than three years, (b) for more than two years and (c) for more than one year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information on unemployed claimants is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage, for each year since 1979, of (a) able-bodied people and (b) registered disabled people have been unemployed nationally and in the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Newcastle, Birmingham, Stoke on Trent, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas for (i) over three months, (ii) over six months, (iii) over one year, (iv) over 18 months and (v) over two years; and what these figures are for disabled people registered as (i) section 1 and (ii) section 2 disabled.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1984, c. 195]: Separate unemployment figures for able-bodied and disabled people are not available.

Comprehensive figures for registered disabled people have not been available since the introduction of voluntary registration of unemployed people at jobcentres and careers offices in October 1982. Analysis of total unemployment by duration for the old travel-to-work areas are available in the House of Commons Library, although direct comparisons back to 1979 are not possible mainly because of the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982.

Following is the available information on numbers of registered disabled people registered as unemployed between 1979 and 1982 for Great Britain, and for October 1982 only for the old travel-to-work areas.

• MSC local and regional offices do not keep statistics of disabled people for longer than three years.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what, for each year since 1979, is (a) the unemployment rate, (b) the number of registered disabled people and (c) the unemployment rate for registered disabled people, nationally and for the Manchester, Sheffield, London, Stoke-on-Trent, Newcastle, Birmingham, Leeds and Wakefield travel-to-work areas; and what are these figures for disabled people registered (i) section 1, and (ii) section 2 disabled.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1984, column 195]: Overall unemployment rates for travel-to-work areas are available in the House of Commons Library. Figures for the new travel-to-work areas only go back to June 1983 and direct comparisons for the old travel-to-work areas back to 1979 are not possible, mainly because of the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982. Unemployment rates for registered disabled people are not available.

Following is the available information on numbers of registered disabled people in the old travel-to-work areas.

Numbers of registered disabled people: April

Training Schemes (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young persons on youth training and youth opportunities programme schemes have been involved in accidents, including fatal accidents, since the inception of each scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is available for the periods shown in the table:

Scheme and period*	Accidents Injuries†

• Statistical information on the number of YOP trainees involved in accidents prior to 1 April 1980 is not available.

† Since 1 April 1983 MSC accident figures for YOP and YTS have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) on employed persons. However, the figures quoted in the table will include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to HSE had the individuals been employed.

‖ This figure includes two road traffic fatalities and two lunch-time swimming accidents.

¶ Major injuries on YOP during the period 1 April 1982-31 March 1983 have been reviewed by MSC using the criteria laid down in the Notification of Accidents and Dagerous Occurances Regulations (NADOR). There were originally 311 recorded major injuries, but following the review 123 of these have been reclassified as minor injuries thus giving the totals quoted in the table.

• This figure includes one lunch-time swimming accident.

■ This figure includes one road traffic accident.

• This figure includes two road traffic accidents.

Health and Safety

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that the consultation procedures set out in the central study plan method of work are extended to include the following interested parties to enable the benefits of health and safety legislation to be adequately assessed (a) unions with members employed in small firms, (b) safety representatives in small businesses appointed under the safety representatives and safety committee regulations in 1977 and (c) employees in small businesses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No changes are proposed.

Asbestos

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms have been (a) granted and (b) refused licences to strip asbestos since 1 August.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Fifty licences without conditions and 1,366 licences with conditions attached have been issued to individual licence holders. One licence application was refused, but the company has since re-applied and now holds a six-month conditional licence.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many extra health and safety inspectors have been recruited specifically to deal with asbestos licensing since 1 August.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 29 October, at columns 779-80.

Short-time Working

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the approximate number of hours lost through short-time working between April and August.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of hours lost through short-time working are available for operatives in manufacturing industries in Great Britain. Figures for the months specified were published in table 1.11 of the labour market data section of the October 1984 issue of Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Hard-to-work Areas

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the hard-to-work areas referred to on page 530 of the October Employment Gazette: and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I hope it was not too hard to work out that the reference was meant to be to the revised travel-to-work areas.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether, in the light of the results of the recent Manpower Services Commission sample survey, he will give the most up-to-date breakdown of the destinations of youth training scheme leavers;

(2) whether, in the light of the reports of the recent Manpower Services Commission sample survey, he will give his most up-to-date estimate of the number of youth training scheme leavers who have gone straight into employment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest estimates of the destinations of young people leaving the youth training scheme are based on the recent sample survey of 3,500 young people in nine Manpower Services Commission areas who left individual programmes within the scheme between 1 April and 31 July 1984. This showed that, of those leavers responding:

56 per cent. were in full-time employment.
2 per cent. were in part-time employment.
4 per cent. were on another YTS scheme.
2 per cent. were on a full-time course at a college or training centre.
34 per cent. were unemployed (of whom about one-fifth —i.e. 7 per cent. of all respondents—intended to take up full-time education or training).
2 per cent. were doing something else.

A copy of the paper containing the results of the sample survey has been placed in the Library.

Industrial Training Board Centres (Closures)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state for each industry the number of industrial training board training centres which have closed since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many appeal tribunal hearings related to decisions made by his adjudication officers have been convened during the last 12 months for which information is available; and what is his estimate of the total cost of these.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

As a result of industrial action within the Department, the most recent information available is for the 12-month period ended 31 December 1983 when 15,096 unemployment benefit appeals were heard.

Information about the total cost of these appeals is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation and After-care Service

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons were receiving after-care by the probation and after-care service in each metropolitan county area at 31 December in each year since 1974 by sex and type of contact and type of after care;

(2) what was the average number of persons on remand awaiting completion of social inquiry reports by the probation and after-care service in each metropolitan county area in each year since 1974 by age, sex and type of offence;

(3) how many persons were supervised by the probation and after-care service in each metropolitan county area at 31 December in each year since 1974 by sex and type of supervision.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Alcohol Sales

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of convictions in each of the years 1973 to 1983 for knowingly selling alcohol to a person under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table. It covers offences of selling liquor to a person under 18 years either on or off licensed premises.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of convictions in each of the years 1973 to 1983 for selling alcohol to an intoxicated person.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table. It covers proceedings brought under section 172 of the Licensing Act 1964 and includes offences where a licensee permits drunken or violent behaviour as well as offences of selling liquor to a drunken person.

Criminal Law Revision Committee (Report)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce legislation following the recent report of the Criminal Law Revision Committee.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question on 22 November, at column 246, from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry).

Libyans (Visa Applications)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visa applications submitted by Libyans for entry into the United Kingdom are currently awaiting authorisation by Her Majesty's Government; how many of these are new applications; and how many have been submitted by Libyans seeking entry into the United Kingdom for a second or subsequent time.

Mr. Waddington: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe the new visa regime imposed for Libyans seeking entry into the United Kingdom since the severance of diplomatic relations between Libya and the United Kingdom in May.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 1 May a number of immigration restrictions on the entry and stay in this country of Libyan nationals. Visitors are granted visas for stays of shorter duration, adapted to the circumstances of each case. Applications from those who seek to come here as students, in particular, are subject to stringent checks, and Libyan students are not normally given permission to stay for more than one term at a time. Applications for visas must be made to a British consular post outside Libya, and all such applications are referred to the Home Office for a decision. All applicants for visas are asked to sign a declaration undertaking to refrain from the expression of any political opinion through violence. Similar restrictions apply to applications for extensions of stay from Libyan nationals in this country. These arrangements are kept under review.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of Libyans admitted to the United Kingdom since the severance of diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Libya in May, and if he will indicate (a) those who have been given entry for the first time and (b) those who had previously been granted visas authorising entry into the United Kingdom prior to May.

Mr. Waddington: A total of 700 Libyan nationals was admitted to the United Kingdom in the period May to August 1984, following the severance of diplomatic relations with Libya on 22 April 1984. The information requested on admissions for the first time and on persons who had been granted visas prior to May 1984 is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new visas were issued to Libyans for entry into the United Kingdom for each month in 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Waddington: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. However, I understand that the information requested is not available. Returns of visa statistics kept by posts abroad indicate the total number of visas issued, which are not broken down by nationality.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average length of time for a visa to be granted to a Libyan seeking entry for the first time into the United Kingdom for (a) business purposes, (b) educational purposes, (c) medical purposes and (d) visiting and tourist purposes.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Urgent compassionate and medical cases are given priority.

Longmoor Camp

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any charges of criminal damage have been brought against persons attempting to deface with paint cruise missiles and of defacing with paint soldiers' uniforms at the high security vehicle compound as a result of activities in the early hours of Tuesday 20 November at Longmoor Camp.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Hampshire tells me that no charges have so far been preferred as a result of incidents at Longmoor camp on 20 November. My right hon. and learned Friend was informed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence that there is no record of incidents as described by the hon. Member having taken place.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on which date or dates and in which areas the various sections of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will be brought into effect; and by what date the Act is expected to be fully operational;

(2) what additional training custody officers will undergo in order that they may fulfil their responsibilities under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act; and what will be the nature and duration of such training;

(3) what additional training Metropolitan police officers will undergo in order that they be fully acquainted with the new powers and duties contained in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act; and what is the nature and duration of such training.

Mr. Brittan: Our present intention is to bring the provisions of the Act into force in three stages, commencing on 1 January 1985. The provisions to be brought into force on that date will include section 106, which requires arrangements to be made in each police area for obtaining the views of the community on policing, and a number of miscellaneous provisions which can appropriately and sensibly come into effect in advance of the major parts of the Act.

The second stage of implementation will be on 1 March 1985 and will principally include part IX of the Act: the establishment of the Police Complaints Authority and other changes to the police complaints and discipline procedures.

The third stage will include the outstanding provisions of parts I to VIII — with the exception of subsections (11) to (14) of section 37, which are dependent upon provisions of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 not yet in force, and section 60, which provides for the tape-recording of police interviews with suspects and which will be subject to a separate programme of implementation in the light of the progress of the field trials now taking place in various police areas. In deciding on the timing of this third stage I have had regard to the need for a service-wide training programme. The Home Office's instructor training unit at Harrogate is preparing a training package for use by all provincial police forces.

The training is likely to amount to 14 hours teaching time followed by on-the-job training. This includes up to seven hours teaching of particular relevance to custody officers. A corresponding package is being prepared by the Metropolitan police for all officers serving on that force.

The date for the third stage of implementation to which I have asked forces to work is 1 January 1986, which is also the date on which I propose to ask Parliament to agree that the four codes of practice which section 66 requires me to issue shall come into force.

Criminal Law Act 1977

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the essential elements of the proposed arrangements for the implementation of section 48 of the Criminal Law Act 1977.

Mr. Mellor: As previously announced, my right hon. and learned Friend's intention is to implement section 48 so that advance disclosure of the prosecution case will be available to defendants charged with offences triable either way before they are required to indicate whether they wish to be tried in the magistrates' court or the Crown court. It is intended to begin by providing for disclosure to be made either by a summary of the case or by copies of witness statements. Discussions on the proposals are taking place with interested parties as a preliminary to the making of the necessary rules. It continues to be our aim that the rules should be made and in force by next May. They will be reconsidered in the light of experience and no later than at the time of the introduction of the Crown prosecution service, with a view to prescribing a single method of advance disclosure for use in all cases.

Juveniles (Metropolitan Police District)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed use of instant cautions and multi-agency panels for dealing with juveniles in the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police introduced an early cautioning scheme for juveniles on 1 November. Where the offence is not serious, most first time juvenile offenders are eligible for an instant caution, which will be administered at the police station and without reference to the juvenile bureau. Other cases are still referred to the Metropolitan police's juvenile bureau for further consideration.

The Metropolitan police are also considering the introduction of multi-agency juvenile panels on an experimental basis in four districts. Cases of juvenile offenders would be referred to a juvenile panel if the juvenile bureau considered that prosecution was appropriate. The panel would either support prosecution or recommend a caution combined with some form of supervised activity. The viability of such schemes will clearly depend on all the agencies involved as well as the police.

Metropolitan Police (Identification Parades)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in full the Metropolitan Police identification parade code, the origins of the code and why terms such as mulatto, quadroon and octoroon are still used; if the code is being reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The section of the Metropolitan police commissioner's general orders dealing with identification parades reflects directly the rules and administrative guidance laid down in Home Office circular 109/1978, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This circular was issued in the light of recommendations of the departmental committee on evidence of identification in criminal cases — the Devlin committee — published on 26 April 1976.

The code of practice on identification to be made under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 will replace existing provisions on identification parades. The code has been published in draft and a copy is in the Library of the House. It has no reference to the terms to which the hon. Member refers.

Police Custody (Records)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the uniform custody record on which is recorded all details relating to a person's detention in police custody.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Association of Chief Police Officers is preparing a custody record suitable for adoption by all police forces in England and Wales when the provisions of parts IV and V of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 are brought into force. When this work has been completed, I shall place a copy of the record in the Library of the House.

Special Branch

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the total Metropolitan police budget for 1984-85 is spent on the activities of the Special Branch; and what proportion of the total cost is met by London ratepayers.

Mr. Brittan: The estimated cost of the Metropolitan police Special Branch in 1984-85 is £15·5 million which represents about 1·8 per cent. of the estimated gross revenue expenditure of the force. The London ratepayers' contribution to Metropolitan police costs is normally some 25 per cent. But, in view of the branch's national responsibilities, it is one of the services recognised by the Government through the imperial and national services grant, which reduces the cost to London ratepayers.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current establishment of the Metropolitan police Special Branch; and if he will list the numbers employed in each rank.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police Special Branch at present numbers 408 police officers and 119 civilians. For operational reasons, it is not the practice to disclose details of the rank structure of the branch.

Plastic Handcuffs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long the new disposable plastic handcuff has been available to police; if it has been tested and approved as safe by his Department; by whom it is manufactured; which police forces are in possession of it; and whether the guidelines for its use are the same as for conventional handcuffs.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Plastic handcuffs have been in use by police in England and Wales since at least 1978. The decision whether or not to seek to acquire such handcuffs is a matter for chief officers of police, and information about their origin and distribution is not recorded centrally. The Department has not issued any advice about the acquisition of plastic handcuffs, but guidance on the use of all handcuffs is contained in paragraph 4.65 of the "Consolidated Circular on Crime and Kindred Matters", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, for the administration of the fireman's pension scheme currently administered by the Greater London council and for those non-uniformed members of the London Fire Service who currently contribute to the Greater London council superannuation fund.

Mr. Brittan: Under the Local Government Bill the London fire and civil defence authority will, as from the abolition date, be the fire authority for Greater London with the responsibilities of a fire authority under the firemen's pension scheme. Clause 54 of the Bill provides for the establishment of the London residuary body in whom will be vested the Greater London council superannuation fund and whose responsibilities will include the functions of the Greater London council as administering authority under the local government superannuation regulations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will set standards, ensure compliance and police premises owned by London borough councils under the terms of the Licensing Act in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Mellor: As previously explained to the hon. Member, responsibility for the grant, renewal, transfer orremoval of Justices' licences under the Licensing Act 1964 will continue to rest with the licensing justices or the local magistrates' court for premises in the Greater London area. The right of police officers to enter licensed premises for the purpose of preventing or detecting an offence against that Act will also remain unchanged.

ENVIRONMENT

Bison Wall Frame Buildings

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain the discrepancy between (a) his reply of 25 July to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central, Official Report, columns 727-29, which stated that 44 local authorities had replied to his Department's letter of 5 October 1983 concerning Bison wall frame buildings and (b) his reply of 26 July to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central, Official Report, colmumn 803, which listed only 34 local authorities as having replied to his Department's letter of 5 October 1983 concerning Bison wall frame buildings.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 26 October, at column 750.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the 15 authorties which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame buildings for possible faults in parapet fixing;

(2) if he will list the 27 authorities which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame buildings for possible faults in the connection between wall and floor panels and in the restraint of load-bearing walls;

(3) if he will list, for each of the faults (a) to (e) specified in his Department's letter of 5 October 1983, those authorities which have undertaken, are undertaking, or are planning to undertake, remedial works on their Bison wall frame buildings with respect to each specified fault;

(4) if he will list the 30 authorities which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame buildings for possible faults with spalling concrete or loose aggregate finishes;

(5) if he will list the 11 authorities which have appraised or are appraising their Bison wall frame buildings for possible faults in the ties between inner and outer leaves of external cladding panels.

Mr. Gow: On the basis of the replies to the Department's letter of 5 October 1983—the majority of which were received in 1983 or early in 1984—the authorities which had appraised, or were appraising, their Bison wall frame buildings for possible faults in the connection between wall and floor panels and in the restraint of load bearing walls (paragraph 2*(a)* of the letter of 5 October 1983) were:

Barking and Dagenham
Barnet

Scunthorpe
Solihull
Waltham Forest
Wandsworth
Wiggan
Wirral
Wyre Forest

Those which had appraised or were appraising these buildings for possible faults in parapet fixings (paragraph 2*(b)* of the letter of 5 October 1983) were:

Birmingham
Elmbridge
GLC
Hillingdon
Hounslow
Portsmouth
Preston
Rotherham
Rugby
Salford
Scunthorpe
Solihull
Wandsworth
Wirral
Wyre Forest

Those which had appraised or were appraising these buildings for possible faults in the ties between inner and outer leaves of external cladding panels (paragraph 2*(c)* of the letter of 5 October 1983) were:

Barnet
Birmingham
Hillingdon
Leicester
Oldham
Portsmouth
Rugby
Solihull
Wandsworth
Wirral
Wyre Forest

Those which had appraised or were appraising these buildings for spalling concrete or inadequately secured exposed aggregate (paragraph 2*(d)* and (e) of the letter of 5 October 1983) were:

Barnet
Birmingham
Bradford
Brent
Brighton
Eastbourne
Elmbridge
GLC
Hartlepool
Hounslow
Islington
Knowsley
Leicester
Liverpool
Manchester
Oldham
Portsmouth
Preston

Scunthorpe
Slough
Waltham Forest
Wandsworth
Warrington
Windsor and Maidenhead
Wirral
Wyre Forest

Further appraisals were planned, and for up-to-date information the hon. Member should consult the authorities which own buildings of this type.

The details of appraisals and of steps taken, or to be taken, by authorities to eliminate safety risks were not sought by the Department in its letter of 5 October 1983 on the basis that they were for publication. It is open to the hon. Member to get in touch with the authorities concerned.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which at the time of his statement on Bison wall frame buildings of 25 July had not yet replied to his Department's letter of 5 October 1983, stating for each authority whether it has yet replied to this letter and, in the case of authorities which have replied since 25 July, the date on which the reply was received.

Mr. Gow: The local authorities which had not replied by 25 July 1984 to the Department's letter of 5 October 1983 were as follows:

Brentwood
Greenwich
Rochdale
Sedgefield
Tower Hamlets

The four authorities which have now replied and the date on which those replies were sent are:

Brentwood 12/10/84
Rochdale 19/11/84
Sedgefield 26/7/84
Tower Hamlets 6/8/84

A reply has yet to be received from Greenwich.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for the publication of any of those reports by the National Building Agency into Bison wall frame dwellings which are held by his Department.

Mr. Gow: No. In my reply to the hon. Member on 31 October, at column 1055, I said that it is for the authority or body which commissioned a report from the National Building Agency to decide whether it should be published.

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bodies which commissioned reports from the National Building Agency on Bison wall frame dwellings, together with the dates on which his Department received copies of these reports.

Mr. Gow: It is for the bodies which commissioned such reports to decide whether this information should be made available.

Community Centre, Waltham Forest

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the urban programme for 1985-86, what priority he intends to give to the provision of a community centre for the Afro-Caribbean community in Waltham Forest.

Sir George Young: An application has been received and is being considered for grant-aid under urban programme circular 25 together with the bids from other local authorities. It is hoped that the results will be notified to boroughs early next year.

British Board of Agrément

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the range of initial charges to companies whose products are tested by the British Board of Agrément.

Sir George Young: The charges for assessments by the British Board of Agrément are mainly in the range £4,000 to £6,500.

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are employed by the British Board of Agrément.

Sir George Young: On 31 October 1984 69 staff were employed by the British Board of Agrément.

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the range of time taken to test products by the British Board of Agrément.

Sir George Young: The range of time taken by the British Board of Agrément to test products varies from a few days to about two years, if simulated weathering is involved. The average time for complete assessment of a product is 15 months.

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has considered charging fees for testing products by the British Board of Agrément on the basis of royalties on sales rather than charges at the outset.

Sir George Young: The British Board of Agrément aims to achieve financial self-sufficiency as soon as possible and fees and different methods of charging, including charging on a royalty basis, are regularly reviewed in the light of this.

Basildon (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his visit to Basildon on 13 October.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I made a political visit to Basildon on 13 October, where I spoke at a Basildon Conservative Association function. I had hoped also to meet, at their request, the rural dean of Basildon and other community leaders before the function but, because of an unfortunate misunderstanding between the organisers of the function and the rural dean about the venue, that meeting did not take place. I did meet the rural dean later in the evening and was glad to have a useful exchange of views.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which voluntary organisations are, to his knowledge, opposing abolition of the Greater London council because they have become too dependent on the Greater London council for financial support as indicated in his speech to the annual general meeting of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations on 12 November.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government's intentions for the future of County hall in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: Initially, ownership of County hall will pass to the London residuary body; consideration is being given to a variety of possible uses thereafter.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, members of the London residuary body appointed by him will be accountable for their administration of the Greater London council superannuation fund to the participating bodies which are required to make up any actuarial deficiencies on the fund and to account for them.

Sir George Young: In the administration of the superannuation fund the London residuary body will be subject to the local government superannuation regulations in the same way as other administering authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements will be made in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council for the continued protection of the superannuation entitlements of those staff who were transferred to the London borough councils in 1965, and whose protected rights as former London county council and Middlesex county council contributors have been administered by the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: As stated in the White Paper "Streamlining the Cities" all existing pension rights will be fully safeguarded.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements will be made in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council for the review of existing payments and the assessment of the new awards in respect of pre-abolition accidents under part Q of the local government superannuation regulations 1974 to 1984 and under the provisions of the London Government Act 1963.

Sir George Young: The London residuary body will be given power to continue payment where awards have been made by the GLC. It will also be able to make an award in any case which has not been finalised by the abolition date.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, the superannuation affairs of all employing bodies currently admitted as members of the Greater London council superannuation fund will continue to be administered as part of a single superannuation fund managed by the residuary body.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, the strategic planning guidance he proposes to issue to the London boroughs will include any quantified allocation of land and development at borough level.

Mr. Macfarlane: The content of such guidance will be determined following advice from the proposed London planning commission.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in assessing the costs and savings arising from abolition of the Greater London council, the Government have taken into account the additional costs arising from the extra lines of communication between each London borough.

Sir George Young: The Government's estimates of savings in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Local Government Bill are broad assessments and are naturally subject to decisions by successor authorities about the operation of the services they inherit.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which body, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will be the administering authority, for the purposes of the local government superannuation regulations, in relation to the existing beneficiaries of the council's superannuation fund.

Sir George Young: All functions of the Greater London council as an administering authority under the local government superannuation regulations will become functions of the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, will meet the costs currently levied on the council in respect of discretionary superannuation compensation powers which have already been exercised on behalf of retired staff; and how such charges will be apportioned.

Sir George Young: The existing liabilities of the Greater London council for compensation payments in respect of their retired staff will be transferred to the London residuary body. That body will recover the costs through a levy on the rating authorities in London, the amount being apportioned by reference to their population levels.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements will be made, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, for the uprating and payment of deferred superannuation benefits awarded by the council to former contributors to its superannuation fund.

Sir George Young: Clause 57 of the Bill provides that the London residuary body will assume all existing liabilities of the GLC superannuation fund.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, arrangements will be made to recompense the council's superannuation fund for any adverse effect on its investment performance that may result from having to sell investments or maintain a level of liquidity above that required for investment management in order to facilitate and fund apportionments in respect of Greater London council staff transferred to other bodies.

Sir George Young: No. These payments will be spread over a considerable period after the abolition date, and there is no reason why they should affect the investment performance of the fund.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the statutory housing improvement areas declared by the Greater London council continue in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 25 October, at column 696.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, on grant-related expenditure assessments for those boroughs which inherit a rate burden greater than current expenditure levels approved by the Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: The grant-related expenditure the GLC would have received for those services transferred to the lower tier will, following abolition, be redistributed among the London boroughs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are proposed, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, for the analysis and monitoring on a consistent basis of planning decisions across London.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department will continue to monitor planning performance. It will be for the London boroughs to decide collectively whether they wish to monitor the content of decisions.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are proposed for the London-wide appraisal of development applications involving high buildings in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: None. They will continue as now to be dealt with on their merits by the London boroughs.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of the Government's estimate of £120 million savings in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan counties.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has explained the Government's estimate of savings in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any Greater London council housing functions are to be transferred to quangos in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: The London residuary body will assume the GLC's interest in personal mortagages for home purchase and improvement, with a view to refinancing by the private sector; certain of the GLC's rights or liabilities to payment under the housing transfer orders and in respect of certain nomination rights; and the GLC's liabilities under town development schemes and certain warranties.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what administrative and financial benefits will accrue from his proposals for housing mobility in the even of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: Our overall estimate of the savings to be generated by abolition is set out in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Local Government Bill.

Overcrowding

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the figures of overcrowded households region by region in England;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report, the number of households overcrowded in the cities of Liverpool and London, respectively.

Sir George Young: The latest information is from the 1981 census which enumerated the following numbers of households living at densities of more than one person per room:

Region	Number
Northern	42,039
Yorkshire & Humberside	60,570
East Midlands	38,981
East Anglia	13,881
South East (of which Greater London 132,330)	218,727
South West	35,149
West Midlands	72,193
North West	85,071
England	566,611

There were 10,061 in the city of Liverpool and 59 in the city of London.

Block Grant

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether grant payable to an authority under paragraph 29 of schedule 32 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980—enterprise zones—will be included within total expenditure for block grant purposes in 1985-86.

Sir George Young: The grants are paid to local authorities as full compensation for their loss of revenue from the exemption from rates of industrial and commercial properties in enterprise zones. Neither the revenue forgone, nor the grants received by a local authority score as total expenditure for block grant purposes. No change in those arrangements is proposed.

Local Authorities (Audit of Accounts)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities whose audit of accounts under the Local Government Act 1972 have not yet been concluded for the years 1981-82 and 1982-83, respectively.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's responsibilities in respect of uncompleted audits of local authorities under the Local Government Act 1972 for the years 1981-82 and 1982-83 were transferred to the Audit Commission under the Accounts and Audit (Transitional Provisions) Regulations 1983. If the hon. Member cares to contact the commission, I am sure it will be pleased to provide the information requested. The commission's address is:

1 Vincent Square, London SW1P 2PN.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if cash increases in expenditure, net of specific grant, between 1983-84 and 1985-86 on civil defence will be disregarded for the purpose of determining the extent to which an authority has complied with its expenditure guidance in 1985-86.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will consider the representations for disregards he has received before implementing grant abatement for 1985-86.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the increase in the overall level of pay and prices for local authority current expenditure between the years 1980-81 to 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: Based on information by local authorities, including forecasts made in their 1984-85 budgets, pay and prices affecting local authority current expenditure are provisionally estimated to have increased by 32 per cent. between 1980-81 and 1984-85.

Mr. Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide by service block a comparison of local authority capital expenditure bids and allocations in Greater London, the metropolitan counties, metropolitan districts, shire counties and shire districts for each of the years 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend does not hold information on bids for service blocks for which he is not directly responsible, and for the other services block there is no bidding system. Information on the housing bids and allocations for every housing authority in England for each of the years in question is available in the Library of the House.

Greater London Development Plan

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the current Greater London development plan to be superseded by the 33 adopted unitary borough development plans which he is now proposing in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Macfarlane: Plans will be prepared as required and it is therefore not appropriate at this stage to think in terms of an overall timetable.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends that the approved Greater London development plan should continue to be used as the statutory planning framework in London for the reassessment of land allocations for housing called for in his circular 15/84, "Land for Housing" issued on 4 July.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Greater London development plan remains the structure plan for London until its replacement by unitary development plans following abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the existing approved Greater London development plan continues to reflect central Government policy and current development priorities in London as required in his circular 22/84, "Memorandum on Structure and Local Plans".

Mr. Macfarlane: The Greater London development plan remains the current structure plan for London, but where more recent policy advise has been issued by the Government, this should be taken into account by the relevant local planning authorities.

Rate Equalisation Scheme (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage increase in the contributions of the cities of London and Westminster to the London rate equalisation scheme between the years 1980-81 to 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1980-81 scheme was the last under the old rate support grant system and is therefore not comparable with the 1984-85 scheme.

London Planning Commission

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many London borough councils have expressed support for his proposal to establish a London planning commission.

Mr. Macfarlane: Of the London borough councils which commented on the proposed London planning commission, two expressed support.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to make public all advice, including briefing notes from his Department, given to inspectors at planning inquiries.

Mr. Macfarlane: Inspectors are rarely given departmental briefing on individual planning cases. When this does occur, briefing notes are made available on request to anyone reasonably entitled to know what they contain from the opening of the inquiry or any pre-inquiry meeting, to the end of the period during which the decision is open to challenge in the courts. Other advice available to inspectors in the "Inspector's Handbook" is of a general procedural and organisational nature unrelated to specific cases and would be unsuitable for general dissemination. A copy is on deposit in the Library.

Council House Sales

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies of the effect of council house sales in London have been made by his Department; and if he is aware of any such studies undertaken by other bodies.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 30 October, at column 943.

Housing (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessments of London's housing requirements have been made by his Department since 1979 or are currently in preparation;

(2) what will be the short-term net additional cost to the taxpayer of transferring responsibility for the Greater London council's statutory housing improvement areas to the London boroughs if the Greater London council is abolished;

(3) which body will be responsible for funding repair work on housing association schemes originally funded by the Greater London council in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(4) if he will ensure that the distribution to the London boroughs of capital receipts from the Greater London council mortgage account will reflect the location of housing association schemes originally funded by the Greater London council and needing additional funding for repair works in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answers of 25 October, to his identical priority written questions at columns 694, 696 and 711, respectively.

Structure Plans

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the structure plans submitted for approval to his Department over the last five years, indicating whether they were new plans, replacement plans or alternatives to existing plans, replacement plans or alterations to existing plans; and what is the length of time each has taken between submission and final approval.

Mr. Macfarlane: The list is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nuclear War (Effects)

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to him about the consequences for United Kingdom agriculture of a nuclear war.

Mrs. Fenner: Information on various aspects of this matter has been published by a number of sources, but, as any conclusions must necessarily depend upon the assumptions made about a wide variety of factors, no definitive assessment is possible.

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why his Department is not taking part in the study of the scientific committee on problems of the environment following a nuclear war.

Mrs. Fenner: The organisation conducting this study is an independent international non-governmental body and the committee concerned is comprised of academics representative of the various relevant scientific fields. The outcome of the study is expected in 1985 and the Government await this with interest.

Milk

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers who have had their claim for special case treatment accepted by his Department are those who have increased their production in the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: Under the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations my Department is responsible for verifying that special case claims are in the form and contain such information as is required and that the applicant may be entitled to secondary quota under the regulations. Thereafter it is for the tribunal and its local panels to determine the extent to which each claimant is entitled to secondary quota.

More than 23,000 special case claims have been received, and of those analysed so far over 80 per cent. included a claim on grounds of investment in increased production.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each London parliamentary constituency and borough the amount of intervention stock stored in that area, broken down according to quantity of each type of produce stored.

Mr. Jopling: Intervention stocks at 31 October were as follows:

London Parliamentary Constituency	London Borough	Tonnes
		Butter	Beef
Ealing—Southall	Ealing	1,122	—
Ealing—Acton	Ealing	696	—

SOCIAL SERVICES

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated saving to the new severe disablement allowance scheme of excluding until November 1985 people aged 35 to 49 years who are not already receiving non-contributory invalidity pension and housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension; and what is the estimate of the number of people likely to be affected.

Mr. Newton: As with the phasing-in of mobility allowance over about three years from 1976, severe disablement allowance is being introduced in two stages in order to minimise administrative problems and in particular because of the constraints inevitably imposed by the need for medical examinations. Those in the 35 to 49 age group who are in receipt of existing non-contributory invalidity benefits on 28 November 1984 will of course be automatically transferred to immediate receipt of severe disablement allowance, but we estimate that about 12,000 new claimants who would otherwise have qualified then or during the following 12 months will have to wait for the relevant period, and that expenditure would have been about £10 million higher in the first full year had we been able to introduce the new benefit without phasing.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many additional staff are being employed by his Department to deal with the extra work involved in introducing the severe disablement allowance; what the full cost of this staffing is likely to be; how many officers have been transferred from other sections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984, c. 125-26]: The work of introducing severe disablement allowance is estimated to be 146 man years at a cost of £1·024 million.

The gross additional continuing cost is 114 staff, but this is offset by a saving of 71 staff at North Fylde central office. None of this work will involve a transfer of staff between sections.

Health Statistics

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the annual figures since 1970 showing the number of cases in the following categories (a) leukaemias, (b) myeloid leukaemia, (c) Hodgkin's disease, (d) lymphosarcoma, (e) all diagnoses of cancer and (f) abnormalities at birth for the areas covered by (i) the Wessex regional health authority and (ii) the Southampton and South-West Hampshire health authority;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the annual figures since 1970 showing the number of cases in the following categories (a) leukaemias, (b) myloid leukaemia, (c) Hodgkin's disease, (d) lymphosarcoma, (e) all diagnoses of cancer and (f) abnormalities at birth, for England;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the annual figures since 1970 collected by the Southampton and South-West Hampshire health authority showing the number of cases in the following categories (a) leukaemias, (b) myeloid leukaemia, (c) Hodgkin's disease, (d) lymphosarcoma, (e) all diagnoses of cancer and (f) abnormalities at birth (i) for the area around the Re-Chem plant at Hythe, Hampshire and (ii) for the area on the east side of the Solent opposite the Re-Chem plant.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information is shown in the tables. Numbers of newly diagnosed cases of cancer are not routinely available for areas below regional health authority level. Such figures are not considered reliable without detailed scrutiny and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the requested causes, mortality data are more reliable than the notified numbers of new cases and these are given in the tables for each area.

Figures are given for county districts as these are the smallest areas for which figures are available for the entire period.

Figures are derived from a voluntary system of notifying congenital malformations observed at birth or up to seven days after birth; they are therefore an incomplete measure of the total number of affected infants since many are not diagnosed until after the first week of life.

Supplementary Benefit (Appeals)

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeal tribunal hearings relating to decisions made by the supplementary benefit office have been convened during the last 12 months for which information is available; and what is the total estimated cost of these.

Mr. Whitney: As a result of industrial action within the Department, the most recent information available is for the 12-month period ended 31 December 1983 when 60,567 supplementary benefit appeals were heard.

It is estimated that £10·855 million was spent on supplementary benefit appeals work in 1983, but this sum includes the cost of work on the 82,212 appeals which were lodged but were resolved without a tribunal hearing.

Children (Poverty)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children are classified as living in poverty at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: There is no generally accepted definition of poverty on which to base such a calculation.

Hospital Kitchens

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much expenditure took place on modernising hospital kitchens in England in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally.

Raw Blood Plasma

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make available the extra £1 million needed to produce raw blood plasma if the United Kingdom is to become self-sufficient in blood products by 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are a number of methods by which plasma can be collected to achieve the targets set for self-sufficiency. Each regional health authority must decide which methods to adopt and provide the necessary funding.

Regional health authorities are being asked to apply to plasma collection all income derived from the handling charges that we introduced recently for blood and blood products supplies to non-NHS hospitals.

AIDS

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make the necessary money available to enable all blood donors to be screened for the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The possible test is still in the development stage so that the cost of introducing routine screening for HTLV III virus cannot yet be predicted.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the ratio of nurses to patients in National Health Service hospitals in 1970, 1975 and 1980; and at the latest available date;

(2) what was the ratio of doctors to patients in National Health Service hospitals in the years 1970, 1975, and 1980; and at the latest available date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage increase in prescription charges since May 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: 700 per cent., although this is measured from what I believe to be an artificially low base as previous Governments had, for reasons not known to me, decided to freeze the charge.

Salmonella Poisoning

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he issues to local authorities about measures taken to inspect premises in the prevention of salmonella poisoning.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 239]: The most frequent cause of salmonella food poisoning is poor standards in the handling of food. This is something to which careful attention is paid by environmental health officers when inspecting food and catering premises in the course of enforcing food hygiene regulations. The Department has not issued particular guidance on the subject.

Specialist Claims Control

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the results of his investigation into the methods for calculating savings from the work of specialist claims control.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 149]: The study into specialist claims control (SCC) was extended to incorporate an exercise to provide comparative figures for the cost-effectiveness of other departmental measures directed at the prevention of fraud, in order to help us achieve the most appropriate balance between SCC and other measures. We will announce our conclusions in the light of the results when these have been considered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Germany (Reunification)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will seek to make the reunification of Germany an objective of the Western European Union.

Mr. Renton: Successive British Governments have taken it as axiomatic that real and permanent stability in Europe will be difficult to achieve so long as the German nation is divided against its will. Heads of Government of the Western European Union—as members of NATO—joined in making the following declaration by NATO Heads of Government in Bonn on 8 June 1982:

"We recall that the rights and responsibilities of the Four Powers relating to Berlin and Germany as a whole remain unaffected and confirm our support for the political objective of the Federal Republic of Germany to work towards a state of peace in Europe in which the German people regains its unity through free self determination."

Western European Union

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report to Parliament on matters discussed in the Western European Union.

Mr. Renton: Yes. We shall keep the House informed from time to time of important issues which arise. As I said to the hon. Member on 31 October, we have been working actively with our partners in the Western European Union to find ways of making better use of the organisation. We fully support the declaration and the document outlining institutional improvements which were agreed by Foreign and Defence Ministers at their meeting in Rome on 27 October and welcome their decision to meet regularly together within the WEU framework. Copies of the documents approved on 27 October have been placed in the Library of the House.

None of the measures which are to be taken to revitalise the WEU is intended to duplicate or undermine the Atlantic Alliance, which remains the foundation of our security. The activities of WEU can, however, help to bring about a stronger and more cohesive contribution to NATO from its members and increase public understanding of the European defence role within the Alliance.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the foreign policy implications for the United Kingdom of the new emphasis on Western European Union.

Mr. Renton: Our support for a reactivated Western European Union is designed to reinforce our existing foreign policy objectives of maintaining peace and securing the defence of Europe through our commitment to NATO. A revitalised WEU will help us to strengthen the European pillar of the Alliance, and to give political impetus to a more cohesive European defence contribution within it.

Mauritius

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many higher education scholarships have been gained in the United Kingdom by students from Mauritius in each of the past three years; what number is expected to be gained in the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Our supported award schemes provided scholarships for higher education studies in the United Kingdom to 44 Mauritian students in 1982-83, 56 in 1983-84 and 80 in 1984-85. It is not possible to state the number expected in the next two years, but the special circumstances of Mauritius are well recognised and every effort is being made to provide assistance to enable Mauritian students to come to the United Kingdom for higher education studies.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any proposal to visit Mauritius; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have at present no plans to do so.

Tristan Investments Ltd.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs where is the registered office of Tristan Investments Ltd.

Mr. Renton: Cape Town, Republic of South Africa.

Libya

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the numbers of British nationals currently working in Libya; and what are the arrangements for giving them diplomatic or consular protection as appropriate.

Mr. Renton: There are approximately 5,000 British citizens currently working in Libya.

Protection is afforded to them by the Italian embassy which represents British interests in Libya. There are two British diplomatic service officials on the staff of the Italian embassy in the British interests section.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in view of the prolonged disruption in relations with Libya and the absence of dialogue between the two countries, he will advise British citizens and businesses to leave Libya.

Mr. Renton: No. British residents who choose to remain in Libya, and British citizens who visit Libya, do so on their own responsibility and that of the Libyan authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rape Seed

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report details of the tariff and levies payable on rape seed and rape seed oil together with the imports and exports of these products in the current year to date compared with 1983 and 1970, distinguishing EEC trade from that with the rest of the world.

Mr. Channon: The rates of customs duty chargeable in 1984 on imports of rape seed and rape seed oil are:

(i) the European Community is defined throughout in terms of current membership.

(ii) — signifies nil trade.

(iii) rape seed and rape oil are not separately identifiable from colza seed and colza oil.

COCOM Agreement

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the title of the specialist group responsible for the detection of breaches of the COCOM agreement within Britain; how it is constituted; and what are its powers.

Mr. Channon: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is responsible for the detection and prosecution of breaches of export controls operated in pursuance of the United Kingdom's COCOM undertakings. Officials from Customs and other Departments with an interest meet as necessary to discuss enforcement matters under the chairmanship of my Department.

Newsprint Quota

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the European Economic Community Commission to set the newsprint quota for the future at a level of 750,000 tonnes or above.

Mr. Channon: It will be for the EC Council of Ministers to agree to the future level of the annual duty-free quota for imports of newsprint. The quota level will depend on the outcome of negotiations with Canada following the adoption by the GATT council of the report of a disputes settlement panel. Within the Community, the United Kingdom will continue to press for a future quota which adequately reflects the import needs of United Kingdom newsprint users.

Food Mixers, Domestic Irons and Typewriters

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information is available to him about the cessation of United Kingdom production of food mixers, domestic irons and typewriters and the consequent increase in the number of such products imported.

Mr. Butcher: Electric food mixers have ceased to be made in the United Kingdom by one firm and domestic electric irons by two firms in the last five years. These products are currently being made by other United Kingdom companies, but information about their production is not disclosed for commercial reasons. Typewriter production in the United Kingdom ceased several years ago. Import figures for irons and for food mixers and other food grinders and juice extractors are published in the "Business Monitor PQ3460 Domestic Electrical Appliances" and those for typewriters are available in "Business Monitor PQ 3301."

Coal Imports

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the import price of coal given in the "Overseas Trade Statistics" includes the cost of unloading the coal.

Mr. Channon: The values of imported goods given in the statistics are cif, including freight, insurance, commission and all other costs, charges and expenses incidental to the sale and delivery of the goods to the port or place of importation into the United Kingdom—with the exception of any duty or tax chargeable in this country. They do not include subsequent internal charges incurred after importation, such as unloading or inland transportation.

Disabled Workers (Post Office)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, as a percentage of the total work force, how many registered disabled workers are employed by the Post Office.

Mr. Pattie: I understand that about 1 per cent. of Post Office staff are registered dissbled people. In addition, there are a number of disabled people who for one reason or another have not registered. The Post Office is currently exploring methods of engaging a higher percentage of registered disabled people as part of the work force.

Patent Office

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the future of the Patent Office; and when he expects to announce a decision.

Mr. Trippier: Among the numerous responses we have received to the Green Paper, "Intellectual Property Rights and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9117), which recommended that the Patent Office should become a separate statutory body, are some 50 which have expressed a view on this recommendation. This matter is still under consideration and Ministers will make a statement as soon as possible.

United States (Export Controls)

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place with the United States Government about the application of United States export controls to persons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: The United Kingdom and United States Governments have discussed over recent months a number of issues relating to the application of United States export controls to United Kingdom persons. The purpose of the discussion has been to find ways of minimising problems which arise in this area.

Arrangements have now been made for the two Governments to consult if it appears that problems may arise in relation to the application of export controls administered by the United States Department of Commerce to companies or individuals in the United Kingdom, or if the United Kingdom Government envisage using the Protection of Trading interests Act in relation to the application of these controls.

British Telecom

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why shares in British Telecom are not to be issued on the Paris and Frankfurt stock exchange.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 223]: The offer for sale of shares in British Telecom is principally a United Kingdom offering. It was not considered necessary for the success of the offering for shares to be offered for sale in Paris or Frankfurt.

Privatisation

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those enterprises for whose privatisation his Department has been responsible since 1979; and if he will specify in each case the form which privatisation took.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 223]: Since 1979 the Department has been responsible for the privatisation of British Aerospace, Cable and Wireless and now British Telecom. In addition, other sales have been made by the nationalised industries, publicly-owned companies and the British Technology Group (BTG) for which the Department is responsible. These include the privatisation of Jaguar—owned by BL — the disposal of holdings by BTG, joint ventures between the British Steel Corporation and the private sector and the disposal of certain subsidiaries by British Shipbuilders.

The form taken by each of these sales is as follows:

British Aerospace—Fixed price offer of 51·6 per cent. of the company's shares.

Cable and Wireless—1st sale (October 1981) fixed price offer of 49·4 per cent. of the company's shares.

British Telecom—Fixed price offer of 50·2 per cent. of the company's shares.

Jaguar—Fixed price offer of 100 per cent. of the company's shares.

British Technology Group—A variety of methods has been used including sales to management, sales to industrial companies and placements with institutional investors.

British Steel and private sector joint ventures—Six joint venture companies established

British Shipbuilders—Sales of Scott Lithgow to Trafalgar House and certain shiprepair and engineering subsidiaries to industrial purchasers or to management.

The second sale of shares in Cable and Wireless in December 1983 was the responsibility of HM Treasury.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Bulmer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many members of his Department of the rank of assistant secretary or above have held a job in industry or commerce for at least a year; of these, how many have held a profit-accountable job in industry; and what proportions these represent in each case.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 222-23]: Forty-six, or about one in four, of the officers of assistant secretary rank or above have held a job in industry or commerce for at least a year.

My Department has no means of identifying "profit-accountable" jobs.

DEFENCE

Greenham Common

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if discussions took place between his Department and the Thames water authority concerning the replacement of the standpipe on Greenham common used by the Greenham peace women.

Mr. Stanley: I am not aware of any such discussions.

Alconbury and Molesworth Air Bases

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much the United States Government will contribute in 1985 for the construction of (a) Alconbury air base and (b) Molesworth air base.

Mr. Stanley: This is a matter for the United States Government, but I understand that the information requested is not yet publicly available.

British Military Attaché, Mexico

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions during the last 12 months the British military attaché in Mexico has visited Nicaragua; for what purposes; and whom he met there.

Mr. Stanley: The military attaché Mexico City has visited Nicaragua five times in the last 12 months. The visits were made as part of his military attaché liaison duties and included meetings with members of the Nicaraguan Government and officials, foreign attachés and diplomats, and various other visitors, including business men.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of the British military attaché in Mexico; and which countries he covers.

Mr. Stanley: The British military attaché Mexico City undertakes representational duties, promotes the sale of British defence equipment and advises the ambassador in each country to which he is accredited on military matters. He is resident in Mexico, but is accredited also to El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua.

36 (Eastern) Signals Regiment (Volunteers)

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the new headquarters building for 36 (Eastern) Signals Regiment (Volunteers) to be ready for occupation.

Mr. Stanley: No decision has yet been made on the rebuild of this headquarters building. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will be writing to my hon. Friend to set out the present position.

NATO (Defence Expenditure)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for collective North Atlantic Treaty Organisation security policy of the average increase in defence spending of 3 per cent. annually by the European members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Stanley: The additional resources which have been made available by the European members of NATO since the aim of 3 per cent. annual real increases in defence expenditure was endorsed in 1977, have strengthened the deterrent and defensive capability of the Alliance.

Ballistic Missiles (Defence)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the technology required to detect the launch of a ballistic missile at the instant of ignition is already available.

Mr. Stanley: The use of infra-red sensors mounted on satellites for the detection of heat sources such as ballistic missile exhaust plumes is an established technology.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the desirability of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries developing a ballistic missile defence system in view of the fact that the Soviet Union has expanded its ground-based ballistic missile defence system in contravention of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Stanley: We are discussing the implications of potential developments in ballistic missile defences with our allies, including the United States.

Territorial Army

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the prospects for achieving the membership target of the Territorial Army of 86,000 men by 1990.

Mr. Stanley: We consider this target achievable, but a significant increase in recruitment will be required.

Middle East Sales

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the sales of non-lethal software such as hospital services to middle eastern countries through International Military Services.

Mr. Butler: International Military Services Limited provides a wide range of defence-related services. These include educational and training services as well as hospitals and medical equipment. A large proportion of this business is in the middle east. The company has an offer for the provision of hospitals under consideration by one country, and is considering inquiries from several others for the provision of both field hospitals and rehabilitation centres. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, I cannot name the countries concerned.

Naval Log Books

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if (a) the control room log for April-May 1982 and (b) the signals log for April-May 1982 of HMS Splendid are available to him;

(2) if (a) the control room log, (b) the signals log and (c) the captain's account of HMS Splendid have been seen by (i) Ministers and (ii) any officials of his Department since the end of the Falklands conflict;

(3) when the routine destruction of signal logs of nuclear submarines was introduced in the Royal Navy; and by whose authority;

(4) what is the normal interval between the removal of a signals log from a vessel returning from patrol and its destruction; and where that log is kept in that interval;

(5) what Royal Navy logs, other than signal logs, are routinely destroyed.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the signals log of HMS Conqueror during the Falklands campaign was destroyed; on whose authority; and at what level the decision was taken;

(2) when the signals log book of HMS Splendid was destroyed; and on whose authority.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in what circumstances Royal Navy signal log books are destroyed;

(2) in what circumstances signals log books from Royal Navy vessels could not be destroyed;

(3) how many signals log books of Royal Navy vessels which served in the Falklands during the hostilities in 1982 have been destroyed.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence for each naval vessel which took part in the Falklands campaign (a) whether its captain's account is available, (b) whether its control room log is available and (c) whether its signals log is available.

Mr. Stanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

NATO Exercises

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those NATO exercises that he is not prevented from publishing because of security considerations.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that NATO has issued press releases about the following exercises in 1984: Teamwork, Avalanche Express, Ardent Ground, Deterrent Force, Distant Hammer, Central Enterprise, Sea Supply, Cold Fire, Display Determination and Safe Pass.

Longmoor Camp

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many persons have been arrested by the military police at demonstrations outside and inside Longmoor camp and on which days; and how many have been charged;

(2) what has been the daily number of people held in a pit at Longmoor camp, Hampshire, whilst awaiting being charged for taking part in demonstrations outside or near the camp;

(3) what were the circumstances and reasons why persons arrested by troops at Longmoor camp, Hampshire, were herded into a pit 6 ft deep and guarded by armed soldiers whilst awaiting processing.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence why soldiers detained Mrs. Tessa Babcock and her 13-year-old daughter Zoe in a muddy pit surrounded by barbed wire for almost two hours at Longmoor camp, Hampshire, on Friday 16 November.

Mr. Stanley: The numbers taken into custody for trespass in a military training area whilst an exercise was in progress were as follows:

15 November	4
16 November	24
17 November	28
18 November	25
19 November	2
20 November	4

They were detained at an inactive rifle range as this was one of the few places in the training area where cover was available until collected by the Hampshire police. Twelve have been reported for summons.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average length of time, the shortest and longest time a person has spent in a pit at Longmoor camp.

Mr. Stanley: These details are not available.

Naval Rating (Arrest)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Defence what action has been taken by his Department in respect of the naval rating arrested while off duty in connection with the mining dispute.

Mr. Stanley: No administrative action will be considered by the Ministry of Defence until such time as any criminal proceedings have been completed.

Asbestos (Faslane)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure compliance with the regulations which are required to be observed in dealing with the asbstos dump at the submarine base at Faslane, Dumbarton; and what are his plans in respect of this asbestos.

Mr. Stanley: A decision has yet to be taken on the most suitable way of dealing with the asbestos contamination in an area separate from the main operating part of the Faslane submarine base. When this has been decided, the work programme will be discussed with, and approved by, the Health and Safety Executive, and the working procedures will be in accordance with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the asbestos regulations 1969 and the Health and Safety Commission's approved code of practice on work with asbestos. The Department is also fully aware of its responsibilities under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, and has already taken precautions to prevent access to the area both by the erection of security fences in 1981 and, recently, by the placing of warning notices.

Nuclear Weapons (Transportation)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to the regional emergency planning officer in a region through which a convoy of nuclear weapons-carrying vehicles is to pass.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add to the letter sent to the hon. and learned Member on 20 September 1984 by my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces and to the reply I gave to the hon. and learned Member on 22 October, at column 497.

Exercise Broken Arrow

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether civilian police and fire authorities were invited to participate in the recent Broken Arrow exercise on Salisbury plain.

Mr. Stanley: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 20 November, at column 88.

TRANSPORT

Buses (Deregulation)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what comparative changes in bus usage in terms of passenger journeys and passenger miles have taken place between 1981 and 1984 within the deregulated trial areas and the areas covered by the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures are not available for the trial areas. Passenger journeys in the metropolitan counties — excluding Tyne and Wear because the introduction of the Metro alters the basis for assessing change in bus usage between 1981-82 and 1982-83— will have increased by 0·9 per cent. between 1981-82 and 1984-85 on current projections. This compares with an increase in subsidy on current projections of 9·2 per cent. over the same period.

Figures for passenger miles are available only from 1982-83, and in the six metropolitan counties are projected to have risen by 1·2 per cent. between 1982-83 and 1984-85.

Taxis

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authorities in the United Kingdom refuse to increase the number of taxi plates.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the latest survey, carried out in 1980, it was established that in 249 of the 304 districts in England and Wales where taxi licensing was applied, the number of hackney carriage vehicle licences—taxi plates—on issue was limited. In 201 of these areas the total specified number had been taken up, and there were waiting lists for further licences. In some cases the number of applicants on the waiting list was more than twice the number of existing licences.

Cyclists

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for ensuring the co-ordination and funding of provision for cyclists following the proposed abolition of the Greater London council.

Mrs. Chalker: I attach importance to safe provision for cyclists in London as elsewhere and arrangements in London will take account of this.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to issue any further consultation documents on the reallocation of transport responsibilities in London that will include discussion of cycling.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no plans at present to do so. Our discussions with boroughs about practical details during the transition period are already in hand.

North Devon Link

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what difference the receipt of the north Devon link stage 2A report will make on his decision to hold a public inquiry into the north Devon link 2B orders, as recently announced.

Mrs. Chalker: None. As I explained to my hon. Friend on Tuesday 20 November, at column 94, the joint decision of the Secretaries of State will be announced as soon as possible. My decision to hold a public inquiry into the north Devon link stage 2B orders will not influence that decision. The 2B orders, besides fulfilling in part the Government's desire for a road to link north Devon with the M5, also fulfils the objective of providing a much needed bypass for South Molton, Swimbridge and Landkey.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the level of expenditure on the maintenance of roads by both Government and local authorities in each of the years 1964 to 1983 expressed in constant prices.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is not available before the financial year 1973-74.

Maintenance expenditure on roads in England from 1973-74 to 1983-84 at 1982-83 prices was as follows:

	Motorways and Trunk Roads	Local Authority Roads	Total £ million
1973-74	202	923	1,125
1974-75	114	905	1,019
1975-76	132	931	1,063
1976-77	135	863	998
1977-78	126	821	947
1978-79	143	851	994
1979-80	148	828	976
1980-81	137	802	939
1981-82	196	855	1,051
1982-83	210	838	1,048
1983-84	184	*895	*1,079

London Boroughs (Development Plans)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his proposed strategic guidance to the London boroughs in formulating their unitary development plans will include specific borough highway proposals.

Mrs. Chalker: Boroughs will be responsible for formulating highway proposals for their roads. If appropriate, these may be referred to in any strategic planning guidance given.

London Boroughs (Strategic Planning Guidance)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the strategic transport issues which will be reflected in the strategic planning guidance he will issue to the London boroughs will include matters relating to public transport policies and provision.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes, if appropriate.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what alternative arrangements for dealing with complaints about aircraft noise he intends to make in the event of the Greater London council's noiseline service being discontinued following abolition of the council.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. My Department's current procedures for handling complaints will not be affected.

Barking Relief Road

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to compensate householders and allotment holders in the vicinity of the south Woodford to Barking relief road.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 233]: The normal full range of statutory compensation and sound insulation measures is available. I am sending copies of the relevant leaflets to the hon. Member and shall be happy for them to be supplied direct to any of his constituents who would find this helpful.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what levels of noise and air pollution are expected to be generated from traffic using the south Woodford to Barking relief road as it passes through Newham, both before and after the opening of the east London river crossing.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 233]: Noise effects will vary according to proximity of the relief road and to the noise-reducing measures such as grass mounds which will be provided. If the hon. Member has particular properties in Newham in mind, perhaps he will write to me. Lead emissions from vehicle exhausts are expected to be within the air quality standard.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the decision to proceed with the overhead route for the south western to Barking relief road takes into account the effect of additonal traffic when the east London river crossing is opened.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 233]: The south Woodford to Barking relief road decision was taken on its own merits. The environmental impact evidence provided by the Department about its design included estimates of the possible effects in the event of construction of an east London river crossing.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from residents of Newham about the proposal to build a viaduct over the Liverpool street to Southend railway line for the south Woodford to Barking relief road.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 233]: The objections and representations about this were reviewed in the inspector's report following the public inquiry, and were carefully considered before the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport decided to accept the inspector's recommendation that the viaduct should form part of the scheme.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he gave to the aesthetic effect, and effect on local amenities, of building a viaduct for the south Woodford to Barking relief road; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to the reply, 22 November 1984, c. 233]: Detailed attention has been given over a long period to the appearance of the proposed five viaducts and their design was considered by the Royal Fine Arts Commission. Decisions were taken only after the most careful consideration of all the available evidence including points made at the public inquiry.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Shropshire)

Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools in Shropshire that have been inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate, and the dates of such inspections, since 1 January 1982.

Sir Keith Joseph: The following schools and colleges in Shropshire have been the subject of formal inspections by Her Majesty's Inspectors since 1 January 1982:

Blessed Robert Johnson Catholic College, Telford — November 1982.

William Reynolds County Junior School, Telford — November 1982.

Madeley Court Comprehensive School, Telford — November 1982.

Oswestry College—January 1983.

Oxon Church of England Primary School, Shrewsbury—February 1983.

Acton Reynald School, Shrewsbury (Independent)—March 1983.

Corbet Comprehensive School, Baschurch—October 1983.

Additionally, since 1 January 1982 there have been more than 180 less formal visits by HMI to schools in the county.

Student Grants

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of families likely to be affected by the proposed (a) 20 per cent. and (b) 25 per cent. tapers for student grants.

Mr. Brooke: For the academic year 1985-86 an estimated 160,000 families will be assessed at £1 in every £5 on residual incomes of £10,300 and above, and of these an estimated 85,000 families will be assessed at £1 in every £4 on residual incomes of £15,000 and above.

Parental Contributions

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, on the basis of a £1,000 per annum net mortgage payment, £700 annual pre-1984 life insurance premiums, 5 per cent. pension contribution normal rates of national insurance, wives' income election where advantageous and no other allowances or unearned income, what is the parental contribution assessed for joint incomes set out at every £1,000 between £8,000 and £30,000 of joint income, setting out also the husbands' and wives' individual gross incomes, and how this compares with their joint net income after tax and national insurance both in overall terms and as a percentage, assuming that in all cases both partners work and the huband's gross income is one and a half times that of his wife.

Mr. Brooke: For the 1985-86 academic year the information is as follows:

Family Gross Income (1984-85 Financial year)	of which Husband's earnings	Wife's earnings	Net income after tax and national insurance	Parental contribution 1985-86	1985-86 parental contribution as per cent. of 1984-85 net income

30,000	18,000	12,000	20,912	4,000	19·1

Notes:

The contribution payable in each case may be less than the amounts shown in the scale, particularly at its top end. This will depend on the amount of the award (maintenance and fees) towards which the contribution has to be made and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowances for other dependent children.

* Families with one award-holder studying outside London and with no other dependent children will be assessed to contribute on average no more than this sum.

In 1985-86 there will be a maximum parental contribution of £4,000 per family.

ILEA (Compensation Awards)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements will be made in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council for the future payment of compensation awards at present paid by the council on behalf of his Department to former Inner London education authority teachers.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Youth Clubs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of statutory youth clubs run by each outer London borough and the total amount per head of the population allocated as grant aid to non-statutory youth organisations.

Mr. Brooke: Information about the number of local education authority provided youth clubs run by each outer London borough is not available centrally. Outer London boroughs return information to the Department of the Environment each year about the total grant paid to voluntary organisations as part of each authority's expenditure on the youth service. Expenditure per head of the 11 to 17-year-old population within each authority in 1982-83 the latest year for which information is available, was as follows:

LEA	Expenditure per 11 to 17-year-old £

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give a comparison of per capita spending on teaching staff, support staff and books and equipment by Norfolk county council with the average per capita spending on those items by non-metropolitan counties.

Mr. Dunn: The average expenditure per pupil on teaching staff, support staff and books and equipment in 1982-83, the latest year for which firm figures are available, are set out in the table. The figures for primary and secondary schools combined are:

Per Pupil Expenditure by LEAs (£'s 1982-83 prices)

	Teaching Staff	Educational Support Staff	Books and Equipment
Norfolk	540	20	26
All Non-Metropolitan Counties	546	17	27

Nursery Schools

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the number of nursery class and nursery school places available per 1,000 children aged three years plus and four years plus in Dorset, East Sussex, Hereford and Worcester, Kent, Somerset and Wiltshire, and the total number available per 1,000 children aged three years plus and four years plus in non-metropolitan counties, metropolitan districts and Greater London.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested as at January 1984 is as follows:

	Number of pupils in nursery* classes	Number of places per 1,000 of the 3 and 4-year-old population
Dorset	647	52
East Sussex	950	71
Hereford and Worcester	964	56
Kent	1,827	47
Somerset	68	6
Wiltshire	137	10
Non-metropolitan authorities	109,339	149
Metropolitan authorities	97,986	333
Greater London	51,276	315
England	258,601	217

* The number of pupils in nursery classes in nursery and primary schools

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the number of nursery schools in England in each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of maintained nursery schools in England as at January in each of the years 1980 to 1983 are as follows:

January	Number of maintained nursery schools
1980	596
1981	588
1982	582
1983	575

ILEA (Superannuation)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what superannuation arrangements will be made in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council for the non-teaching staff of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The London residuary body will take over the GLC's superannuation fund and non-teaching staff of the ILEA will continue to participate in that fund.

Disabled Persons (Specialist Information Technology Training)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the budget spent on information technology education in 1983 in colleges and universities was spent on specialist information technology training for disabled people who cannot attend these establishments.

Sir Keith Joseph: This information is not available.

WALES

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts of cash given to the Development Board for Rural Wales in each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85; if he will compare the 1979-80 and 1984-85 amounts indicating the change in real terms; when he proposes to announce the board's budget for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Funds, including housing subsidy, provided or expected to be provided to the Development Board for Rural Wales are, in cash terms:

	£ million
1979-80	10·0
1980-81	7·4
1981-82	8·2
1982-83	8·9
1983-84	9·2
1984-85	9·7

Comparison in the terms asked for is not directly possible, Government programmes are no longer planned on a constant price basis. However, by applying the gross domestic product deflator and at 1983-84 prices, the figures for 1979-80 and 1984-85 would be £14·5 million and £9·3 million respectively. The figure for 1979-80 includes the special supplementary resources made available in that year.

The board's budget for 1985-86 will be published in the 1985-86 supply estimates.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the decline in real terms of the rate support grant paid in Wales in 1984-85 since 1981-82.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: When 1981-82 figures are revalued to 1984-85, prices the decline is £65.7 million. If a 1981-82 price base is used, the decline is £56·35 million.

EEC (Food Surpluses)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total costs incurred by his Department in the storage of European Economic Community food surpluses in Wales for the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food today.

EEC (Food Storage Centres)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales why he has refused to give the addresses of European Economic Community food storage centres in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The stores concerned are private businesses and it would be a breach of commercial confidence to identify them in this way.

Housing Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the SBI percentage of capital receipts accruing in the current year which can be utilised by housing authorities in (a) Wales and (b) England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The prescribed proportion of housing receipts in Wales for 1984-85 is 25 per cent. The proportion for England is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people registered as disabled in Wales were employed in (a) full-time employment and (b) part-time employment at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not available.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of people registered as disabled in Wales at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: On 31 March 1984, the total number of persons registered as handicapped on local authority registers was 109,729.

NHS (Private Beds)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many private beds are available in National Health Service hospitals in Wales; and what percentage of Health Service beds this represents.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: 52 beds are currently available for private use, representing 0·2 per cent. of the total NHS beds in Wales.

National Bus Company

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the National Bus Company in Wales.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: I am told by the three National Bus Company subsidiaries operating in Wales that the figures are as follows:

	Number
The South Wales Transport Company Limited	1,292
National Welsh Omnibus Services Limited	1,560
Crosville Motor Services Limited	1,004
TOTAL	3,856

PRIME MINISTER

Minister for Youth Affairs

Mr. Alton asked the Prime Minister if she will consider the appointment of a minister for youth affairs for a trial period of 12 months during International Youth Year 1985.

The Prime Minister: No. Such an appointment would tend to complicate existing lines of responsibility which I believe to be satisfactory.

Anglo-Irish Talks

Mr. Proctor asked the Prime Minister if the question of the Republic of Eire's membership of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation was discussed during the Anglo-Irish talks at Chequers on Sunday 18 November and Monday 19 November.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Yasser Arafat

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what information she has received regarding a possible visit to the United Kingdom in December by Yasser Arafat; and whether she will ensure that such a visit is not permitted in the interests of security and public order.

The Prime Minister: I am aware of reports that Mr. Arafat may wish to visit Britain privately in connection with the publication of a biography of him. If Mr. Arafat confirms that he does wish to come to this country, we should need to take into account the security implications before issuing a visa.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Intermittent Custody

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responses he has received to the Green Paper "Intermittent Custody"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has received over 40 responses from interested bodies and individuals to the Green Paper "Intermittent Custody" and we are giving them careful consideration.

Remand

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to impose a time limit on the period allowed before remand cases are brought before the courts.

Mr. Mellor: The Prosecution of Offences Bill, now in another place, contains provisions to enable time limits to be applied to periods before trial. We propose to exercise these powers only after conducting field trials to test the practical implications and effects of particular limits.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Gower on 17 September concerning his constituent, Mrs. Dhandayah Williams, of 20 Perryhead Road, Gorseinon, Swansea.

Mr. Waddington: I replied to the hon. Member on 19 November.

Crowd Control

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the guidelines for the police use of dogs and horses in public order and crowd control situations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This is primarily an operational matter for chief officers of police, but some general guidance relating to the use of dogs is contained in paragraph 1.95 of the consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the police in the training required by the implementation of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Good progress has been made in the preparation of training packages by the Home Office's central planning and instructor training unit and by the Metropolitan police. The programme of training each serving officer will begin in the course of next year.

Parole Policy (Statistics)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish statistics on the operation in the first year of the new parole policy;

(2) how many prisoners serving sentences of five years or more for offences of violence or drug trafficking have been released since the implementation of the new parole policy; and what have been the exceptional circumstances or compelling reasons in each case.

Mr. Mellor: We expect shortly to be able to publish an assessment of the working of the new policy in January to June this year compared with the same period last year.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many life-sentence prisoners in the new 20-year categories created by the change in parole policy have been released since its inception; and what were the exceptional circumstances or compelling reasons in these cases.

Mr. Mellor: Two. One had been in custody 26 years and four months; the other 23 years and one month.

Police and Fire Services

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional powers he proposes to take to improve staffing structures in the police and fire services; and whether it is his intention to have separate staffing structures for these services.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no proposals to alter the staffing structure of the police and fire services. If the hon. Member is referring to support presently provided by the metropolitan counties (to the police and fire services) and the Greater London council (to the fire service) these will be matters for determination in the first instance by the new joint authorities proposed in the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information presently is available to determine staffing support for police and fire services currently provided by the control support departments of the metropolitan counties and the Greater London council.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The detailed information is held by the metropolitan county councils and the Greater London council. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has issued a formal request under section 5 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 for information on the authorities' current manpower.

Juveniles (Remand)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number, by age, sex and location, of juveniles on remand in custody in Welsh penal establishments at the latest date for which figures are available; and what were the offences with which they were charged and the length of time on remand.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, there were no juveniles on remand in prison department establishmens in Wales on 31 August 1984, the latest date for which information is readily available.

Special Patrol Groups

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the special patrol group operations carried out in the Metropolitan police district between January 1983 and 30 September 1984 by district, and give details of the nature of operations conducted by district, the number of officers involved and the length and duration of each operation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special patrol group serials have been deployed during the current coal dispute; on which dates and for how long; and in which police authority areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the commissioner that no personnel from the special patrol group of the Metropolitan police have been deployed to other police areas during the dispute.

Elections (Impersonation)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of (a) the number of offences reported and (b) the number of prosecutions for voting more than once in the general elections of 1983, 1979 and 1974 in (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) Great Britain.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Truncheons (Use)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions are issued to the Metropolitan police regarding the circumstances in which truncheons may be used, and on what parts of the body; and whether he will issue guidance to forces outside the Metropolitan police on the same matters.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police instructions on the use of truncheons are given in chapter 10, paragraph 12, of the instruction book, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. We have no plans to issue guidance on the matter.

Leicester (Election Statistics)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide detailed figures for the city of Leicester giving the turnout for each ward and polling district box for local elections in May 1983, the general election in June 1983 and for local elections in May 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available. No central record is kept on this basis of the turnout at local or parliamentary elections.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire as to how many members of the Hampshire constabulary have been injured whilst carrying out duties connected with the mining dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Hampshire tells me that in the period from 14 March to 22 November inclusive, 40 of his officers were injured while carrying out duties connected with the mining dispute.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Research and Development

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assistance his Department offers to applicants who have been refused aid for industrial research and development;

(2) how much money remained unspent on 12 November of the 1985-86 allocation for innovation grants;

(3) how many applications for support for industrial research and development remain to be processed by his Department; and what is the total amount of assistance asked for.

Mr. Pattie: Since the start of Support for Innovation in May 1982, about 40 per cent. of all applications for financial assistance have failed to meet the necessary criteria. Currently, about 850 applications remain to be processed representing potential assistance of around £140 million.

On 12 November, the amounts committed for expenditure in 1985-86 on offers made under the various SFI schemes totalled around £235 million. Details of the Department's 1985-86 allocations for its main sub-programmes will be given in the forthcoming Public Expenditure White Paper.

All the Department's many and wide-ranging technical advisory services and consultancy schemes remain available to assist firms, irrespective of whether they have had an SFI application rejected or not.

Bankruptcies and Company Liquidations

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many bankruptcies and company liquidations have taken place throughout the United Kingdom since May 1979.

Mr. Fletcher: From May 1979 to October 1984 inclusive, the number of bankruptcies (including deeds of arrangement) was 32,735 and the number of company liquidations (compulsory plus creditors' voluntary) 58,010. Bankruptcies are stated before deduction of consolidations and rescissions in England and Wales; these figures are not available for parts of years but in the 5 years 1979-83 totalled 1,691.

Advanced Technology (Skill Shortages)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on initiatives that he is taking to tackle skill shortages in advanced technology.

Mr. Butcher: I chair the information technology skills shortages committee, which proposed in its first report, published in July, a "partnership for change" between industry and the academic world to provide the IT skills needed by Britain's industry, specifically at graduate level. I am delighted to report that this idea has been taken up by the CBI education foundation, which has proposed an IT skills agency, to define industry's requirements and to bring together industry and education to meet these. It is hoped that the agency will start work shortly. The committee intends to produce a report on IT skills shortages below graduate level shortly, and a final report will summarise progress made so far and put forward new points for action.

Insolvency Law

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what responses he has received to "A Revised Framework for Insolvency Law"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The White Paper, which was published in February 1984, met with general approval. A number of modifications, including wider grounds for relief from automatic disqualification made in the light of comments received, were announced on 1 August 1984. The principal of these were described in a memorandum, copies of which were placed in the Library of this House. As announced in the Queen's Speech, the Government will introduce a Bill during the current session of Parliament to give effect to their proposals.

Independent Cinemas

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make an early pronouncement on the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report (Cmnd. 8858) in relation to a limited experiment in Glasgow and Manchester for the independent cinemas in those cities to be afforded the same rights of access to films as EMI and Rank.

Mr. Fletcher: The Director General of Fair Trading has reported to me on difficulties that have arisen in such an experiment. I am considering the position and will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

British Telecom

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been spent on the advertising budget of his Department on advertising the prospectus of British Telecom.

Mr. Butcher: About £3 million is being spent on advertising the full British Telecom prospectus and the abridged mini prospectus during the offer period in the press, and on radio and television.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the prospectus issued on his behalf by Kleinwort Benson and Co. in respect of the British Telecom plc share offer made reference to the policies of the Labour party and omitted any reference to those parties whose policies do not include the renationalisation of British Telecom.

Mr. Trippier: It is necessary to make reference to the Labour party's declared policy of renationalisation since if it were carried out it would have a material impact upon the interests of investors. Nothing comparable arises from the declared policies of the other parties.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what total sums will be paid by way of commission to City institutions arising from the flotation of British Telecom shares.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dangerous Goods

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to introduce legislation concerning the importation of dangerous goods during the present Session.

Mr. Fletcher: As stated in the White Paper on the Supply of Goods (Cmnd. 9303), a Bill will be introduced when legislative time is available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students (Board and Lodging)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy concerning the continuation of the higher charge for board and lodging in public sector college hostels and halls of residence imposed on extra-district further education students.

Mr. Brooke: It is for the providing authority to secure the home authority's agreement to the payment of the costs of provision. My right hon. Friend agrees with the recommendation of the inter-authority payments committee that for residential students this agreement should cover payment of the residual boarding charge. The decision whether to pay for extra-district further education is at the discretion of the home authority; a student taking up such a place without the permission of his authority will find himself liable to pay the full cost.

Books

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what has been the total spending on books by local education authorities in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available in cost and real terms using 1979-80 as the base year;

(2) what has been the total spending on books per pupil by local education authorities in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available in cost and real terms using 1979-80 as the base year.

Mr. Dunn: Expenditure by local education authorities in England on books in primary and secondary schools and that expenditure expressed as cost per pupil, in cost and real terms, is set out in the following table for the ten financial years up to 1982-83, the latest year for which firm figures are available:

(£ 1979-80 prices)

	Primary Schools				Secondary Schools
	Expenditure £ million		Cost per Pupil		Expenditure £ million		Cost per Pupil
	Cost Terms	Real Terms	Cost Terms	Real Terms	Cost Terms	Real Terms	Cost Terms	Real Terms
1973-74	25·6	25·2	5·2	4·7	34·8	31·6	10·2	9·2
1974-75	24·2	21·0	5·0	4·3	32·3	27·9	9·0	7·8
1975-76	23·4	21·4	4·8	4·4	31·0	28·3	8·5	7·8
1976-77	22·7	21·3	4·8	4·5	31·6	29·6	8·4	7·8
1977-78	21·7	21·1	4·6	4·5	31·2	30·3	8·1	7·9
1978-79	22·3	21·6	4·8	4·7	32·4	31·5	8·4	8·2
1979-80	20·3	20·3	4·6	4·6	30·2	30·2	7·8	7·8
1980-81	18·7	19·9	4·5	4·8	28·2	28·0	6·8	7·3
1981-82	18·8	19·5	4·8	4·8	25·1	26·1	6·6	6·8
1982-83	19·2	20·2	5·0	5·3	26·7	28·1	7·1	7·5

(The figures in cost and real terms have been calculated using respectively the GDP deflator and the average price of school books index of the Publishers' Association.)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures showing spending on books alone by each local education authority in England and Wales (a) in terms of their overall allocation and spending per pupil and (b) in cost and real terms using 1979-80 as the base year for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of total local authority budgets and current spending, respectively, on education was accounted for by books alone in the latest year for which figures are available; and how this compares with each of the previous five years.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authority expenditure on books in primary and secondary schools as a percentage of net recurrent expenditure on those schools was as follows in each of the six financial years up to 1982-83, the latest year for which firm figures are available:

per cent.

Year	Primary Schools	Secondary Schools
1977-78	1·1	1·2
1978-79	1·1	1·3
1979-80	1·1	1·2
1980-81	1·0	1·0
1981-82	1·0	0·9
1982-83	1·0	1·0

Blind and Hearing Impaired Children (Teachers)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will meet the organisations concerned with the blind and deaf to discuss proposals from the Advisory Committee on Supply and Education of Teachers for removing the mandatory requirement from a specialist qualification for teachers of blind and hearing impaired children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has agreed to meet representatives of these organisations. The meeting is expected to take place shortly.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the pupil-teacher ratio for nursery schools and classes in England for each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

January of each year	Pupil Qualified teacher ratio	Pupil/All Adult Staff ratio
1980	22·0	9·8
1981	22·0	10·0
1982	22·5	10·2
1983	23·0	10·4

Special Schools

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of children in the care of a local authority or voluntary organisation are in special schools; and what proportion of all children are in special schools.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not collected centrally about the number of children in care who are being educated in special schools. In England, in 1984, 1·5 per cent. of the total school population of compulsory school age were in special schools.

Adult Education (Outer London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total expenditure on adult education in each of the outer London boroughs; and what this represents in terms of expenditure per head of the population in those boroughs.

Mr. Brooke: Separate information about expenditure on adult education is only available for adult education centres. The net recurrent expenditure on adult education centres in 1982-83, the latest year for which firm figures are available, as returned by each outer London borough, and that expenditure expressed as expenditure per head of the 18+ population is set out below.

LEA	1982-83 Expenditure £'000 (cash)	Expenditure per head of population £
Barking	289·7	1·9
Barnet	—	—
Bexley	699·5	3·2
Brent	452·4	1·8
Bromley	531·7	1·8
Croydon	360·9	1·1
Ealing	279·1	1·0
Enfield	—	—
Haringey	1,064·6	5·2
Harrow	592·5	2·0
Havering	307·0	1·3
Hillingdon	415·2	1·8
Hounslow	815·0	4·0
Kingston	292·7	2·2
Merton	162·6	1·0
Newham	267·9	1·3
Redbridge	166·9	0·7
Richmond	639·2	4·0
Sutton	14·6	0·1
Waltham Forest	570·4	2·6

These figures exclude expenditure on adult education provided in polytechnics or other maintained further education establishments, since such expenditure is not separately identifiable in the expenditure returns submitted by authorities.

Essex

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much was spent, per child, in real terms in each of the last five years in primary and secondary schools in Essex on (a) books, (b) equipment and (c) maintenance and repair, compared with the average for the non-metropolitan counties;

(2) what has been the real value of the capitation allowances in the primary and secondary schools in Essex for each of the last five years, compared with the average for the non-metropolitan counties;

(3) how much was spent in real terms in each of the last five years on each child attending primary and secondary schools in Essex, compared with the average for the non-metropolitan counties.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage of school leavers in Essex with O and A-level passes for each of the last five years, compared with the average for the non-metropolitan counties.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is given in the following table.

Percentages of School Leavers in England

	1 or more A level passes		1 or more higher grades at O level
	Essex	Non-metropolitan counties	Essex	Non-metropolitan counties
1978-79	12·5	13·1	42·8	41·0
1979-80	14·3	13·1	43·5	41·7
1980-81	13·1	14·1	44·1	42·3
1981-82	14·9	14·8	46·2	43·8
1982-83	14·6	15·1	45·9	45·1

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of education welfare officers and educational psychologists in Essex in each of the last five years, compared with the average for the non-metropolitan counties.

Mr. Dunn: The number of educational psychologists employed by Essex over the years in question is shown in the following table. This compares the number each year with the average number employed by the 40 non-metropolitan counties.

Part-time educational psychologists are shown as full-time equivalents. Information about the employment of education welfare officers is not collected by the Department.

Educational psychologists employed as at January in each year

Year	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Essex	25·0	27·1	27·5	27·5	27·5
Average overall Non-metropolitan counties	12·8	12·8	13·2	13·5	14·8

ILEA (Compensation Awards)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements will be made in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council for the future payment of compensation awards at present paid by the council on behalf of his Department to former Inner London education authority teachers.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 23 November 1984, c. 341]: The Local Government Bill contains provisions to enable the liabilities of the GLC in its capacity as the local education authority for the inner London area to be transferred to the new ILEA on the abolition of the council. This applies to the payment of compensation. All existing rights to pension and compensation payments will be fully safeguarded.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Authorities (Food Hygiene)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate expenditure incurred for training in food hygiene by health authorities in Northern Ireland in each year since 1978; and what is planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Kitchens

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much expenditure took place on modernising hospital kitchens in Northern Ireland in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not available in the form requested. However details of expenditure on structural alterations and major equipment replacement in hospital kitchens is as follows:

Financial Year	£
1978-79	263,720
1979-80	318,041
1980-81	506,129
1981-82	755,411
1982-83	1,119,457
1983-84	1,261,007
*1984-85	375,357
*1985-86	571,650

* Estimated.

Student Awards

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the numbers of minimum awards to higher education students granted by each of the education and library boards over each of the past three years.

Mr. Scott: The available information is as follows:

Numbers of Students Claiming Minumum Awards

Education and Library Board	Academic Year
	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83
Belfast	146	265	352
North Eastern	205	253	277
South Eastern	372	506	644
Southern	94	138	141
Western	54	74	99

The number of minumum awards in 1983-84 and 1984-85 is expected to be higher than in 1982-83.

Youth Training Programme

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the numbers of young people taking part in the various areas of the youth training programme in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: On 26 October 1984 there were 6,525 16-year-olds in full-time training schemes; 3,540 17-year-old employees training with employers; and 1,758 17-year-olds engaged full-time in project work.

Training Centres

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on Government training centres in Northern Ireland detailing the facilities and courses in each centre, the number of trainees and staff, capital investment, plans for new courses and what courses have been dropped in given centres.

Dr. Boyson: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Department of Economic Development has been conducting a review of the Government training centres and the attachment training scheme, and that a discussion document was issued by the Department. Comments on the document were invited by 30 November, following which the Department will begin the process of re-shaping its direct training provisions to make them both more relevant to the changing needs of industry and more cost-effective. I will write as soon as possible with the detailed information requested.

Gaelic Athletic Association

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet the Gaelic Athletic Association to discuss the level of Government assistance to the association.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the Gaelic Athletic Association.

TRANSPORT

Transport and Road Research Laboratory

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the costs of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory for each of the years 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The global in-house costs for TRRL by financial year for the period 1979-1984 were as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	8·896
1980-81	*11·645
1981-82	10·498
1982-83	10·462
1983-84	11·105

* Includes a major computer capital purchase.

These figures do not include expenditure on research undertaken by other organisations under extra-mural contracts let by the laboratory. They also exclude expenditure relating to property repayment services (introduced with effect from 1.4.83) and central purchases — the 1983-84 level of expenditure for these two headings being £3·2 million.

European Coastal Trade (British Ships)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking in the Council of Ministers to ensure free access for British ships to trade in the coastal waters of the European Community; and what reasons have been given by member Governments for denying British ships such rights of cabotage.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government have made clear, in the Council of Ministers and in other international fora, their rooted objection to restrictive cabotage laws and other cargo reservation legislation. Within the European Community, we have stressed our view that all such laws are contrary to the spirit of the Treaty of Rome. We have pressed the Commission of the European Communities to take action on this matter and expect them to come forward with practical proposals for Community measures by the end of this year.

London Underground (Identification Parades)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many identification parades were conducted in London Transport underground stations during the first nine months of 1984.

Mrs. Chalker: No formal identification parades are conducted in London underground stations. However, underground stations are sometimes used for less formal identification procedures in accordance with Home Office circular 109/1978. The British Transport police used underground stations for this purpose on 12 occasions in the period in question. Similar procedures are also carried out by the Metropolitan police but no central record of these is maintained.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the rate to be levied for London Regional Transport in 1985-86 will be consistent with the national rate poundage calculated for block grant purposes.

Mrs. Chalker: The rate support grant report for 1985-86, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will lay before the House shortly, will include details of a deduction from the national poundage schedule which will be used in calculating the grant entitlements of London authorities. The deduction will ensure that ratepayers in London are not disadvantaged compared to those elsewhere as a result of the transfer of responsibility for London Regional Transport.

Public Transport Subsidy

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those local authorities whose level of public transport subsidy is within the levels considered to be reasonable by his Department.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for local authorities to decide their own priorities for spending on individual services, having regard to their statutory duties and the guidance on overall levels of expenditure issued by my right hon. Friend. Only a small number of authorities are responsible for the major overspending in relation to the Government's plans.

Driving Licence Applications

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people holding a driving licence have been requested by his Department, in each of the past three years, to submit themselves for medical examination to establish their fitness to continue to hold a driving licence, based on information supplied by (a) people giving their names and addresses in confidence and (b) anonymous notifications.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will write to the hon. Member with such details as are available.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the numbers of rear seat car occupant casualties involved in accidents in 1983 by injury severity and age.

Mrs. Chalker: The data requested are to be published on 29 November in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1983" table 38. A copy will be available in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Truck Acts

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to introduce legislation to repeal the Truck Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Legislation is not planned for the current session, but I would refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on Wednesday 31 October at column 993. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the proposals issued on 31 October.

Skillcentre Courses (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Richard Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the current waiting time for a place on each separate course run at each skillcentre in west Yorkshire;

(2) how many people are currently waiting for a place at a skillcentre course in west Yorkshire; and what is the average time involved in each case.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following table lists the average waiting times and the number of people on the waiting list for each course in west Yorkshire's three skillcentres at Bradford, Leeds, and Wakefield.

Skillcentre Waiting Lists—West Yorkshire

Notes:
(a) Courses marked "up to 12 months"—recruitment suspended. Reserve lists in operation except for priority cases.
(b) Courses marked "over 12 months"—reserve list suspended also.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people at the latest available date have been registered as unemployed (a) who are 24 years old or younger, (b) who are 55 years old or older and (c) who have no educational or vocational qualifications; and what were the comparable figures for 1971, 1981 and 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the available information by age from the unemployment count for Great Britain.

Unemployed: Great Britain

	Aged under 25	Aged 55 years and over
Registered unemployed
July 1971	230,342	168,464
October 1981	1,144,325	428,026
Unemployed claimants
October 1983	1,210,702	351,186
October 1984	1,236,063	350,263

The comparisons are affected by the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982 and by the 1983 Budget provisions which enable some men, mainly aged 60 and over, to receive the long-term rate of supplementary benefit and national insurance credits without having to sign on at an unemployment benefit office. Between April and August 1983 an estimated 161,800 men were affected.

The monthly unemployment count does not separately identify persons with and without qualifications. However, the labour force survey provides information about the qualifications of persons aged 16-59 without a job who were looking for work in the week before the survey. Results now available from the 1983 survey, and corresponding figures from the 1981 survey are given in the following table. There was no labour force survey in 1971.

Great Britain: Thousands

Persons aged 16 to 59	1981	1983
Unemployed, seeking work	2,330	2,810
of whom: no qualifications	1,240	1,420

"Training for Jobs"

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress being made with local authority organisations concerning non-advanced further education funding under the White Paper, "Training for Jobs."

Mr. Peter Morrison: In recent discussions between the new chairman of the Manpower Services Commission, Mr. Bryan Nicholson, and representatives of the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, an agreement was reached about the basis upon which local education authorities will seek MSC support for their programmes of work-related non-advanced further education in 1985-86, and about a means of determining arrangements for later years in accordance with the White Paper "Training for Jobs" [Cmnd. 9135].

Average Weekly Income

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average weekly income of (a) men and (b) women in full-time employment in Great Britain as at April expressed in terms of modality.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The range (in units of £10) of gross weekly earnings for a full week containing the largest number of full-time employees on adult rates in Great Britain in April 1984 was, for males, £130 to £140 (covering 8 per cent. of such employees) and, for females, £80 to £90 (covering 12 per cent. of such employees).

Private Security Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received any representations for wage councils to be introduced for workers employed in the private security industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I have received no such representations during the past year.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce wage councils for workers employed by security companies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The future of wages councils is under consideration. We have no current plans to establish new councils.

Average Wage

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest date for which figures are available and for each of the previous five years (a) the average wage for a woman in full-time employment and (b) the number of such workers who earned less than that amount; and what percentage this represents in each case (i) nationally and (ii) in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following table sets out the available information from the new earnings survey between 1979 and 1984 in respect of full-time adult female employees working a full week.

	Average gross weekly earnings			Percentage of employees earning less than the relevant average
	(1) Great Britain £	(2) Cambridgeshire £	(2) as a percentage of (1)	Great Britain	Cambridgeshire
1979*	63·0	61·9	98	59	58

1984†	117·2	113·8	97	60	61

* Females aged 18 and over.
† Females on adult rates of pay.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest date for which figures are available and for each of the previous five years (a) the average wage for a man in full-time employment and (b) the number of such workers who earned less than that amount; and what percentage this represents, in each case (i) nationally and (ii) in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following table sets out the available information from the new earnings survey between 1979 and 1984 in respect of full-time adult male employees working a full week.

	Average gross weekly earnings			Percentage of employees earning less than the relevant average
	(1) Great Britain £	(2) Cambridgeshire £	(2) as a percentage of (1)	Great Britain	Cambridgeshire
1979*	101·4	101·9	100	59	60

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has recently received proposing that the status in the retail price index of interest paid on mortgage be altered; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to exclude mortgage interest rates from the retail price index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend and I have received no such representations but are aware that the Building Societies Association has recently questioned the inclusion of mortgage interest in the retail prices index.

As indicated by my right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 6 June at column 171, we have asked the retail prices index advisory committee, inter alia, to re-examine the treatment of housing costs in the index. In its report of February 1975, [Cmnd. 5905], the committee said that its recommended approach to owner occupiers' housing costs should be "reviewed in a few year's time in the light of experience".

The committee is expected to report later next year. Meanwhile we have no plans to make any changes in the coverage or method of construction of the index.

Wages Council Establishments (Yorkshire)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many wage council establishments in Leeds and in west Yorkshire were found to be underpaying in 1983; how many workers were involved; and what were the numbers of prosecutions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics are not collected for geographical areas smaller than wages inspectorate divisions. In the Yorkshire and Humberside division of the wages inspectorate, 941 establishments were found to have underpaid 2,227 workers in 1983. No employers in Leeds and west Yorkshire were prosecuted last year for offences under the Wages Councils Act 1979.

Apprentices

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will specify the recruitment targets of apprentice trainees in the engineering industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Engineering Industry Training Board's recruitment target for apprentice trainees in 1984-85 is 8,650.

Young Persons (Newham)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he has anything to add to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 139, that there was no reason why the 1,016 young people over the age of 18 years in Newham should not have had either a job or training experience.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. Unlike most other local authorities, Newham borough council has yet to start up a single project under the community programme. Young people in the borough who are under 25 and unemployed for more than six months are therefore being deprived of the opportunities for temporary work which the programme offers. I would urge the hon. Member to investigate the reasons for this delay and seek to ensure their speedy resolution.

British Gas Rough Storage Project (Dispute)

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he will have completed the evaluation of the test case regarding redundancy payments entitlement resulting from the dispute at the British Gas rough storage project, Fortuna Ugland accommodation barge; how many individuals are involved; and what representations he has received on this matter from the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is to date no test case regarding redundancy payments entitlement resulting from the dispute at the British Gas rough storage project, Fortuna Ugland accommodation barge. No individuals are therefore involved and no representations have been received on this matter from the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union.

Labour Force Survey

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will indicate, on the basis of the labour force survey carried out in spring 1984 (a) the number of unemployed female claimants, (b) the number of unemployed women registered at unemployment benefit offices and (c) an estimate of the number of female discouraged workers;

(2) if he will now publish the results of the labour force survey carried out in spring 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Results from the 1984 labour force survey are not yet available. Preliminary information will become available in the second quarter of 1985 and will be published in the Employment Gazette and in an Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitor. It is hoped that a fuller report will be published by the end of the year.

ENERGY

Magnox Reprocessing Line

12. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether Euratom will be allowed to inspect the Magnox reprocessing line at Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his written question on 21 November 1984 at column 160.

Machinery and Equipment (Protection)

13. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Energy if any provision has been made for the protection of vital machinery and equipment in the public companies under his control in the event of war.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government will be developing general advice and guidance on these matters for implementation by industry.

Energy Efficiency Campaign

11. Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is planning to increase the number of locations to which the energy efficiency campaign is to take breakfast-special meetings.

Mr. David Hunt: So far my ministerial colleagues and I have addressed 28 early morning briefings on energy efficiency, attended by over 11,000 senior executives. I plan to increase the number of these meetings.

42. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he is making with the energy efficiency campaign.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the first 12 months an energy saver exhibition offering advice and assistance to domestic consumers has been exhibited at over 200 different locations. Ministers have held 28 early morning briefings throughout the country attended by over 11,000 top executives. The most successful ever national energy management conference and exhibition was held just over two weeks ago. Our current series of "Lift a Finger" advertisements on television and in the press has resulted in over 70,000 requests from the public for further information and advice.

Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme

16. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received in favour of including redundant opencast-mining workers within the redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Primarily from the Transport and General Workers Union.

Elderly Persons (Fuel Supplies)

18. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements have been made by his Department to meet the needs of the elderly in the event of failures in the supply of energy to domestic consumers this winter.

Mr. David Hunt: I do not envisage any failures of energy supplies during this winter, unless in some regions NUM strikers prevent coal going to hospitals and old peoples homes.

Coal Stocks

20. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on coal stocks at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest official published figures are for stocks of coal on 26 August. These show total stocks of 39·18 million tonnes, of which 15·5 million tonnes were at power stations. Stocks at power stations remain at a similar level today.

43. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Energy what stocks of coal are currently held at power stations and on National Coal Board property.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden).

NCB (Borrowing Powers)

21. Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to increase the borrowing powers of the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so but we are increasing the deficit grants.

Coal Industry Dispute

22. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the dispute in the coal industry.

25. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a statement on the coal strike.

26. Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress made towards ending the coal industry dispute.

30. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current situation in the mining industry.

33. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current situation in the mining industry.

35. Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the mining dispute.

41. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current dispute in the coal industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel).

27. Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many meetings have taken place between him and the chairman of the Coal Board to discuss the mining dispute.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman of the National Coal Board regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

32. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the most recent figures for the numbers of miners employed by the National Coal Board who are (a) working and (b) on strike.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) and to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton (Mr. Morris).

36. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the total cost of the mining dispute to date.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the cost to date of the miners' dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The final cost cannot be determined until the strike ends.

40. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many coal faces have been lost, and how many are now endangered, as a result of the strike in the mining industry.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand from the National Coal Board that 21 working faces have been lost, and that a further 87 are causing concern at collieries throughout the British coalfield.

Electricity Generation

23. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy on a fuel-used basis what percentage of electricity generated by the Central Electricity Generating Board in September was from coal.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest published information available is for August. This shows that, on a fuel used basis, 35 per cent. of the electricity produced by the Central Electricity Generating Board in that month was derived from coal.

34. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of United Kingdom electricity supply is currently being supplied by coal-fired, oil-fired and nuclear power stations, respectively.

Mr. Goodlad: Based on fuel used, the proportion of electricity produced fom coal, oil and nuclear power by the electricity boards in the United Kingdom in August were as follows:

	Per cent.
Coal	33
Oil	49
Nuclear	17
Hydro-electricity and natural gas	1

Electricity Prices

24. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the Electricity Council to discuss electricity prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) earlier today.

46. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement as to the anticipated impact on electricity prices of the present dispute in the coal industry.

47. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the Government propose to set financial targets for the electricity industry in 1985-86 which do not place upon it the full burden of financing the dispute in the coalmining industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: No decisions have been taken on how the costs arising for the electricity supply industry from the miners' strike will be met.

United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association

28. Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to consult representatives of the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My Department has frequent meetings with UKOOA on a wide variety of issues.

Industrial Knowledge (Storage)

29. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what guidance he gives to the publicly owned industries under his control about the secure storage of industrial knowledge in the event of war.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is primarily a matter for the industries concerned.

Alternative Energy Supplies

31. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much his Department is currently spending annually on grants for research into alternative forms of energy; and how this compares with five years before.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department expects to spend about £14 million on renewable energy research and development in the current financial year compared with expenditure of about £8 million in 1979-80.

38. Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to research alternative energy schemes such as wind-power, wave-power, solar and tidal-barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1983-84 expenditure under my Department's renewable energy research and development programme amounted to £11·3 million, of which £4·7 million was concerned with geothermal energy and £2·5 million with wind energy. Work is being concentrated on the most promising technologies and encouraging progress is being made. For example, in October I announced approval for the construction of a 3 megawatt wind turbine on Orkney.

Civil Defence

37. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many representatives of each of the publicly owned industries under his control attended courses at the Civil Defence college, Easingwold, during the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Walker: According to the college, during the last 12 months 20 attended courses from the British Gas Corporation and two from the electricity supply industry in England and Wales.

Coal Industry (Competition)

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to promote competition in the coalmining industry by encouraging more private sector investment, production and marketing.

Mr. Peter Walker: The private sector is already involved in the construction of new mines and the operation of opencast sites, while marketing of domestic coal is also largely in the private sector.

Nuclear Electromagnetic Pulse

44. Mr. Nell Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the communications of the public industries under his control are hardened against nuclear electromagnetic pulse.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are arrangements to provide for continued communications in an emergency and this phenomenon is being taken into account in further work in this area.

Sleipner Gas

45. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when a decision is to be made on the Sleipner gas deal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: A decision will be taken as soon as possible.

Energy Supplies (Nuclear Power)

48. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of Britain's energy supplies the Government expect to be provided by nuclear power in 1994 and 2004.

Mr. Goodlad: Accurate projections are not possible for the years 1994 and 2004.

Domestic Smokeless Fuel

49. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the availability of domestic smokeless fuel.

Mr. David Hunt: Every attempt has been made to meet the demand, particularly for those most in need.

Private Coal Pits (Royalties)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Energy if Her Majesty's Government have any plan to seek to remove royalties which private sector coal pits at present pay to the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Coal Imports

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state (a) the total volume and (b) the average price per tonne of domestic coal imported into the United Kingdom from Poland in (i) September 1983, (ii) February 1984 and (iii) September 1984.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available.

Coal and Smokeless Fuel (Imports)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy if there has been any increase in the price of coal and smokeless fuel imports from the German Democratic Republic since 6 March.

Mr. David Hunt: Reliable information on prices is not available.

Sizewell B Inquiry

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much the Sizewell B inquiry has cost to date.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the Sizewell B inquiry to report on its findings.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the inspector of the inquiry. The report and recommendations will be presented to me by the inspector when he has assessed all the evidence gathered throughout the inquiry.

Nuclear Explosions

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates he has made of the likelihood of any high-explosive bomb or non-nuclear missile penetrating the reactor core of a nuclear power station, in the event of a direct hit; and of what effect this would have in terms of blast, heat or radiation in the surrounding area.

Mr. Goodlad: As explained in my previous reply of 12 November to the hon. Member the general safety requirements for protection of nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom against external hazards are such as to give a considerable degree of protection against weapons. The precise consequences of a direct hit by a high explosive bomb or non-nuclear weapon would depend on the nature of the weapon concerned.

Public Companies (Shelter Accommodation)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to provide effective shelter accommodation at their place of work for the employees of public companies under his control in the event of war.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government will be developing general advice and guidance on these matters for implementation by industry.

CIVIL SERVICE

Trade Unions (Meeting)

55. Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Civil Service when he last met representatives of Civil Service trade unions; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Hayhoe: On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I met representatives of Customs and Excise trade union side last Wednesday to discuss manpower requirements within that Department.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what was the amount budgeted for bilateral aid in 1983-84; and what was the amount spent on bilateral aid in 1983-84;

(2) what was the amount budgeted for multilateral aid in 1983-84; and what was the amount spent on multilateral aid in 1983-84.

Mr. Raison: The information requested for 1983-84 is as follows:

£ million

	Provision in spring supplementary estimate	Outturn
Multilateral	379,833	403,233
Bilateral	647,532	601,974
	*1,027,365	1,005,207

* This cash limit was reduced by £19·7 million to £1,007,674 million as announced in House of Commons on 27 July 1983.

In addition to the multilateral aid figure from voted expenditure shown above, the United Kingdom share of European Community overseas aid financed from within the EC budget and which is attributed to the aid programme in 1983-84 was £92·25 million against an original estimate of £100 million.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will describe the administrative requirements which currently exist to reduce his Department's overseas aid budget by some specified national proportion which is related to decisions of the European Community to release stocks of food and monetary aid for disaster relief in Ethiopia; and whether he will discontinue any such practice of reduction forthwith.

Mr. Raison: Food and finance for disaster relief is provided from the European Community budget or, in the latter case, from the European development fund under article 137 of the Lomé convention. The United Kingdom share of budgetary expenditure is attributed to the public expenditure allocation for financing the United Kingdom aid programme.

In the case of Ethiopia, the amount so far allocated from the 1984 budget amounts to 34·2 MECU (£20·5 million). The United Kingdom share of this is about £4·55 million, although since the rate of expenditure is uncertain, this will not necessarily all be a charge on the aid programme in this financial year.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Development Agency

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report past, present and future Scottish Development Agency-funded environmental improvement projects in each of the Scottish constituencies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that full information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost; but I will publish in the Official Report a table of investment expenditure in each Scottish constituency as soon as possible.

Mr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the approximate total number of jobs created in the past five years by Scottish Development Agency investments for each of the Scottish constituencies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that this information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report past and present Scottish Development Agency investments in companies in each of the Scottish constituencies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that full information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost; but I will publish in the Official Report a table of expenditure on environmental projects in each Scottish constituency as soon as possible.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many teachers have applied for, or expressed interest in, early retirement in each of the last four years;

(2) how many teachers obtained early retirement; and how many have expressed an interest in the current year even if the outcome is not yet known.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In the 1984-85 financial year, to the end of September, 745 teachers employed by local authorities obtained early retirement. The other information requested is not held centrally.

Pharmacy Contract

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether substantive negotiations on a new contract for pharmacy between the Government and the Pharmaceutical General Council (Scotland) will take place before a negotiated settlement between the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee and the Department of Health and Social Security is completed.

Mr. John MacKay: I can confirm that negotiations are taking place between my Department and the Pharmaceutical General Council (Scotland) in parallel with those taking place between the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee and the Department of Health and Social Security.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average weekly income of (a) men and (b) women full-time workers in Scotland as at April expressed in terms of modal range.

Mr. Younger: The modal range (in units of £10) of gross weekly earnings (not affected by absence) in April 1984 was £120-£130 for men (covering 7 per cent. of full-time adult male employees) and £89-£90 for women (covering 13 per cent. of adult female employees).

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the mean average wage of (a) men and (b) women full-time workers in Scotland as at April.

Mr. Younger: Figures on the average earnings of full-time adult male and female employees working a full week as at April 1984 are given in tables 12 and 13 respectively, of New Earnings Survey, 1984, part A, a copy of which is in the Library.

Bread and Flour Regulations

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bodies which were consulted by his Department prior to the drafting of the Bread and Flour (Scotland) Regulations.

Mr. John MacKay: The following bodies were consulted about the proposals to make new Bread and Flour (Scotland) Regulations:

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities
Scottish Branch of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration
Scottish Consumers Council
Association of Public Analysts
The Society of Scottish Directors of Consumer Protection
The Royal Environmental Health Institute of Scotland
The Faculty of Community Medicine
The British Medical Association, Scottish Branch
The Scottish Association of Master Bakers
The Federation of Bakers (Scottish Area)
CPC (UK) Ltd Brown and Polson Division
The Scottish Association of Milk Product Manufacturers
The North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board
The Aberdeen and District Milk Marketing Board
The Scottish Milk Marketing Board
The Scottish Dairy Trade Federation
Edinburgh School of Agriculture
The West of Scotland School of Agriculture
The North of Scotland College of Agriculture
The British Hotels and Caterers Association Scottish Division
The Association of Scottish Chambers of Commerce
The Wholesale Grocers' Association of Scotland
Scottish Grocers' Federation
The Scottish Retail Federation
The Scottish Co-operative Food Trade Association
The National Farmers Union of Scotland
The Scottish Trades Union Congress
The Institute of Food Science & Technology Scottish Branch

Consultation with these bodies first took place in May 1983 and again with revised proposals in March 1984.

Road Accidents

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will have discussions with Grampian regional council and the Grampian police authority on the incidence of accidents on the A92 Aberdeen-Fraserburgh road and the A952 Toll of Birness-Peterhead road which have occurred during the last two years with a view to ascertaining the need for road improvements.

Mr. Ancram: Officials of my Department maintain frequent contact with the regional council's roads department and with Grampian police to monitor accident trends on the trunk road section of the A92 and on the A952 and to assess the need for improvements to these roads.

Corstorphine Hill

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to make a decision on the proposed and recommended designation of Corstorphine hill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend will make his decision on the proposal that Corstorphine hill should be statutorily designated as countryside when he has received the views of the Countryside Commission for Scotland, his advisers in such matters, and has considered these together with the case made by Edinburgh district council.

EC (Food Surpluses)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total costs incurred by his Department in the storage of European Economic Community food surpluses in Scotland for the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. John MacKay: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Milk

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the estimated cut-back in milk production to date in each of the board areas in Scotland since milk quotas were implemented.

Mr. John MacKay: The reductions in the period 1 April to 31 October 1984, compared to production in the same period of 1983, in the areas of the three Milk Marketing Boards in Scotland are:

	Per cent.
Scottish Milk Marketing Board	7·2
Aberdeen & District Milk Marketing Board	8·5
North of Scotland Milk Marketing Board	8·1

Grudie/Talladale Hydro-electric Scheme

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the proposed Grudie/Talladale hydro-electric scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The proposals made by the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board are still under consideration by my right hon. Friend and his decision will be announced as soon as possible.

Glue Sniffing

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have been brought to his notice involving glue sniffing in Lothian region and in Scotland for each of the last three years to date; how many deaths have occurred over each of the last five years to date; how many cases have been brought before the children's panel, to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not available centrally on the number of cases reported by police to the procurator-fiscal involving solvent abuse, but the number is likely to be small in relation to the extent of the practice. Only those cases involving a criminal element such as house-breaking, theft, breach of the peace, or wilful and reckless conduct in relation to the sale of solvents to children would come to the notice of the procurator-fiscal.

The number of deaths from solvent abuse over the five years 1979-83 was:

	Lothian	Total
1979	1	2
1980	0	3
1981	0	9
1982	2	14
1983	2	10

I am advised that to date the total number of referrals to reporters to children's panels under the 1983 Act has been 612, of which 93 were in Lothian. Of these 270 were referred to a children's hearing, of which 12 were in Lothian.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to review the conditions governing the business expansion scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: All aspects of the business expansion scheme are being closely monitored and, as my right hon. Friend recently told the House on 13 November at column 552, the picture which is emerging is most encouraging.

Profit Sharing

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many profit sharing schemes are in existence in the United Kingdom; how many employees are included in these schemes; what percentage of the United Kingdom work force is affected by such schemes; and what information he has as to the number and scale of such schemes in other countries;

(2) what information he has as to the average amount of money provided by profit sharing schemes as a percentage of an average employee's earnings.

Mr. Moore: At 31 October 792 employee share schemes of all kinds had been approved by the Inland Revenue. This total is made up of 439 profit sharing schemes, 349 savings-related share option schemes and four other share option schemes approved under the Finance Act 1984. In the year 1982-83, the most recent for which figures are available, the average initial value per employee of shares allocated under approved profit sharing schemes was £230; no information is available as to the average earnings of the 230,000 employees who are benefited under these schemes.

It is estimated that the total number of employees who, since 1979, have received shares or options over shares under all types of approved schemes is at least half a million — over 2 per cent. of the total working population. We have no statistics for schemes in other countries.

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Her Majesty's Government are considering any proposals to encourage the use of profit sharing schemes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: We have already taken major steps to improve the tax incentives for employee share schemes. Since taking office in 1979 we have made significant improvements to the profit sharing reliefs and introduced new reliefs for two different types of share option scheme. Whenever we have moved a company from state control to the private sector we have given the employees an opportunity to acquire shares on preferential terms. The results of all these initiatives continue to be very encouraging. We shall keep them under close review.

Unemployment and Economic Growth

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on (a) unemployment and (b) economic growth for the next four years of (i) a nil increase in earnings, (ii) a 3 per cent. per annum increase in earnings and (c) an increase in line with inflation, each sustained for one, two and three years, leaving other inputs on the Treasury model unchanged.

Mr. Peter Rees: Hon. Members have access to the Treasury model through the Library of the House. This facility may be used to obtain the required information.

Unit Labour Costs and Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage change in unit labour costs and earnings between the latest available quarter in 1984 and the comparable quarter of (a) 1979 and (b) 1982 in the United Kingdom, West Germany, the United States of America, Japan and France.

Mr. Peter Rees: International data on unit labour costs and earnings can be found in Main Economic Indicators, published by the OECD.

Job Creation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of new jobs which would be created each year if real wages remained unchanged; what proportion of the additional jobs would be (a) in manufacturing and (b) in low paid no-tech services; and what effect this would have on interest rates, the exchange rate and the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Peter Rees: My right hon. Friend has already given estimates of the scale of the increase in employment that would result, over a period of years, if real wages had been held constant between 1981 and 1984—on 30 October at column 1184—it is likely that the additional jobs would be spread throughout the economy. Within the monetary and fiscal framework set out in the MTFS lower real wage growth, brought about by slower growth in money wages, would also give lower interest rates, improved international competitiveness and scope for lower taxes.

North Sea Oil Revenues

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of North sea oil revenues for 1984-85 and 1985-86, assuming on average dollar to pound sterling ratio of (a) 1.40, (b) 1.30, (c) 1.20 and (d) 1.10.

Mr. Moore: Estimates of North sea oil revenues for 1984-85 and 1985-86 were given in the Autumn Statement on assumptions that dollar prices for North sea oil, and the dollar/sterling exchange rate, will not change much from the current levels. The magnitude of the changes in the exchange rate postulated by the hon. Member, if they represented a change in the value of the dollar against all currencies, could have implications for dollar oil prices and tax revenues which need to be considered together with the more direct effects of exchange rate changes on oil revenues resulting from oil's being priced in dollars. It is estimated that the marginal effect on total tax taken from the North sea of a sustained one per cent. change in the sterling oil price is of the order of £150 million in a full year.

Bank Notes

Mr. Skeet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to end the differences in practice in Scotland and England relating to the powers of some banks to issue bank notes.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. There are no plans to alter the provisions relating to private note issue.

Manufactures

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is an objective of United Kingdom economic policy to reverse the downward trend in the United Kingdom share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries.

Mr. Peter Rees: Government policy is designed to create conditions that will increase the competitiveness of all sections of United Kingdom industry including manufactures.

EC (Budgetary Discipline)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the EEC Council of Agriculture has approved the common position on budgetary discipline agreed by the Economic and Finance Ministers on 11 November.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Agriculture Ministers did not discuss the common position on budgetary discipline at their meeting on 12-13 November. The issue will go before Foreign Affairs Ministers at their meeting on 26 and 27 November.

Lever Report

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those parts of the Lever report on the debt problems of developing countries which he does not find acceptable; if he will give the reasons in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: I am not persuaded that global schemes such as those canvassed by the Lever report offer an effective solution to international debt problems.

Partnership Taxation

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the total tax paid by partnerships the £30 million of tax being avoided by partnerships and referred to in paragraph 13 of the Inland Revenue consultation document, "Partnership Taxation: Basis of Assessment", represents.

Mr. Moore: £30 million would be in the region of 2½ per cent. of the total tax charge on all partnerships.

Income Tax

Mr. Ewing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the last 10 years the number of people who paid tax at (a) the standard rate and (b) each of the successive higher rate bands.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Customs and Excise (Confiscated Books)

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the grades of Customs and Excise officers involved in reading books confiscated from the Gay's the Word bookshop; how many are men; and how many women.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the first instance Customs officers in the grades of higher executive officer, executive officer and clerical officer were involved in reading books detained from the Gay's the Word bookshop. They were also subsequently examined by a senior executive officer and a principal. Of the officers concerned 30 were men and six were women.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many hours have been devoted by Customs and Excise officers to reading books confiscated from the Gay's the Word bookshop; and what is the total cost to date.

Mr. Hayhoe: As detailed records are not kept this information is not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions have been given to Customs and Excise officers reading books confiscated from the Gay's the Word bookshop.

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs and Excise officers have been instructed to consider whether or not, in their opinion, the books were indecent or obscene in accordance with contemporary standards as currently interpreted by the courts.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Young Persons (Rights)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the United Nations working group on the United Nations convention on the rights of the child with a view to the speeding up of the drafting process; and if any further representations are expected.

Mr. Renton: As a member of the working group, we are working to achieve a practical, balanced and useful instrument on the rights of the child. We will continue to do so.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Nations General Assembly resolutions 36/29 and 37/47, concerning the rights of young people to education, vocational training and work; and whether the Government are satisfied that their present policies are compatible with these resolutions.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom delegation voted for resolution 36/29 and similar United Nations resolutions on this issue as our present policies were and are compatible with these resolutions.

We attach high priority to the provision of educational and vocational training services for young people.

Brussels (Representation)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the 74 United Kingdom-based officers in the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels have current passports issued by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland; and how many also hold passports issued by other nations.

Mr. Renton: All United Kingdom-based officers in the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels have current passports issued by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. In the time available it has not been possible to determine whether any also hold passports issued by other nations. I will write to the hon. Member.

Israel (Export Licences)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now lift the ban on issuing export licences to Israel for military equipment to enable Israel to purchase items from Britain as do some of her neighbours.

Mr. Luce: Restrictions on the issue of export licences for the sale of certain equipment to Israel are kept under close review. There are no immediate plans to lift them.

Iraq (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the Minister of State's visit to Iraq; and whether he took the opportunity to urge Iraqi leaders to agree to a ceasefire in the Gulf war and the implementation of outstanding resolutions of the Security Council.

Mr. Luce: My visit to Iraq was part of the normal pattern of Ministerial exchanges we have with the Iraqis. I discussed a number of bilateral and international issues during the visit, including the Iran-Iraq conflict. I made very clear our wish to see this distressing conflict brought to an early end. Iraqi leaders have frequently expressed their desire to see a ceasefire agreed as soon as possible.

Law of the Sea (Convention)

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the Government's current position in relation to the United Nations convention on the law of the sea, in particular whether it is proposed to sign the convention on or before 9 December; and what is the Government's policy towards the United States' overtures relating to a mini treaty of industrial nations.

Mr. Rifkind: Our policy towards the convention is being reviewed at present. British companies were encouraged to come to arrangements with other pioneers in deep seabed mining in order to avoid the possibility of overlaps of deep seabed sites. We have always recognised the need to ensure on a governmental level the results of the companies agreement and pursued discussions with other interested states. The result of these discussions is an agreement called a Provisional Understanding on Deep Seabed Matters which was signed on 3 August.

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is undertaking a ministerial review of Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the United Nations convention on the law of the sea; and if he will list the benefits and disadvantages to the United Kingdom of remaining a non-signatory to the convention.

Mr. Rifkind: Our policy towards the convention is being reviewed at present and the benefits and disadvantages of the convention are being considered.

Gibraltar

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the reason for the visit to his office of Gibraltar's Chief Minister and Deputy Chief Minister on 21 November; and if he will make a statement on what matters were discussed.

Mr. Renton: The meeting reviewed developments since my right hon. and learned Friend last saw Sir J. Hassan on 3 October. Discussion included a review of progress in the contacts with Spain which are aimed at achieving the full normalisation of relations between Gibraltar and Spain.

Hong Kong

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons not of Chinese descent were naturalised as citizens of the United Kingdm and Colonies in Hong Kong in each year since 1964, respectively, and as British Dependent Territories citizens in 1983 and up to the latest available date in 1984; and what was their former nationality in each case.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total Number of Non-Chinese naturalised	Breakdown by former Nationality
As citizens of United Kingdom and Colonies
1964	13	2 Burmese 2 Indonesians 4 Filipinos 5 Portuguese
1965	8	2 Burmese 1 Korean 4 Portuguese 1 Swiss
1966	10	2 Burmese 2 Indonesians 1 American 1 Israeli 4 Portuguese
1967	17	2 Burmese 2 Filipinos 10 Portuguese 1 Venezuelan 1 Hungarian 1 Pole
1968	11	2 Burmese 1 Indonesian 1 South African 2 Filipinos 3 Portuguese 2 South Vietnamese
1969	8	3 Burmese 1 Indonesian 1 Filipino 3 Portuguese
1970	17	3 Burmese 1 Indonesian 1 American 2 Israelis 1 Peruvian 1 Cuban 8 Portuguese
1971	12	1 Burmese 1 Indonesian 4 Americans 2 South Africans 1 Cambodian 2 Filipinos 1 Portuguese
1972	7	1 American 2 Israelis 2 Filipinos 2 Portuguese
1973	6	1 American 3 Filipinos 2 Portuguese
1974	6	1 South African 1 Israeli 1 Filipino 1 Korean 1 Portuguese 1 British Protected Person (North Borneo)
1975	15	1 Indonesian 5 Pakistanis 1 American 1 South African 1 Israeli 3 Cambodians 1 Filipino 1 Portuguese 1 Nepalese
1976	12	4 Pakistanis 1 American 2 South Africans 1 Israeli 1 Cambodian 2 Filipinos 1 Portuguese
1977	14	4 Burmese 4 Pakistanis 1 South African 3 Israelis 1 Filipino 1 South Vietnamese
1978	5	1 Burmese 1 South African 2 Portuguese 1 British Protected Person (Brunei)
1979	4	1 Indonesian 1 Pakistani 1 South African 1 Portuguese
1980	6	1 Burmese 1 Pakistani 1 South African 1 Israeli 1 Filipino 1 British Protected Person (Tanganyika)
1981	2	2 Burmese
1982	4	3 Burmese 1 Pakistani
As British Dependent Territories Citizens
1983	1	1 Burmese
1984*	5	3 Burmese 1 American 1 Portuguese

* To 23 November.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the policy of the Government with regard to the pension rights of members of the overseas Civil Service now serving, or who have served, in Hong Kong;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government will undertake to provide for the pension rights of members of the overseas Civil Service serving, or who have served, in Hong Kong, on terms not less favourable than those negotiated with successive Governments elsewhere in the Commonwealth;

(3) what arrangements have been made with the Government of the Chinese Republic to safeguard the pension rights of those members of Her Majesty's overseas Civil Service who have served, or are still serving, in Hong Kong.

Mr. Luce: Section IV of annex I to the joint declaration initialled by the British and Chinese sides on 26 September states that the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR) Government shall pay to public servants in Hong Kong

"who retire or complete their contracts, as well as to those who have retired before 1 July 1997, or to their dependents, all pensions, gratuities, allowances and benefits due to them on terms no less favourable than before, and irrespective of their nationality or place of residence."

We are confident that the arrangments set out in the draft agreement provide full security for the payment of pensions of both serving and retired civil servants, including members of Her Majesty' Overseas Civil Service (HMOCS), and their dependants. It is not possible to define at this stage the exact arrangements which will be made for the payment of pensions by the SAR Government after 1997 to former HMOCS officers.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the total number of those persons in Hong Kong entitled under the United Kingdom memorandum attached to the draft agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the Chinese Government to retain an appropriate status after 1 July 1997; and how many of these are Hong Kong Chinese compatriots as defined in the Chinese memorandum attached to the draft agreement.

Mr. Luce: Approximately three million persons who are now British Dependent Territories citizens by virtue of a connection with Hong Kong (Hong Kong BDTCs) will be eligible to retain with effect from 1 July 1997 the appropriate status referred to in the United Kingdom memorandum. This number is estimated to rise to around 4·1 million in 1997. Although this is a matter for the Chinese Government, I believe that some 6,000 of those who are currently Hong Kong BDTCs may not be considered to be Chinese compatriots in terms of the Chinese memorandum.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made for the nationality of those British Dependent Territories' citizens in Hong Kong who, after 1 July 1997, will lose their citizenship and who are not eligible to be Chinese nationals.

Mr. Luce: All persons who on 30 June 1997 are British Dependent Territories citizens by virtue of a connection with Hong Kong are eligible to retain the appropriate status referred to in the United Kingdom memorandum, irrespective of whether or not they are eligible to be Chinese nationals.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will describe the circumstances in which he met Mr. Faisal Oweida, described as a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, in Blackpool on 11 October; and whether this represents any change in Government policy towards ministerial contacts of this kind.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Mr. Faisal Oweida was briefly introduced to me at a reception given by the Conservative Middle East Council in Brighton on 11 October. This does not represent any change in Government policy.

Mr. John Sprange

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he will give details of the Berlin legal authorities' consultations with him before deciding to prosecute Mr. John Sprange and another person for flying a hot air balloon into East Berlin;

(2) whether the British Government have helped Mr. Sprange retrieve his hot air balloon from East Berlin;

(3) how long the Berlin authorities took to decide to prosecute Mr. Sprange.

Mr. Renton: A British representative asked the Soviet authorities in Berlin twice last year for the balloon to be returned. There was no response. Further approaches to the Soviet authorities were made on 24 and 31 October 1984, and on 7 November.

The Berlin prosecutor applied to the Allied Kommandatura on 11 November 1983 for permission for the German courts to exercise jurisdiction with respect to the alleged violation of the law. On 30 November 1983 the Legal Committee of the Allied Kommandatura granted permission. The Berlin legal authorities then proceeded with the prosecution.

Tristan da Cunha (Generators)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which firm constructed the wind-powered electricity generator that was blown down on Tristan da Cunha; and who were the consulting engineers.

Mr. Renton: The wind turbine was manufactured by Wind-Matic a/s of Denmark and installed by the Tristan authorities. The consulting engineers were the Cranfield Institute of Technology.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the payment to Tristan Investments Ltd. for its supply and use of electricity generators on Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question of 12 November at column 124, in which I said that responsibility for the provision of electricity on Tristan da Cunha lies with the Island council. Information regarding payments is therefore not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Wirebird

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has for his statement that the wirebird, endemic to St. Helena, is not threatened with extinction.

Mr. Renton: The evidence of expert visitors and long-term residents over recent years is that the wirebird is not a threatened species and that the population is now stable. Wirebirds have been protected by law since 1894. They are believed to have eleven separate breeding localities and have no major predators. The upland pastures the bird inhabits have suffered some encroachment from human habitation but are likely to remain in sufficient quantity.

Libya (Gas Pipeline)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government have given to British companies to secure contracts relating to the construction of a gas pipeline in Libya; and if he will list the companies involved.

Mr. Channon: I have been asked to reply.

I am unaware of any British involvement in the construction of any gas pipeline in Libya at the present time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Visiting Forces Act

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General whether he will provide statistics for the number of United States personnel stationed in the United Kingdom who were granted immunity from prosecution under British law according to the Visiting Forces Act for each year since 1980; and whether he will provide an analysis of these figures according to the type of offence and the service to which the offender belongs.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The Visiting Forces Act 1952 does not grant any general immunity from British legal process. In certain cases the authorities of a visiting force, including those of the United States, are permitted to exercise the primary jurisdiction but information about such cases is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security Review

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects the results of the social security review to be published;

(2) if he will ensure the full publication of the results of the social security review;

(3) if he will ensure that adequate time is made available for public discussion on the conclusion of the social security reviews prior to the introduction of any necessary legislation;

(4) if he will ensure that no steps are taken to implement the recommendations of the social security review until they have been debated in the House.

Mr. Newton: We expect to publish our conclusions and proposals in the early part of next year. This will provide a basis for further public discussion; and the hon. Member will be aware that no proposals requiring legislation could be implemented without Parliament having the opportunity to debate them.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his publication of the finding of the social security review will come in the form of a White or a Green Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The form in which the Government's conclusions and proposals for change are to be published has not yet been decided.

Hypothermia

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of hypothermia are reported each year in the United Kingdom; what is the urban and rural breakdown of these cases; and what is the estimated cost of treating these cases each year in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The estimated number of discharges and deaths from NHS hospitals of patients with the main diagnosis of hypothermia in the United Kingdom in 1982 was 2,570. It is not possible from the information held centrally to provide a breakdown of these cases between urban and rural areas. The cost of treating these patients is estimated to have been about £5 million at current prices.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to rectify the discrepancies arising in the joint administration of unified housing benefit by his Department and local authorities.

Mr. Whitney: An independent review of the housing benefit scheme has been set up with the improvement of the scheme's administration as one of its main objectives. However it has always been recognised that close co-operation and mutual understanding between local authorities and DHSS local offices is essential to the smooth running of the scheme. To encourage this a circular was issued earlier this year stressing the need for close local liaison and clarifying and underlining points that were causing difficulty. A copy of the circular (HB (84)2: Local Authority and Local Office Liaison) is available in the Library.

Health Authorities (Food Hygiene)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate expenditure incurred for training in food hygiene by health authorities in England in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect the information requested centrally.

Hospitals (Food Poisoning)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases, as opposed to outbreaks, of food poisoning in hospital premises in England were reported for each year since 1978.

Mr. John Patten: The number of staff and patients in hospital premises in England and Wales affected by food poisoning and salmonellosis reported to the communicable diseases centre was 1979—776, 1980—457, 1981—313, 1982—789, and 1983—799.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what considerations he bears in mind when deciding whether an individual diagnosed as suffering from an illness has to present himself or herself in person at a local office of his Department for the receipt of benefit.

Mr. Whitney: Payments of benefit are normally sent to claimants by post. If the Department considers that the postal delivery arrangements at a claimant's address are unsafe, he may be asked to collect his benefit from the local office. If he is unable to do this because of the nature of his illness, he can authorise someone else to collect it for him.

Westminster Hospital (Cardiac Surgery Services)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the effect on recruitment of anaesthetists, intensive care and operating theatre nurses and on the quality of training for medical students of the proposal by the Victoria health authority to close the cardiac surgery services in Westminster hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In view of the concern expressed by my hon. Friend and others about the possible effects of the proposal to close the cardiac surgery unit at the Westminster hospital I am writing to the chairman of Victoria health authority informing her that my right hon. Friend will take the final decision following the outcome of local consultation. We will take account of the effects on staff recruitment and medical education in coming to our decision.

Claims

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many administrative staff deal with social security claims; and what are the number of social security claimants and the ratio of staff to claimants for each of the last five years (a) nationally, (b) at the King's Lynn, (c) at the Peterborough and (d) at the Cambridge local offices of his Department, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: I assume the hon. Member to be concerned with the staffing of local social security offices which is described in a guide held in the Library.

The number of staff allocated (a) to all local offices, (b) at the King's Lynn, (c) at the Peterborough and (d) at the Cambridge local offices of the Department at 1 November for each of the last five years is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
All local offices	62,424	63,642	61,871	56,703	57,420
King's Lynn	204	208	207	193	192
Peterborough	249	271	257	234	242
Cambridge	215	221	205	181	199

It would be disproportionately expensive to provide statistics — which for some benefits are kept for the number of claimants and for others of the number of claims made — to match the table. In any case staffing levels are fixed by reference to workloads and the latter will vary in relation to policy changes (e.g., the introduction of housing benefit) and procedural changes (e.g., the introduction of a postal claim form for supplementary benefit for the unemployed.)

Widows (Funeral Costs)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of widows who lose entitlement towards funeral costs because the death of their husband transfers them from supplementary benefit to widows' benefit.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available.

Wills (Investigations)

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will instruct his Department's investigators to stop immediately the practice of checking the wills of elderly deceased people;

(2) what representations he has received from the relatives of elderly deceased people whose wills have been examined by investigators of his Department;

(3) what is the total amount recovered to date from the estates of elderly deceased persons whose wills have been examined by investigators from his Department:

(4) if he will list in the Official Report the local offices of his Department from where investigators have carried out examinations of the wills of elderly deceased people;

(5) on what date instructions were issued by his office to investigators of his Department to examine the wills of elderly deceased people.

Mr. Whitney: Information about an estate including the will itself is available to any member of the public (and often publicised in newspapers) and it would clearly be wrong for the Department to ignore such information where it indicates that supplementary benefit may have been overpaid. Since 1959 such information has been sought by all local offices on a routine basis from the probate authorities when the death of a supplementary benefit recipient comes to the Department's notice. The will itself may be obtained in appropriate cases, but this is not normally necessary. These procedures are referred to in paragraph 15721 of the 'S' manual, a copy of which is in the Library, and they have resulted in a total of £3,573,108 of overpaid Supplementary Benefit being paid back to the Department in 1983-84.

No central record is kept of individual correspondence with executors or relatives of deceased people. The Department's offices are expected to handle all these matters with sympathy and propriety.

We have no plans to change these procedures.

NHS (Ancillary Services)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the fall in the percentage of contracting out of ancillary services in the National Health Service between 1978-79 and 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefits (Computer)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial aid is available from Her Majjesty's Government to British firms working to tender for the contracts to install the national unemployment benefits computer system; and when he will announce the name of the company whose tender has been accepted.

Mr. Whitney: There is no Government aid specifically for work connected with tendering for the contracts to install the national unemployment benefit computer system. General questions of financial aid for British firms are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. We expect to announce the name of the company whose tender for terminals has been accepted toward the end of January 1985. A contract for the main frame computer equipment was awarded to ICL on 20 November.

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage, by value, the national unemployment benefits computer system will be installed in his Department's headquarters at Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Whitney: None of the equipment being purchased for the national unemployment benefit system is to be installed at our Newcastle upon Tyne central office.

Spectacles (Retailers)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will seek powers to prohibit advertising by unqualified retailers of spectacles until such time as qualified and registered opticians are legally entitled to advertise.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to make postal applications the standard method of application for supplementary benefit or pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 30 October at column 962.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his most recent estimate of the number of supplementary benefit payments that are subject to deductions under section 6 of the Social Security (No. 2) Act 1980 (a) in Great Britain and (b) in Scotland.

Mr. Newton: All supplementary benefit payments to strikers are subject to deductions under section 6 of the Social Security (No. 2) Act 1980. Cumulative totals of such payments for 1984 up to 23 October are as follows:

	Number
(a) Great Britain	1,194,258
(b) Scotland	74,045

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what funds he has allocated through the Medical Research Council for research into the causes of and cure for AIDS; whether he has any plans to increase this amount; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

It is for the Medical Research Council (MRC) to decide on its scientific priorities within the resources available to it from its grant-in-aid and its income from other sources. I understand the the MRC is at present providing grants for research into the causes of and cures for AIDS to a total value of £369,000, of which £58,500 has been provided by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. The council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its grant scheme in competition with other applications.

Board and Lodging Payment

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what were the average numbers of weekly payments for board and lodgings in Scotland since 1980 for tiers i, ii and iii;

(2) what were the average numbers of weekly payments for board and lodgings in Scotland for each individual tier for November to March 1983 to 1984 and April to September 1984.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1984, c. 384]: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information, derived from the annual statistical enquiries carried out each November/December, is as follows:

Supplementary benefit claimants in board and lodging accomodation in Scotland.

	Ordinary board and lodging accommodation and hostels	Private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes
1980	5,000	Not available
1981	7,000	Not available
1982	8,000	fewer than 500
1983	9,000	1,000

Notes

1. Separate information is not available in respect of claimants in residential care and nursing homes in Scotland for 1980 and 1981.
2. 1983 figures are provisional.

ENVIRONMENT

Palace of Westminster (Restoration)

58. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the restoration of the Palace of Westminster to be completed.

Sir George Young: Assuming present expenditure levels can be maintained, restoration of the exterior stonework should be complete by around the turn of the decade.

High Grade Oil from Waste (Manchester)

59. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the continuance after 1986 of the programme for deriving high-grade oil from waste materials run by the Greater Manchester county council in the event of the abolition of that council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I cannot yet predict the future after 1986 for this programme which is run by the Greater Manchester council. Further development will depend on financial support and on the voluntary cooperative arrangements proposed for waste disposal by the district councils in the light of their consideration of the Government's consultation document "Streamlining the Cities: Waste Disposal".

Knowsley

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of Knowsley district council's current expenditure 1984-85 will be met by funding from central Government; and how this compares with the last financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: On the basis of Knowsley's 1984-85 budget return, relevant specific grants and block grant account for 54 per cent. of net revenue expenditure (to be met from rates, block grant, relevant specific grants and rate fund balances). The equivalent percentage for 1983-84, based on outturn returns, is 58 per cent.

Local Authorities (Advertising)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to amend the law regarding the power of local authorities to advertise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Any changes to the discretionary powers under which local authorities issue publicity and advertising material require very careful consideration. I hope to put shortly to the House my proposals for a thorough and dispassionate inquiry into certain aspects of conduct of local authority business. The use of advertising powers is a factor which could well be examined in that context.

Unfit Houses

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to amend at an early date the legislation covering compensation for unfit houses acquired compulsorily; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: The rules for compensating owner-occupiers and landlords whose unfit properties are bought compulsorily are being considered as part of the Government's review of private sector home improvement policy. We hope to publish our proposals shortly in a consultation document.

Block Grant

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total block grant paid to local authorities at budget and each supplementary grant stage in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85, showing in each case (a) block grant, (b) holdback and (c) block grant net of holdback.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is as follows:

		Block grant £ million	Holdback £ million	Block grant net of holdback £ million
1981-82 Main Report		8,364	—	8,364
Supplementary reports	1st	8,490	—	8,490

	2nd	8,685	280	8,405
1984-85 Main Report		8,631	—	8,631
Supplementary report		8,631	452	8,179

Note:
The figures in columns 1 and 3 include payments made to bodies specified under section 56(9) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the estimated block grant receipts of each (a) non-metropolitan county, (b) metropolitan district, (c) London borough, (d) metropolitan county and (e) London precepting authority at each supplementary report stage in each year from 1981-82 to 1984-85, showing the percentage change in block grant receipt in each authority between 1981-82, original budget, and 1984-85, original budget.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The information requested is in the following tables. The figures for London boroughs include for 1981-82 grant received in respect of the Greater London council and the Metropolitan police; and for 1982-83 grant received in respect of the Metropolitan police.

Water Rates

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects to be the impact of the proposals for targets for water authorities on the water rates levied in the Yorkshire water authority's area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The increase in charges is expected to be above the general rate of inflation, but I cannot be more precise because agreements on financial targets for individual water authorities have yet to be reached and the actual effect on charges will only become clear when the authority fixes its budget early next year.

Access to the Countryside

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment against what criteria grants are made to bodies concerned with access to the countryside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department's direct grants to bodies concerned with access to the countryside are made under the special grants programme. This programme is intended to assist national and regional voluntary organisations carrying out activities which further the Department's policy objectives. Priority is given to organisations encouraging practical voluntary action. Applications from voluntary organisations concerned with access to the countryside are considered against the same general criteria as other applications.

GLC (Staff)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of Greater London council staff he intends to retain after abolition in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The successor bodies will in general determine how many of the GLC's staff they need after its abolition, but the majority of staff are expected to obtain posts in the new structure. The Government's estimate is that savings of about 3,500 posts, or £50 million annually, after taking account of staff needed outside local government, will result from rationalisation of local government in London following the GLC's proposed abolition.

Organisation for Economic Co-operational Development Group on Urban Affairs

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Organisation for Economic Co-operational Development Group on Urban Affairs following the 1983 Urban Ministers meeting; and if he will give an indication as to the sources of its current funding and the size of the contribution by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following the Ministers meeting in 1983, a programme has been established, by the OECD group on urban affairs, consisting of projects on the urban economic development, urban services, urban housing finance, urban information and monitoring and a review of Japan's urban policies. The programme is funded from block contributions made to OECD by its 25 member countries. Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the administration of the programme in 1984 is approximately £16,000, some 7½ per cent. of the budget.

"A Better Future for the Uplands"

Viscount Cranborne asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has concluded his study of the report of the Countryside Commission "A Better Future for the Uplands"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Countryside Commission's report raised a large number of important issues. These are being carefully considered and the Government hope to be able to make a response in the earlier part of next year.

GLC (Mortgage Account)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to consult individual mortgagors over his proposal to transfer the Greater London council's mortgage account to a successor body in the event of the Greater London council being abolished;

(2) if he will ensure that the distribution to the London boroughs of capital receipts accruing to the Greater London council mortgage account matches the current pattern of the Greater London council's spending of those receipts in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answers of 25 and 31 October to his identical written questions at columns 694 and 1047 respectively.

London Planning Commission

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the proposed London Planning Commission will be required to vet each unitary borough development plan before it is adopted by the responsible borough council; if it will appear at inquiries into such plans; and what monitoring by the commission of borough planning decisions will be necessary to ensure successful implementation of strategic policies.

Mr. Macfarlane: The role of the London Planning Commission will be to assist the Secretary of State in preparing his guidance for local planning authorities in Greater London for the preparation of their unitary development plans, and to advise him on other matters relating to the planning and development of Greater London. It will not therefore have any direct function in relation to the statutory procedures for the preparation and adoption of a unitary development plan by a London borough council.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now announce the terms of reference of his proposed London Planning Commission, the composition of its membership, the time scale for it to prepare its advisory strategic guidance for London once it is established, and the staffing resources it will require to do this.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 25 October at column 697.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, what arrangements will be made for the residuary body to meet the cost of payments due under the Pensions (Increase) Acts.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to clauses 58 and 70 of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, he will take steps to confer on successor bodies the power to pay gratuities to their employees under the provisions of section 18 of the Local Government Superannuation Act 1953.

Sir George Young: The residuary bodies and other successor authorities in local government will have the same gratuity powers as are available to local authorities in general.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the value as a percentage of the total budget of the metropolitan county councils of those services which will pass wholly to the metropolitan district councils in the event that Cmnd. 9063 is implemented.

Mr. Waldegrave: From the available information in 1984-85 budget returns, services other than police, fire and revenue support for passenger transport (services which it is proposed should become the responsibility of district council joint boards) account for 36 per cent. of the metropolitan county councils' net current expenditure.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he now proposes to make, in the event of the Greater London council being abolished, for the provision of scientific services on a metropolitan scale.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 16 November by my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) at columns 378 and 379.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, regulation L 11 of the Local Government Superannuation Regulations 1974-84 will apply to staff whose pay is reduced as a result of the abolition of the council.

Sir George Young: No. Employees in this category will, if they wish, be entitled to claim separate benefits in respect of their two employments. In addition the Bill makes provision for some compensation for detriment suffered by staff moving to new jobs in local government service at lower pay.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, he intends to seek to maintain the Greater London council's equal opportunities policy and training initiatives, including basic skills and second chance schemes.

Sir George Young: These are matters for the successor authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, it is the intention of the Government to apportion the Greater London council superannuation fund in respect of Greater London council staff transferred to the residuary body and the new successor bodies, including the Inner London education authority, the Fire Board and the London Planning Commission.

Sir George Young: The Greater London council's superannuation fund will be transferred to the London residuary body; and non-teaching staff of the new ILEA and non-uniformed staff of the new fire authority will continue to participate in that fund. The London Planning Commission will not employ staff of its own.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, the successor bodies will each be given local authority status; and what arrangements, including what funds, will be made for superannuation payments.

Sir George Young: Most successor bodies will be existing local authorities. The new ILEA and the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority will have the powers of local authorities for most purposes. Superannuation arrangements are set out in clauses 57 and 58 of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff he anticipates will be shed in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: We estimate that there will be a net reduction of some 7,000 posts as a result of abolition of the GLC and MCCs, after taking account of increases outside local government. Roughly half will occur in London; the number of GLC staff left without jobs in the new structure need not be as great as this.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to increase the manpower of his Department to cope with the extra work load foreshadowed in the report for 1983 of the Chief Planning Inspector.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay, (Mr. Proctor) on 14 November at column 287. Changes in demand levels and the deployment of manpower resources within the Department are reviewed regularly in the MINIS system.

Housing (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which body will be responsible for assessing the housing requirements of London as a whole in the event of the Greater London council being abolished.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 25 October to his identical written question at columns 691 and 692.

Loan Debt

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the weighted average interest rate on the loan debt of London boroughs in 1982-83 compared with that of the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is contained in the CIPFA publication "Capital Expenditure and Debt Financing Statistics 1982-83"; a copy of which is in the Library.

Voluntary Housing Organisations (Funding)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any indication from the London Boroughs Association of its policy towards funding the 61 voluntary housing organisations referred to under the proposed arrangements for collective grant-giving in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: Yes. The London Boroughs Association has agreed to invite 61 voluntary organisations now funded by the GLC and engaged in provision for the single homeless to apply for grants under the proposed arrangements for collective funding, in the knowledge that in principle a grant for the service they provide has already been agreed.

Unitary Development Plans

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he made, prior to proposing that each London borough should prepare a unitary development plan in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, of the relative costs in terms of money and staffing of processing such plans in place of the Greater London council's submitted alterations to the Greater London development plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: The proposals for unitary development plans were put forward after assessing the representations to the consultation paper on the "Reallocation of Planning Functions in the Greater London Council (GLC) and Metropolitan County Council (MCC) areas". They represent a simplification of development plans proposals and will avoid any duplication of effort which could arise if there were separate procedures for structure and local plans.

Recycling Centres

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities run recycling centres at civic amenity sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: No central records are kept of which local authorities run recycling centres at civic amenity sites. In England, county authorities have a duty to provide civic amenity sites but this duty is sometimes carried out on their behalf by borough or district councils.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, what proposals he has for ensuring that historic buildings have continuity of support and facilities in the area of information technology and computer aided design facilities and data bases.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 16 November 1984 at column 378-79.

Directly-Elected Strategic Authority (London)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering any proposal for a new directly-elected strategic authority for London.

Sir George Young: No.

Housing

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will advise local authorities that families with young children should not be housed above the fourth floor of high rise blocks of flats.

Sir George Young: The Department's report "Families in Flats" was sent in 1981 to the local authorities known to have multi-storey family dwellings in their stock. It concluded that it is preferable for families with young children to occupy houses or flats below the second storey. My right hon. Friend does not consider that further advice is needed.

Prefabricated Concrete Houses

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the provisions of the Housing Defects Act 1984 to owner-occupiers of post-1960 prefabricated concrete houses purchased from local authorities and built by them; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No. On the evidence available to my right hon. Friend a designation under section 1 of prefabricated concrete houses designed after 1960 would not be justified.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an estimate of the number and types of prefabricated concrete houses built by local authorities in England and Wales after 1960.

Sir George Young: Departmental records indicate that about 33,500 prefabricated concrete houses (i.e. excluding flats and maisonettes) of 40 different types were built by local authorities and new towns in England in the period 1964 to 1979 inclusive, and in Wales in the period 1960 to 1979 inclusive. Information is not available for the years 1961 to 1963 for England, and 1980 to date for England and Wales.

Correspondence

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make a substantive reply to the letter from the Advisory Council on Public Records dated 26 July 1984 addressed to the former Minister for Local Government the Lord Bellwin.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I hope that I shall be able to send a reply of substance before long. In the meantime, I am explaining the present position to the advisory council and shall keep the hon. Member informed.

Environmental Pollution (Report)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's Government intend to respond to the Royal Commission report on environmental pollution, Cmnd. 9149.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's response to the tenth report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution will be published next month.

Maltby Common

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will place copies in the Library of the title deeds to Maltby Common as supplied to him and the counsel's opinion referred to in his answer on 22 November, Official Report, column 281;

(2) from whom he received the title deeds concerning Maltby Common, which satisfied him in 1982 on the ownership question; and who these revealed to be the alleged owner of the common.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many authorities have applied for redeterminations of the expenditure levels that he announced for rate-capped authorities in July.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: No authorities have applied for redeterminations. I shall be announcing rate limits very shortly, and therefore time is fast running out. If authorities do not apply I can only assume that they are content with the levels determined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the implementation of the European Economic Community's dairy quotas in the other member states.

Mr. MacGregor: We have pressed from the first for full details of implementation of dairy quotas in all Member States to be made available. As a result of our request in July, the Agriculture Commissioner made a report in September on the general legislative and administrative progress made in other member states. A list of the main legal instruments adopted was given in reply to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) of 31 October 1984. Details of the progress made in cutting back milk production were given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 19 November 1984 at column 76.

We continued to insist on the importance of dairy quotas being implemented fairly and equally throughout the Community at the October Agriculture Council, and at the Agriculture Council on 12-13 November asked the Commission to take immediate steps if the arrangements for charging levy in November were not being properly applied in particular member states. In discussion it became clear that the French Government was not ready to collect levy in November.

The Commission decided as an interim measure to delay by 10 days the dates for the collection of the first payments under the supplementary levy arrangements. After further consideration the Commission is now adopting a measure which will require the levy for the first six months to be collected within 75 days after 30 September. The Commission have also said that they will immediately open infringement proceedings against any Member State not applying the system or not applying it properly. We shall continue to insist that these arrangements are respected.

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for alterations in the milk quota regulations.

Mr. MacGregor: As we have already indicated, we intend to provide for reallocation of quota purchased under the outgoers scheme to help small producers with under 200,000 litres of quota. This will require an addition to the regulations. We feel that the present regulations are too inflexible in relation to transferability of quotas and we shall be pressing in Brussels for changes giving more flexibility. We shall be consulting closely with the United Kingdom industry about the precise form of the quota transfer system we shall be seeking.

We have also been well aware that the inability to have full flexibility between wholesale and direct sales quotas poses many practical problems. However, in all our contacts with the Commission they have argued that the two quotas are not interchangeable. At recent Council meetings we have stressed once again the need for flexibility and the Agriculture Commissioner has agreed to consider what amendments might be put forward without undermining the system as agreed at the last price fixing.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the estimated cutback in milk production to date in the England and Wales board areas since milk quotas were implemented.

Mr. MacGregor: In the period April-September 1984 deliveries to the Milk Marketing Board in England and Wales were down 9·4 per cent. on the same period of last year.

Potatoes

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the raw equivalent of processed potatoes so far imported in 1984; and what percentage of total consumption this represents.

Mr. MacGregor: During the period from 1 January to 30 September 1984 (the latest period for which figures are available) imports of processed potatoes into the United Kingdom amounted to 283,000 tonnes (raw equivalent) which represents around 7 per cent. of the total potato consumption in that period.

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he will make to control the quality and quantity of imported first early potatoes;

(2) what proposals he will make, in the light of paragraph 57 of the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the proposed amendments to the Potato Marketing Scheme 1955, to subject imported potatoes to the same grading and quality controls as domestic potatoes.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1979 the European Court of Justice ruled illegal any quantitative restrictions on imports of potatoes into the United Kingdom from other member states. The Government, however, hold regular consultations with the major exporting countries to facilitate matching volume, quality and timing of their supplies to the varying needs of our market.

The Government are continuing to examine with the Potato Marketing Board and the farmers' unions the question of grading and quality standards for imported potatoes.

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the criteria for the making of grants, in excess of the basic area 1985, under the special arrangements for first early potatoes.

Mr. MacGregor: This is a matter for the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals are contained in the proposed amendments to the Potato Marketing Scheme 1955 (as amended) to increase the home market share of processed potatoes.

Mr. MacGregor: The board's amendments are designed generally to improve the operation of the scheme to the benefit of the whole of the potato industry in Great Britain.

Moreover, the Government have encouraged the board and the potato processors to examine together the opportunities for joint cooperation to promote the uptake of home-grown potatoes by the processing sector.

Eggs

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider amending the egg marketing regulations to remove from wholesalers the option of downgrading but still marketing unsatisfactory eggs.

Mr. MacGregor: No. Downgraded consignments of eggs may only re-enter the shell egg market if they have been re-graded and re-classified, under supervision, into grade A. In fact, downgraded eggs are usually sent for manufacture into egg products for human or industrial use.

Grain Trade

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of feed wheat and feed barley have been delivered to intervention; and what tonnages are contracted forward.

Mr. MacGregor: 1·18 million tonnes of feed wheat and 0·63 million tonnes of barley were delivered into intervention stores in the period 1 August to 16 November 1984. A further 0·81 million tonnes of feed wheat and 0·09 million tonnes of barley were under offer to the Intervention Board on 16 November.

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has received requests from the grain trade for export credit guarantees; and what his response has been;

(2) what requests he has received from the grain trade for financial assistance in the export of wheat and barley;

(3) whether he is satisfied that United Kingdom sellers of grain for export to third countries are not at a competitive disadvantage in their access to credit facilities, compared with their European counterparts.

Mr. MacGregor: We have received a number of representations from trade and farming organisations on this issue. We are considering what changes in existing export credit provision for cereals, if any, might be desirable or feasible, in consultation with the other Government Departments concerned and with the interested trade organisations.

Grain Disposal

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to assist in the disposal of grain delivered to intervention stores.

Mr. MacGregor: Some minor improvements have already been made this season, in response to requests from traders, in the arrangements for the release of grain from intervention onto the home market, and we will continue to press for a relaxation of the Community rules concerning such release. The release of intervention stocks for export is a matter for the European Commission.

Food Products (Fat Content)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the bodies which are being consulted by his Department on the subject of proposed regulations concerning the fat content of food products.

Mrs. Fenner: We have made no proposals for regulations concerning the fat content of food products. My Department and the Department of Health and Social Security are however holding informal discussions with representatives of the food industry about the practicalities of fat content labelling of food. We are also holding similar discussions with representatives of consumer organisations and enforcement authorities. Any proposals for regulations which may be made as a result of these discussions will be issued for full formal consultation in the usual way.

Bread and Flour Regulations 1984

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the bodies which were consulted by his Department prior to the drafting of the Bread and Flour Regulations 1984.

Mrs. Fenner: I have placed a copy of the list of bodies and other interests consulted by my Department prior to the making of the Bread and Flour Regulations 1984 in the Library of the House.

EC (Food Surpluses)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total costs incurred by his Department in the storage of European Economic Community food surpluses in England in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jopling: Expenditure by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce on the storage and handling of intervention products in the United Kingdom during the 1983-84 financial year totalled £48·6 million. Separate figures for individual countries are not available.

Pesticide Residues

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in the negotiations in Brussels on proposals by the Economic Community Commission for maximum pesticide residue limits in certain foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement on their bearing on powers he intends to propose in the Food and Environment Protection Bill [Lords.]

Mrs. Fenner: There are Commission proposals for Council directives fixing maximum residue limits for pesticide residues in cereals for human consumption, foodstuffs of animal origin and animal feedingstuffs. Earlier this year the Council of Ministers approved a timetable of work which included adoption of these directives by 1 January 1985 but this now seems less realistic. Powers to implement these proposed directives have been included in the Food and Environment Protection Bill. Before we introduce regulations under these powers there will be wide-ranging consultation with interested parties.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticides have been considered and approved for safe use under the pesticides safety precaution scheme, during the life of the scheme, by his Department; and if he will list those pesticides approved; and if he will list those pesticides rejected, giving the reason in each case.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that the information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, I can advise the hon. Member that currently there are approximately 4,400 pesticide products cleared for safe use in the United Kingdom: I will send him a list. Statistics relating to formal rejections under the pesticides safety precautions scheme (PSPS) would not give a clear picture of the operation of the scheme, because manufacturers frequently withdraw applications when they conclude that the difficulty of satisfying the safety requirements of PSPS makes further progress unlikely.

Soil Survey

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he proposes to take to ensure the continued availability of comprehensive information on the properties and distribution of the nation's soils and their suitability for particular purposes;

(2) why he proposes to reduce the funds available to the soil survey of England and Wales.

Mrs. Fenner: We are considering the funding of the work of the Soil Survey of England and Wales following my Ministry's recent review of commissioned research and development in soil science. My Ministry reviews regularly the needs and priorities for all the research and development work it commissions to ensure that the funds available are spent to the best advantage. The survey is part of the Agricultural and Food Research Council. We shall be considering the views of the council and we have also consulted the new Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food about the future of the Survey. We shall not be taking a final decision until we have considered these views.

Food Labelling

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce proposals to improve food labelling; if he will issue a consultation document and provide a period for health professionals and educationalists and representatives of similar organisations to comment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: We are currently considering the recommendations contained in the report by a panel of the Government's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) on diet and cardiovascular disease and we hope to be able to make an announcement within the next three months. If our conclusion, and that of our colleagues, should be that regulations under the Food Act are required, including further regulations on food labelling, we will follow the normal full consultation procedures required by section 118 of that Act.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney-General if he will give a breakdown by region of the total amounts paid out in legal aid in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to those parts of the legal aid scheme administered by The Law Society through its legal aid area offices. Payment of legal aid bills by The Law Society is administered centrally and a breakdown of the figures by area offices could not be provided without disproportionate cost. The total gross payments made to solicitors and counsel by The Law Society in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

£ million

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Civil legal aid	71·3	105·1	115·1
Criminal legal aid (magistrates' courts)	48·1	56·1	62·2
Legal advice and assistance	32·8	40·3	47·3

The net cost of the schemes, taking into account receipts by way of contributions, damages etc. was:

£ million

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Civil legal aid	42·7	68·0	70·8
Criminal legal aid (magistrates' courts)	46·8	54·9	60·8
Legal advice and assistance	31·7	38·8	45·5

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney-General if he will give a breakdown by region of the total number of complaints about delays in the processing of legal aid applications in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: This information is not collected.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney-General how many staff are employed in each of the No. 8 and No. 9 regional offices processing applications for legal aid; and what was the total salary bill for such staff in the last year for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the No. 8 (northern) and No. 9 (north eastern) legal aid area offices of the Law Society. The number of staff at present employed in each of those offices dealing with civil legal aid applications is eight (area 8) and 11 (area 9). The cost of the salaries of those staff in financial year 1984-85 is expected to be approximately £79,000 (area 8) and £102,000 (area 9).

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney-General if he will give a breakdown by regional office of the average length of time taken to process an application for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: This information is readily available only on a national basis. In 1983-84 the average time taken to process an application for civil legal aid was 38 working days.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney-General how many cases of applications for legal aid have been dealt with in the No. 9 and No. 8 regional offices in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to The Law Society's number 8 (northern) and number 9 (north-eastern) legal aid area offices. The figures for applications received in those offices for civil legal aid in the past five years are as follows:

	Area 8	Area 9
1979-80	15,857	24,545
1980-81	11,568	18,061
1981-82	12,386	18,886
1982-83	13,328	20,499
1983-84	15,074	22,619

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Attorney General if he will give a breakdown by region of the total numbers of applications for legal aid funding which were turned down in the last year for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The number of applications for civil legal aid which were refused by each of The Law Society's area offices in 1983-84 is as follows:

Legal Aid Area	Refused on legal grounds	Refused on financial grounds
No. 1 London (South)	923	467
No. 2 South-Eastern	785	211
No. 3 Southern	732	809
No. 4 South-Western	1,932	690
No. 5 South Wales	486	404
No. 6 West Midland	1,158	505
No. 7 North-Western	1,333	728
No. 8 Northern	1,666	253
No. 9 North-Eastern	2,578	378
No. 10 East Midland	1,283	441
No. 11 Eastern	1,105	387
No. 12 Chester and N. Wales	924	265
No. 13 London (East)	869	397
No. 14 London (West)	839	461
No. 15 Merseyside	1,418	462

Lithgow and Others

Mr. Rippon asked the Attorney-General in what respect the Government's pleadings in the case of Lithgow and others now before the European Court of Human Rights vary from those presented to the European Commission of Human Rights.

The Attorney-General: The handling of cases under the European Convention on Human Rights is the responsibility of my right hon. and Learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, but I will answer this question with his agreement. The main difference in the Government's pleadings in its memorial to the European Court of Human Rights from those in its observations to the European Commission of Human Rights is that the Government have accepted the finding in the Commission's Report that there is inherent in Article 1 of the first protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights a right to compensation for the taking of the property of anyone within the jurisdiction of a contracting state where and in so far as the payment of compensation is necessary to preserve the appropriate relationship of proportionality between the interference with the individual's rights and the public interest. In accepting this finding the Government also of course accept the Commission's conclusion that the compensation actually paid in these cases met the requirements of Article 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Security

Mrs. Jill Knight asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to improve the arrangements so as to speed up security checks of honourable Members' parties visiting the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: I have asked the authorities of the House to look into this matter and, if necessary, to ask the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee to consider what new measures should be taken.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines (Log Books)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the security classification of the captain's log on nuclear submarines.

Mr. Stanley: Such documents have an individual security classification in accordance with their contents.

Equipment Procurement

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on procurement of British equipment for the armed forces.

Mr. Butler: I refer my hon. Friend to the Answer which my predecessor, the hon. Member for Chertsey and Walton (Mr. Pattie) gave to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) on 5 December 1983 at c. 28.

Trainer Aircraft

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what offset or counter-trade proposals are being offered by Switzerland and Brazil for the Royal Air Force to purchase a foreign basic trainer aircraft.

Mr. Butler: The tenders for the three foreign-designed aircraft to meet the basic trainer requirement all propose that substantial amounts of the work would be undertaken in the United Kingdom, but no formal proposals have yet been received for further offset.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any Ministers in his Department took part in any aspect of the de-briefing and associated activities of the crew of HMS Conqueror on its return to the United Kingdom after the Falklands war.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a permanent record of the movements of HMS Conqueror is made by the ship's internal navigation system.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any photographic reproduction or copy was made of the signals log of HMS Conqueror before it was destroyed.

Mr. Stanley: Not that we are aware.

Commander-in-Chief Fleet

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions in the last three months he, or other Ministers in his Department, have met the Commander-in-Chief Fleet; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Stanley: In the last 3 months, the Commander-in-Chief Fleet has accompanied my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to a meeting of the nuclear planning group and has participated in a MINIS meeting with him. Commander-in-Chief Fleet has also met my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces at a dinner. Official discussions between Service commanders and Ministers are held on an in confidence basis.

Flag Officer Submarines (War Diary)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Flag Officer Submarines' war diary for the Falklands war has now been seen by any officials in his Department;

(2) when the Flag Officer Submarines' war diary for the Falklands war was compiled.

Mr. Stanley: The "War Diary" for the Falklands conflict of Flag Officer Submarines was compiled from records kept during the Campaign and submitted to the Commander-in-Chief Fleet and the Ministry of Defence in early November 1982. Copies have been available to officials in the Ministry since then.

Signals Logs

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, he will explain the differences between the captain's narrative account and report of proceedings.

Mr. Stanley: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the answer by my right hon. Friend appearing in the Official Report for 22 November at column 226. The Queen's Regulations for the Royal Navy, a copy of which is in the Library, require commanding officers of ships to report their proceedings from time to time. Separate instructions to submarine commanding officers require them to maintain inter alia detailed narrative accounts of operations and exercises, which will be available for subsequent analysis, and from which the report will be compiled.

Soviet Mig 29 Fulcrum

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Air Force currently possesses an aircraft that compares in performance and role to the Soviet Mig 29 Fulcrum.

Mr. Stanley: We assess that the Fulcrum is optimised for the battlefield air superiority role. There is no RAF aircraft with a comparable primary role. The primary air defence task of the Royal Air Force is the protection of the integrity of the United Kingdom air defence region, for which the Tornado F2 is optimised.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Air Force are satisfied that the SNECMA M-88 engine will give the proposed European fighter aircraft the thrust/weight ratio the Royal Air Force require.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 10 July at column 448-49, which made clear that Ministers have agreed in principle on the need for a new advanced fighter engine to be developed and produced for the European fighter aircraft and that current designs would not be suitable.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposed European fighter aircraft that the chiefs of staff have agreed upon will have the required radius of action for operations on the central front.

Mr. Butler: The European staff target, signed on October 11, takes into account the requirement to operate on the central front.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of jobs that the proposed European fighter aircraft is expected to provide to British Aerospace.

Mr. Butler: Entry into the European fighter aircraft programme would result in considerable work for the British aerospace industry, but it is too early to quantify this in terms of jobs.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft the Royal Air Force will require of the proposed European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Butler: It would be premature to quote numbers at this stage.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the 9·5 tonne weight specification agreed to by the chiefs of staff for the proposed European fighter aircraft would enable the aircraft to carry the RB-199 engine and still carry out its specified roles.

Mr. Butler: The mass of the aircraft is the subject of current studies. So far as the engine is concerned, I have explained in my reply to one of the hon. Member's earlier questions today that current designs would not be suitable.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the estimated cost of the proposed European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Butler: It is premature to speculate, I would not expect to have reliable cost estimates until the end of a project definition phase.

Royal Air Force (Fighter Aircraft)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence by what date the Royal Air Force requires a future fighter aircraft for its needs on the central front to be in service.

Mr. Butler: It is envisaged that the European fighter aircraft would replace Royal Air Force Phantoms and Jaguars from the mid-1990s.

Experimental Aircraft Project

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much money his Department has invested in the experimental aircraft project to date.

Mr. Butler: It is a long-standing policy of Her Majesty's Government to treat information relating to procurement contracts as commercially confidential.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the reasons for the withdrawal of Jaguar aircraft from Germany;

(2) which aircraft are currently carrying out the roles previously carried out by the Jaguars in Germany.

Mr. Stanley: The RAF's Jaguar aircraft in Germany are being replaced in the strike/attack role by the more modern and effective Tornado GR1.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what the Royal Air Force intends to do with the Jaguar aircraft that have been withdrawn from Germany.

Mr. Stanley: The intention is that for the most part they will be used to maintain the Jaguar Squadrons that we plan to run on in the UK.

NATO Exercises

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify those exercises in the list contained in his reply of 22 November to the hon. Member for Wrexham which involved Pershing II missiles.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 15 November at c. 348.

Members' Questions

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses in declining to answer questions on the grounds of the disproportionate effort which would be involved.

Mr. Heseltine: I shall answer shortly.

Naval Log Books

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in what circumstances Royal Navy signal log books are destroyed;

(2) in what circumstances signals log books from Royal Navy vessels could not be destroyed;

(3) how many signals log books of Royal Navy vessels which served in the Falklands during the hostilities in 1982 have been destroyed.

Mr. Stanley: [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 335]: In accordance with standing instructions, signals logs containing copies of signals received and sent are maintained. There is no requirement to retain these logs permanently, nor will there normally be any occasion to remove them from the ships or submarines concerned. Under standing instructions, they are kept for a period of three months and then destroyed. Some messages may be retained but that is a matter for the officers of the ship or submarine. It is therefore unlikely that any complete signals logs from the period of the Falklands conflict have been retained.

Collaborative Arms Projects

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all the collaborative arms projects in which Britain is involved with her European NATO allies, with the dates of commencement and completion, and the names of the companies which are parties to the contracts.

Mr. Butler: The major collaborative equipment projects in which the United Kingdom is involved with her European NATO allies and for which current contracts or arrangements exist are as follows:

Equipment	Commencement of United Kingdom Involvement†		Main Companies (a) United Kingdom (b) European

Commander Wreford-Brown

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the postings of Commander Wreford-Brown, Commander of HMS Conqueror in May 1982 from that date until the present; how much time he has been on sick leave during that period; and whether he has had to have any specialist medical treatment.

Mr. Stanley: Since commanding HMS Conqueror, Commander Wreford-Brown has served on the staff of Flag Officer, Plymouth, has commanded HMS Valiant and is currently serving on the staff of Flag Officer, Submarines. Between appointments he has taken normal leave. Though we do not comment publicly on the health of individual service men, it would be quite wrong to draw any inferences from this as to the health of this particular officer.

Type 22 Frigates

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence how long has now elapsed since he first received the tenders for the two type 22 frigates to determine which warship builders should receive the orders; when he expects to award the contracts; and what factors have caused the delay.

Mr. Lee: Tenders for the two ships were originally invited in July 1983 and were received in October of that year. As I announced on 24 July, the tenders lapsed before a decision could be reached. The Government therefore decided to seek new tenders for these vessels. These have now been received and are being considered. As I said on 24 July, at columns 814-15, we hope to place orders before the end of the year.

BAOR Families (Health Care)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the numbers of members of families of British forces personnel in Germany who were given medical treatment in each of the last five years as (a) inpatients and (b) outpatients.

Mr. Lee: The numbers, in thousands, of service dependants treated in British service hospitals in Germany for the years 1979 to 1983 incusive are as follows:

	Inpatients (new cases)	Outpatients (new cases)
1979	18·1	27·8
1980	19·1	26·2
1981	18·9	26·3
1982	18·4	29·3
1983	17·9	29·8

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total expenditure on health care provision for the families of British forces personnel in Germany in each of the last seven years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Outturn figures of medical expenditure are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate effort. Estimated provision in 1983-84 for armed forces medical services in Germany amounted to some £39·2 million. Provision for 1984-85, also at 1983-84 prices, is about £39·8 million. These figures cover all medical services for both service personnel and their dependants. It is not possible to provide separate expenditure on health care provision for dependants only.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many doctors have served the families of British forces personnel in West Germany in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of Ministry of Defence employed medical officers serving in Germany at 31 March for the years 1982 to 1984 were as follows:

	Number
1982	245
1983	242
1984	240

Figures for earlier years are not readily available. Most medical officers treat both service personnel and dependants.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total number of deaths of members of the families of British forces personnel in West Germany in each of the last five years; and if he will give a comparison of the rates per thousand population of such deaths with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The number of deaths of members of the families of British forces personnel in West Germany in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1979	106
1980	101
1981	103
1982	93
1983	89

Information is not readily available on comparative family mortality rates.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the number of home visits made by British medical staff to the homes of the families of British forces personnel in Germany in recent years.

Mr. Lee: The number of such visits is not recorded centrally.

The value of home visits is well recognised and service dependants are eligible to receive such visits. The responsibility for deciding for or against a visit lies with the medical officer, who must balance the advantages of a visit against such factors as: the loss of time to treat other patients; his availability to cover emergencies; the better facilities at the medical centre for further examination and treatment; and transport facilities for patients to the medical centre for those patients unable to attend by their own means.

General Belgrano

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the captain of HMS Conqueror asked at any time for a change in the rules of engagement to enable him to sink the General Belgrano.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions an order was transmitted to the captain of HMS Conqueror to sink the Argentine cruiser General Belgrano.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the information contained in the message forms of HMS Conqueror has been retained.

Mr. Stanley: As my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told the hon. Member on 22 November, all operational messages of importance are recorded in Flag Officer, Submarines' war diary.

Wakefield (Rainfall)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the figures for rainfall recorded by the Meteorological Office at Wakefield sewerage works on 1, 2, 3, and 4 November 1983 and 1, 2, 3 and 4 November 1984, respectively;

(2) if his Meteorological Office is able to state what degree of rainfall occurred in the Wakefield area on 1, 2, 3, and 4 November 1984.

Mr. Lee: The data for November 1984 are not immediately available. I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. D.E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the second flight of cruise missiles became operational with the 501st Tactical Missile Wing at Greenham common.

Mr. Heseltine: In early October.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many exercises involving transporter erector launchers and launch control centres driving off the base have taken place since the initial operating capacity of cruise missiles at Greenham common.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 November, at column 88.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether units of the 501st Tactical Missile Wing at Royal Air Force Greenham common have passed all their tactical evaluation tests.

Mr. Stanley: The information of the performance of units in tactical evaluation exercises is classified and cannot be released.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied that the basing of cruise missiles at Royal Air Force, Molesworth will not be adversely affected by radio and radar emissions from Royal Air Force Alconbury.

Mr. Stanley: Yes.

Naval Log Books

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the signals log of HMS Conqueror during the Falklands campaign was destroyed; on whose authority; and at what level the decision was taken.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 335]: HMS Conqueror's signals log covering the period of the Falklands campaign was destroyed over the period to February 1983. The destruction is carried out under the authority of the Defence Council.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the routine destruction of signal logs of nuclear submarines was introduced in the Royal Navy; and by whose authority.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 335]: Available records show that the routine destruction of signals logs has been the practice since at least 1963. The destruction is carried out under the authority of the Defence Council.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police (Graded Response Times)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the Metropolitan Police areas where graded response times have been implemented;

(2) if he will publish the detailed graded response times which operate in the police area covering Leyton and Leytonstone.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that an experimental scheme has been introduced in Croydon but that he has not yet prepared guidelines for the introduction of graded response throughout the force area. Graded response does not operate on the basis of fixed response times. Its purpose is to make more effective use of available manpower by grading police response to 999 calls in the light of an assessment of the urgency of each call and the likely result of immediate police action.

Telephone Tapping

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the proposed legislation on telephone tapping will give the police access to the results of telephone metering.

Mr. Brittan: In the light of the relevant findings of the European Court in the Malone case, the Government are considering whether it would be appropriate to include provisions governing the disclosure of metering information in this Session's Bill on the interception of communications. A statement setting out the scope and content of the Bill will be made in due course.

Mr. and Mrs. Saad Ali

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter written to him on 2 August from the hon. Member for Birkenhead about Mr. and Mrs. Saad Ali of 47 [illegible]kside road, Birkenhead.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. and Mrs. Saad Ali have now been interviewed. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as we have received and considered the report of the interview.

Dr. Alan Clift

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the status of the person who authorised his Department's press release of 14 September 1977 which announced Dr. Clift's suspension; and if Dr. Clift was given prior notice of the press release.

Mr. Brittan: The press release was issued following consultations with the then Home Secretary. It does not appear that Dr. Clift was given prior notice of it.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available to an independent arbitrator acceptable to Dr. Clift's solicitor the complete report of the police investigation into Dr. Clift's work, the statements by his Department's staff in the trial of Messrs. Morgan, Brown and Cowley, and the annual staff reports on Dr. Clift for the period 1972 to 1974 so that an independent arbitrator can judge whether or not they are relevant to the issues which were being considered by the departmental retirement board.

Mr. Brittan: No. I am satisfied that Dr. Clift's position was fully and properly considered by the departmental retirement board and the Civil Service Appeal Board.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it took for it to become clear that Dr. Clift's work did not reach an acceptable standard of professional competence; by what process it was made clear; whose view it was that it had become clear; and how much certainty was attached to the view that professional incompetence had become clear.

Mr. Brittan: I would refer the right hon. Member to what my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State said in reply to the Adjournment debate on 15 November, at columns 889-94.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were handled by Dr. Clift during his 24 years as a Home Office forensic scientist; if he will give the total number of cases in which he was involved when a conviction was quashed; in how many and which of the cases where a conviction was quashed Dr. Clift's evidence was found unreliable because (a) of his discrediting and (b) it was challenged by other forensic experts who re-examined or re-evaluated the original forensic evidence; and in how many of these cases re-examination of the original material took place.

Mr. Brittan: It has not proved possible to ascertain the total number of cases handled by Dr. Clift. As I have previously told the right hon. Member, a scrutiny of the records then available had yielded a total of approximately 1,500 instances in which Dr. Clift had examined material. More recently, further laboratory records have been located as a result of which an additional 80 or so instances, which we are examining, have come to light.

We do not have comprehensive information about the number of cases in which Dr. Clift was involved where the conviction was quashed on appeal, though we know of five where the conviction was quashed following a reference to the Court of Appeal or, in Scotland, the High Court of Justiciary, and one case where the conviction was quashed by the Court of Appeal following an appeal by the person convicted. On three cases recently heard by the Court of Appeal, I would refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to a question from him on 15 November, at column 303. In another referred case, heard by the court in 1978, a forensic expert who re-examined some original material gave evidence which was in variance to that of Dr. Clift. On the one Scottish case, I would refer the right hon. Member to what was said by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in and Adjournment debate on 15 November, at columns 890-91; Dr. Clift's contribution was assessed by other forensic scientists; no original samples were re-examined. In the other case, in which leave to appeal was given by the Court of Appeal in 1981, the court quashed the conviction, which was regarded as resting solely on scientific evidence, having regard to the serious criticisms advanced about Dr. Clift's evidence in the Scottish case. Dr. Clift's contribution was assessed by another forensic scientist, but I understand that no evidence was given. No original samples were re-examined.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name his Department's officials who took part in the discussions between 5 and 8 September 1977 which culminated in the decision taken on 8 September to suspend Dr. Clift; and say whether at this stage or on 9 September when Dr. Clift was informed of his suspension he was invited to have representation of any kind.

Mr. Brittan: The officials were the then principal establishment officer, under secretary in charge of personnel management in the establishment department, under secretary in charge of the Police technical services department, controller of the Forensic Science Service, head of establishment division 5, and director and assistant director of the Birmingham forensic science laboratory. In accordance with normal practice Dr. Clift was not invited to have representation at that stage.

Early Retirement Board

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the position of his Department's employees whose future is being considered by his Department's early retirement board; if they have an automatic right to be legally represented; and if they or their legal representatives have the right to cross-examine his Department's witnesses.

Mr. Brittan: Staff appearing before a departmental retirement board are told they may be assisted by a friend, who may be a staff association representative. These are not legal proceedings and legal representation would not normally be considered appropriate.

Post Mortem Tests

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the secretor status of a dead person is determined; how reliable is the test; and in what circumstances there is a risk of contamination invalidating the test.

Mr. Brittan: The secretor status of a dead person can be determined by a form of blood grouping (the Lewis group system) or by the grouping of the saliva on a mouth swab. The reliability of the tests depends on the condition of the samples; tests on badly contaminated samples may not be reliable and should not be used.

Public Houses (Flexible Hours)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the National Union of Licensed Victuallers and representatives from the brewery trade on flexible hours for public houses; if he is proposing to introduce legislation on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I met the National Union of Licensed Victuallers a year ago for a general discussion. Both I and officials have also met representatives of the brewing industry. These discussions have touched on the question of flexible hours in public houses.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to reform the licensing law, but we are keeping the matter under review.

London Sikh Community (March and Rally)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining the nature of the request which the London Sikh community submitted to the Metropolitan police recently on the holding of a march to Hyde park and a meeting in the park; and what decision he has made on these requests.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Members of the Sikh community in London informed the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that it was their intention to hold a religious meeting on 18 November followed by a march through London to commemorate those Sikhs recently killed in India. The plans were for a religious service to take place in Hyde park from 12.30 pm to 2.00 pm; at 2.30 pm those assembled would march to Jubilee gardens via Hyde park corner, Victoria street, Westminster bridge and York road.

The Commissioner was of the opinion that his powers to give directions under section 3(1) of the Public Order Act 1936 would be insufficient to prevent serious public disorder. He therefore sought the Home Secretary's consent to an order under section 3(3) of the Act prohibiting, from 17 November to 24 November, the holding of all public processions within the Metropolitan police district, except those customarily held of a religious, educational, festive or ceremonial character. My right hon. and learned Friend gave his consent to the order on 16 November. In the light of this decision my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment withdrew the permission he had initially granted for the use of Hyde park as a meeting and assembly point.

Police and Fire Services

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend his existing powers over police and fire services to control in addition civilian staff levels.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None, except for the possible use of those discretionary interim joint board controls the Government propose in clause 80 of the Local Government Bill.

Winson Green Prison (Prisoners' Letters)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any letters written by Mr. Raja, Mr. Riaz and Mr. Siddique, who are on remand at Winson Green prison, have been withheld by the governor, deputy governor or prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: No letter from any of the three prisoners named has been stopped under the provisions of standing order 5.

Greenham Common (Policing Costs)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley about the cost of policing the most recent off-base exercise by units of the 501st Tactical Missile Wing at Greenham common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the information about additional costs is not yet available.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley about the cost of policing the off-base exercises by units of the 501st Tactical Missile Wing at Greenham common, since such exercises began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

British Medical Association (Anti-smoking Campaign)

69. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings Ministers in his Department have held with the British Medical Association to discuss its campaign to curb sports sponsorship to promote the sale of cigarettes; which Ministers were involved on each occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The sponsorship of sport by tobacco companies is already restricted by a voluntary agreement between the industry and the Government. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Health and Social Security, have had one recent meeting with the association, during which sponsorship was discussed. I have had no meetings with the association.

Welwyn Hatfield District Council

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations the Welwyn Hatfield district council has had with his officials regarding the extension of the right to buy consequent upon the Housing Act 1984.

Sir George Young: Apart from correspondence about one leasehold property, there have been no consultations between my officials and the council about the extension of the right to buy. I am writing to my hon. Friend about the new provisions as they affect dwellings for the elderly and the disabled.

Mr. Alan Benjamin

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give further details of the curriculum vitae of Mr. Alan Benjamin, whom he has appointed to the London Docklands Development Corporation; whether he has any overlapping financial interests in respect of the functions of the corporation; how many days a week Mr. Benjamin will be engaged on the business of the corporation; and what arrangements are being made for his remuneration.

Sir George Young: As the hon. Member will know from the Department's press notice issued on 12 November, Mr. Benjamin is a director of the CAP Group. He was previously director-general of the Computing Services Association (1975-80) and director of corporate communication for International Computers Ltd. He is a chartered accountant and a Fellow of the British Computer Society.

Mr. Benjamin has no financial interests which overlap with the functions of LDDC. In case such a conflict of interest should occur, the corporation's standing orders require members to declare any direct or indirect financial interest in a matter under consideration at a meeting of the corporation and to refrain from taking part in discussing or voting on the matter.

Mr. Benjamin's appointment, which is for a period of three years, involves a commitment of about half a day a week. The salary based on this commitment, which is not pensionable, is currently £3,615 per annum.

Democratic Unionist Party (Rally)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what terms were imposed in connection with the recent Democratic Unionist party rally in Trafalgar square.

Mr. Macfarlane: Permission was given, not for a Democratic Unionist party rally in Trafalgar Square, but for a public meeting organised by the Apprentice Boys of Derry (Londonderry) Thames and Avon branch Murray Club on 17 November.

The organisers assured my Department that this would be a prayer meeting with hymns, not a political rally. However, in the light of what took place I have instructed my Department to pursue with the organisers what appears to be a breach of their undertaking.

Orwell Estuary

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he anticipates being able to designate the area to the north-west of Felixstowe in the Orwell estuary as an area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that the Nature Conservancy Council hopes to issue notice of its intention to notify the Orwell estuary as a site of special scientific interest within the next few months.

Drainage (Wakefield)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place in the current year between his Department, the Yorkshire water authority, and the Wakefield metropolitan district council regarding drainage, with particular reference to water courses, conduits and sewerage, in the Wakefield metropolitan district.

Mr. Macfarlane: None in the current financial year. Any discussions which Wakefield metropolitan district council may have had with the Yorkshire water authority are entirely a matter between these two authorities.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take in respect of the Greater London council research library in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement on the future of the library.

Sir George Young: No decision has yet been taken on future arrangements for the Greater London research library.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which voluntary organisations are, to his knowledge, opposing abolition of the Greater London council because they have become too dependent on the Greater London council for financial support as indicated in his speech to the annual general meeting of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations on 12 November.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 23 November 1984, c. 312]: In his speech my right hon. Friend was issuing a general warning about the dangers to voluntary organisations of becoming over-dependent on particular sources of public funding—whether central or local government—and the way in which this could compromise their independence.

Local Authorities (Statements of Accounts)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the form of local authority statements of accounts to be prescribed by regulation; and what he expects this form to be.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In the light of comments received in response to their consultation paper issued earlier this year, my right hon. Friend, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, proposes to make regulations which will first apply to local authorities' statements of accounts for the financial year beginning 1 April 1986, and which will specify both the accounts to be included in these statements and particular items to be disclosed. My right hon. Friends propose that the regulations should require statements of accounts which

(i) contain both individual accounts for each main fund and consolidated accounts showing an authority's overall financial position;
(ii) have a standard service based analysis of income and expenditure;
(iii) have a balance sheet prepared on the "deferred charges" basis thereby focusing on an authority's outstanding liabilities rather than on the historic cost of its fixed assets;
(iv) contain notes to the accounts providing additional information; and
(v) are in a form suitable for integration with annual reports.

The details of the regulations will be subject of further consultation, in particular with the local authority associations, the Audit Commission, and with the accountancy profession.

Maltby Common

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place copies in the Library of the title deeds to Maltby common as supplied to him and the counsel's opinion referred to in his answer on 22 November, Official Report, column 281.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 401]: No. The title deeds and the counsel's opinion referred to are not his to place in the Library.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment from whom he received the title deeds concerning Maltby common, which satisfied him in 1982 on the ownership question; and who these revealed to be the alleged owner of the common.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 401]: The deeds were received from Messrs. Allen and Overy, solicitors acting for the Earl of Scarbrough. They satisfied the Department that the Earl of Scarbrough was the owner of Maltby common.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Dr. Alan Clift

Mr. Ashley asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if the Scottish Crown lawyers had a meeting with Dr. Clift in May 1973 to discuss evidential evidence for the forthcoming John Preece trial; and if the blood group of the murdered woman was a subject of discussion at the meeting.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Prior to the trial of John Preece there was a meeting between members of the Crown Office legal staff and Dr. Clift. Dr. Clift was given at that meeting a report prepared in connection with another case to use as a style for the reports he had to produce for the Scottish court proceedings, his earlier statement being in a form appropriate only for English procedure. Discussion was limited to the style of presentation. There was no discussion of the blood group of the murdered woman.

WALES

Hospitals (Food Poisoning)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases, as opposed to outbreaks, of food poisoning in hospital premises in Wales were reported for each year since 1978.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Data on cases of food poisoning and salmonellosis in hospital premises are not available separately for Wales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Addis Ababa about the number of deaths from famine, or disease related to famine, in Ethiopia during the month of November; and what progress has been made in alleviating the situation since the international relief effort began to take effect over recent weeks.

Mr. Raison: I shall discuss these matters with the ambassador during my visit and will write to my hon. Friend after I return.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress of the Ethiopian disaster relief project since the Minister for Overseas Development's speech to the House on 14 November, Official Report, columns 777-80.

Mr. Raison: Since the end of last month about £3·5 million has been spent or committed on the provision and shipment of relief supplies for Ethiopia: Details are as follows:

	Item	Cost £ million	Status
1.	Landrover spare parts, two new engines and 500 tyres for Ethiopian Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC).	0·10	Tyres being shipped December. All other items dispatched by air 16 November.
2.	Ten new landrovers for RRC.	0·09	Shipped 24 November.
3.	Two mobile workshops with full complement of equipment and tools for RRC.	0·05	Air freighted 17 November.
4.	Ten dumper trucks and spares for Assab Port.	0·35	Ordered. Depart mid-January 1985 by sea.
5.	Two grain conveyors and spares for two existing conveyors for Assab Port.	0·05	Conveyors and spares ordered: depart mid-January 1985 by sea.
	2,000 needles for grain bagging machines for Assab Port.		1,500 needles by Air Mail on 25 November, 500 to follow late-December.
6.	Airfreight costs for International Committee of the Red Cross.	0·45	Awaiting ICRC request.
7.	Six landrovers for Embassy (1) and British voluntary agencies, and freight costs.	0·15	Four sent by air early November; Two to go by sea in December.
8.	Drilling rigs for Ethiopian Water Commission (EWWCA), back-up truck and equipment, drilling technician.	0·36	One rig, with truck and equipment, to be shipped mid-January 1985. One awaiting technical advice.
9.	Five 30-tonne trucks for Catholic Fund for Overseas Development.	0·25	Ordered. Depart early December by sea.
10.	Seeds and tools for OXFAM.	0·10	Oxfam authorised to purchase locally.
11.	Airfreighting of various equipment for Disasters Emergency Committee.	0·10	Completed 2 November.
12.	Food monitors, mechanics and other manpower (provisional).	0·20	Recruitment in hand.
13.	Internal transport for British food aid.	0·75	Expenditure will begin when food arrives.
14.	Tents for League of Red Cross societies.	0·09	Supplied 3 November.
15.	Airfreight of blankets, polythene sheets etc. for Red Cross.	0·05	Sent 17 November.
16.	500 tarpaulins for covering grain trucks, 50 kilometres of cable and rope, and tarpaulin repair kits.	0·15	Estimated dispatch date: early January 1985.
17.	Shipment of 3,000 tonnes of grain.	0·21	Estimated for dispatch at end of December.

ENERGY

Onshore Petroleum Licensing

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to introduce new arrangements for onshore petroleum licensing.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Petroleum (Production) (Landward Areas) Regulations 1984 SI No. 1832 were laid before the House on 26 November 1984.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education (Recruitment Initiative)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the new blood recruitment initiative in higher education.

Mr. Brooke: Under the three-year scheme announced by my right hon. Friend in December 1982, a total of 592 posts have been allocated to the universities for the academic years 1983-84 and 1984-85, of which 488 are in the natural sciences. The allocation of posts for 1985-86 will be announced by the University Grants Committee in due course. My right hon. Friend is considering the advice of the UGC that some kind of new blood scheme will continue to be necessary after 1985-86.

Open University

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the future financing of the Open University; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend and I have received 1,455 letters, and one petition signed by 600 people. Most of the representations which have been passed to us by right hon. and hon. Members have been from Open University staff and present and past students. A small number of letters have also been received from noble lords, the Northern Ireland Assembly, professional bodies, local trades councils, borough and city councils, and interest groups.

School Leavers (Knowsley)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the school leaving rate at 16 years of age among pupils in the borough of Knowsley.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1984, 18·8 per cent. of those pupils in maintained secondary schools in Knowsley who were aged 15 a year earlier were now aged 16. This implies that the school leaving rate by January 1984 of those reaching 16 in the academic year 1982-83 in Knowsley was 81·2 per cent. Some of these school leavers will have continued in full-time education in further education establishments.

School Closures (Lancashire)

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy toward school closures in Lancashire.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend's policies towards school closures are set out in circulars 2/80, 2/81 and 4/82, copies of which I am sending to my hon. Friend. Every proposal that comes to my right hon. Friend for decision, whether for a school in Lancashire or elsewhere, is given careful consideration in the light of these policies and the particular circumstances of the individual case.

Graduates (Science and Engineering)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has made of the number of students expected to graduate at degree level in science and in engineering in each of the next five academic years; and how this compares with Her Majesty's Government's forecasts of anticipated demand.

Mr. Brooke: The figures on projected graduate output are as follows:

(000's)

	*Science	Engineering	Total
1984-85	23·2	12·6	35·8
1985-86	23·6	13·6	37·2
1986-87	24·8	14·3	39·1
1987-88	24·8	14·8	39·6
1988-89	24·4	14·6	39·0
1989-90	24·5	14·6	39·1

* Exludes medical and social science.

There are no detailed figures available for anticipated demands for science and engineering graduates. However, this question was considered with regard to information technology related subjects by the Information Technology Skills Shortages Committee, whose first report concluded that the market could comfortably absorb more graduates from these disciplines. While we are still considering our response to this report, the Government have nevertheless already taken substantial measures to increase the number of science and engineering graduates. The Information Technology in Higher Education Initiative, which my right hon. Friend announced in December 1982, will provide an additional 5,000 higher diploma, undergraduate and postgraduate places in electronics engineering and computer science in the universities and the public sector of higher education by 1985. As a result of the planning exercise conducted recently by the National Advisory Body for local authority higher education, there will be a significant shift in subject balance within local authority higher education (LAHE) in 1984-85 towards scientific, technological and business-related subjects. First-year intakes to full-time and sandwich courses in engineering are planned to increase by 15 per cent. in 1984-85 over 1982-83 and intakes in mathematics and computing, including most LAHE information technology courses, are planned to rise by 49 per cent. Finally, in response to a request from the University Grants Committee, universities have indicated that at their new levels of staffing and funding the admission of over 3,000 additional students, mainly in scientific and technological subjects, might be achieved in both 1984-85 and 1985-86. These changes are reflected in the above figures.

"Corporal Punishment in Schools"

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what responses he has received to the consultation document, "Corporal Punishment in Schools"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Responses were received from over 90 organisations and individuals and were carefully considered in deciding the scope and content of the legislation we shall be introducing to allow parents to exempt their children from corporal punishment in schools.

Graduates (Information Technology)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is (a) the number of students graduating in information technology-related subjects in the current year and (b) the projected demand for graduates in information technology-related subjects for the current year and for the following five years.

Mr. Brooke: In 1984-85 some 3,100 first-degree students are expected to graduate in electronic engineering and some 2,600 in computer science, from universities and public sector institutions in Great Britain.

Detailed demand projections of the kind indicated cannot be made with any precision and future estimates vary widely. The question of future demand for graduates in this field was, however, recently considered by a committee chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher), Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. A copy of its first report is in the Library.

Research Councils (Budgets)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the budgets for the five research councils in the years 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84; and what are the estimated budgets for the current financial year.

Mr. Brooke: The research council's grants-in-aid from the science budget are as follows:

Cash, £ million

Council	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
Agricultural and Food Research Council	37·5	42·1	43·6	46·0	46·5
Medical Research Council	72·7	101·7	107·5	113·7	117·2
Natural Environment Research Council	46·7	54·3	58·0	62·5	65·9
Science and Engineering Research Council	204·0	216·8	234·4	254·5	278·8

(3) Income in respect of commissioned research from Government Departments and other bodies is not included.

School Meals and Milk

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have reduced their service of school meals and milk during each of the last three years; and what information he has as to how many dinner ladies have had to accept reductions in negotiated levels of wages and conditions during the same period.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

Equality of Opportunity

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he proposes to introduce, following his statement at the meeting of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Education Ministers, to promote equality of opportunity in areas within his Departmental responsibility.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government's aim is to raise the standards achieved by all pupils, bearing in mind the evidence (including that in reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate) of existing disparities between the performance of pupils in schools in very similar circumstances. I believe that significant progress will be made through our plans to improve the training of teachers; to seek broad national agreement on the objectives of the curriculum; to introduce changes in the examination system which will reinforce effective teaching in our schools; and to bring in via pilot schemes records of achievement for all school leavers.

Higher Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated effect on the demand for places in higher education of (a) the abolition of the minimum grant and (b) the means-testing of academic fees.

Mr. Brooke: The projections of demand for higher education published in "Report on Education 100" (July 1984) take as their starting point the propensity to enter higher education experienced in 1981 (variant X) and in 1983 (variant Y). This was a product of the then current level of student grant and of other factors affecting demand. The report recognises that changes in the level of student grant and in other factors could affect demand, but it is not possible to project with any confidence the effect of any particular change in this complex of factors.

Education Standards

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what study has been, or will be, made by his Department of the implications for the demand for A-level, further education and higher education places of his statement to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Education Ministers in Paris regarding the objective of seeing 80 to 90 per cent. of all pupils reaching or surpassing at age 16 the standards now associated with the average.

Sir Keith Joseph: The projections set out in DES "Report on Education 100" take account of trends towards an increased proportion of young people obtaining the qualifications for entry to higher education. The Department will monitor closely the demand for post-16 education, including changes associated with the Government's policies to improve the standards achieved by pupils of compulsory school age.

Primary School, Saltley

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when he expects to take a decision on the proposal to open a new primary school at Leigh road, Saltley;

(2) when his Department received a proposal from the City of Birmingham council for a new primary school at Leigh road, Saltley.

Mr. Dunn: The authority published these proposals on 10 August 1983 and submitted them to my right hon. Friend on the same date; subsequently it requested my right hon. Friend on 24 November 1983, if he were minded to approve the proposals, to modify their date of implementation from September 1984 to September 1985. My right hon. Friend realises that all concerned are now anxious for an early decision. He will announce that decision as soon as he has completed his consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers (Special Schools)

68. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans for increasing provision for the availability and use of computers in special schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I am at present reviewing all expenditure on support programmes of this kind and will make a statement when it is completed. However, the hon. Member may like to know that my Department financed the production of a pack of 25 computer programmes for use by teachers of children with moderate learning difficulties. This pack, known as "Microspecial", is being made available at no cost to a number of special schools throughout the United Kingdom and will also be available for purchase.

Cocom Agreement

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the average length of time taken to grant an export licence to a British company under the consultative committee agreement when the consent or agreement of other consultative committee agreement partners is necessary;

(2) what criteria are used to determine whether licences under the COCOM Agreement can be granted at the discretion of Her Majesty's Government; and whether consultation and agreement with other countries is necessary;

(3) if he will describe the procedures followed by his Department in considering applications by British companies for licences for export of equipment covered by the COCOM Agreement including (a) where the grant of the licence is within the discretion of Her Majesty's Government and (b) where consultation and agreement with others is required; and if he will indicate whether he has any proposals for the modification of these procedures.

Mr. Channon: The scope of COCOM's controls on exports of equipment and technology, including whether licences may be issued at national discretion, is established by unanimous agreement of the member Governments in accordance with agreed strategic criteria. In considering applications for export licences, my Department, having determined that a licence is indeed required, seeks the views of other Government Departments with an interest, whether or not the issue of that licence also requires the approval of our COCOM partners. Information on the average length of time to grant licences when such prior approval is necessary is not readily available. I have no proposals for the modification of these procedures, but they are kept under regular review.

Mauritius

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to improve the volume of trade between Mauritius and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I see considerable scope for a modest increase in trade between the United Kingdom and Mauritius. For this reason, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who visited Mauritius in October 1983, signed a memorandum of understanding with the Government of Mauritius for a £12·25 million aid and credit package. Under this agreement projects mutually acceptable to both Governments will have access to funding from the package. A number of such projects have already been identified and disbursements are expected to start shortly.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the trading figures between the United Kingdom and Mauritius in each year since the independence of Mauritius and up to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Channon: The information is as follows:

Value £ million

	United Kingdom imports (cif)	United Kingdom exports (fob)		United Kingdom imports (cif)	United Kingdom exports (fob)
1969	21·6	4·8	1977	96·7	34·6
1970	22·3	5·9	1978	123·2	31·6
1971	17·3	8·4	1979	115·7	30·5

* January to September.

Sources: "Annual Statements of Overseas Trade" of the United Kingdom (1969-75) and Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom (1976 onwards).

Note: Figures for 1970 and subsequent years are in accordance with revision 2 of the Standard International Trade Classification and are on the statistical basis currently in use. Figures for 1969 are in accordance with the original version of the classification, but in the case of United Kingdom trade with Mauritius the difference between the two methods of calculation is negligible.

Price Commission

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to re-establish a price commission combining the roles of the Monopolies Commission and the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Fletcher: No.

Discriminatory Discounts

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Binder Hamlyn price and area survey being conducted for the Office of Fair Trading into discriminatory discounts is due to be published.

Mr. Fletcher: This survey forms part of the Director General of Fair Trading's fact-finding exercise aimed at updating some of the statistical information in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on discounts to retailers. The results of the exercise are unlikely to be available for publication until well into next year.

Microprocessor Application Programme and Innovation Schemes

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to withdraw support for the microprocessor application programme or the support for innovation schemes.

Mr. Pattie: I announced on 12 November that, pending the completion of a review of the Department's support for industrial research and development, the Department would not accept any new applications for certain categories of project support. Among these are research and development projects from single firms on standard "support for innovation" terms—this would cover projects under the microelectronics application project (MAP).

I cannot anticipate the outcome of the review.

Airwaves (Abuse)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money is spent each year combating the abuse of the airwaves; and whether the abuse is increasing.

Mr. Butcher: In 1983-84 my Department spent around £1·3 million on combating illicit use of radio. It is not clear whether abuse of the airwaves is increasing. Complaints of radio interference fell from a peak of 73,300 in 1982 to 55,800 in 1983 and are likely to show a further decline this year. On the other hand, complaints about pirate broadcasting have increased and correspondence about abuse of citizens' band continues at a serious level.

Computers in Schools

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department has spent in each of the last three years on computers in schools.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Education and Science has no responsibility for the purchase of equipment by individual schools as such—spending is primarily a matter for individual local authorities. The DES has been able, however, through the microelectronics education programme, to provide software development and teacher training support for the introduction of microcomputers.

The Department of Trade and Industry, however, has run three schemes during the period in question under which schools have been able to apply for a 50 per cent. grant towards the purchase of a set of computer equipment.

The cost of each of these three schemes, the first of which began in 1981, is as follows:

Micros in schools scheme (for secondary schools)

1981-82 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million
1·2	1·8	0·4

Micros in primary schools

1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85* £ million
1·5	5·5	1·4

Micros in schools extension scheme

1983-84 £	1984-85* £
850,000	785,000

* To date.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to improve the acquisition of reliable statistics on small businesses, with particular regard to their average life expectancy and the main problems confronting them.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to impose additional form-filling burdens on small businesses, but I am conscious of the need for reliable statistics and am encouraging greater use of both official and commercially collected data. My Department's work on average life-expectancy was published in British Business on 12 August and 7 October 1983. Copies were placed in the Library. The problems confronting small businesses are continuously monitored.

EC (Regional Development Fund)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the United Kingdom has been allocated from the European regional development fund for areas affected by the decline of the steel, shipbuilding and textile industries; and when the funds will be available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The measures adopted by the Council of Ministers in January 1984 provide a total of £89 million ERDF aid towards eligible steel (£19 million) and shipbuilding (£10 million), as well as first-time aid (£60 million) for textile areas. The United Kingdom Government are contributing a further £12·5 million. The aid package will continue until 31 March 1989, or until exhausted if earlier.

Assistance is available for the conversion of disused buildings into suitable premises for small firms (up to 200 employees) and environmental improvements, as well as aid to small firms through the provision of consultancy and common services; help on technical innovation and information; additional investment; access to risk capital; and the establishment or extension of counselling services and economic promotion agencies. The United Kingdom Government contribution will relate to the aids to small firms. Copies of leaflets setting out the full range of services for small firms will be placed in the Library.

The following are the provisional allocations to eligible areas, which were fixed on 1 February 1984 for the duration of the programmes:

British Telecom

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what total sums will be paid by way of commission to City institutions arising from the flotation of British Telecom shares.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 352.]: The costs of the British Telecom flotation can be broadly divided into two categories: those that can be estimated now, and those that depend upon the take up of the offer.

Costs that can be estimated now include:

	£ million
Underwriting the United Kingdom portion	14·6
Underwriting the overseas portion	7·8
Commissions to United Kingdom priority applicants for "Placing Shares" (see part IV, section 13 of the prospectus)	30·9
Commissions to United Kingdom priority applicants for commitment shares (see part IV, section 13 of the prospectus)	21·1
Commissions to brokers for priority applications	4·7
Foreign commissions	20·8-22·5
Fees for advice from merchant bankers, brokers, solicitors, accountants and so on	7·0
Pre-prospectus advertising	7·6
Prospectus advertising	3·0
Other marketing costs, including printing prospectuses	6·9
Miscellaneous, including other foreign costs	2·5
Total of costs that can be estimated now	126·9-128·6

Other costs, which depend upon the level of applications, the numbers of shares allotted and the continuing pattern of share ownership include:

(i) the cost of supplying to British Telecom employees free shares to the value of £70·20 and matching shares up to a maximum of £200·20, together with a 10 per cent. discount on applications up to £2,080 and the administration of this scheme;

(ii) the cost of supplying telephone rental vouchers (worth £18 each) and bonus shares to those shareholders who are and remain eligible for these incentives, together with the costs of administering these schemes;

(iii) certain charges made by the receiving bankers and registrars for handling applications and subsequent administration; and

(iv) the commissions to intermediaries set out in part IV, section 14(d) of the prospectus.

Most of the above costs include VAT at 15 per cent.

PRIME MINISTER

USA (President)

Q36. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the President of the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: I hope to have an early opportunity to meet President Reagan again.

Law of the Sea Convention

Q70. Mr. Douglas asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the co-ordination of policy between the Foreign Office and the Department of Transport in relation to the United Kingdom's attitude to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

The Prime Minister: There is close consultation between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of Transport, including consultation on our policy towards the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Handsworth, Birmingham

Q102. Ms. Clare Short asked the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit the Handsworth area of Birmingham.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Government Policies

Q115. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government take to ensure that their policies benefit the United Kingdom as a whole.

The Prime Minister: The particular needs of individual regions and counties within the United Kingdom are taken fully into account in the formulation of the Government's policies.

Engagements

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 November.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 November.

Q11. Mr. Ward asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to visit Gwynedd.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown by ethnic origin of those (a) applying to and (b) accepted on the youth training schemes in Waltham Forest; and if he will break down each figure by sex.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information is not available on the numbers of young people applying for the youth training scheme. In the London borough of Waltham Forest, the number of entrants to the youth training scheme by ethnic origin and sex for the period April 1984 to mid-November 1984 was as follows:

Ethnic Origin	Sex		Total
	Male	Female
Asian	16	7	23
African/West Indian	55	51	106
White/European	206	126	332
Other	10	3	13
Total	287	187	474

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future of mode B schemes within the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current mode B schemes approved and in operation within Leicestershire; which of them are fully subscribed; and how many youth training scheme students are enrolled on each one.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is in the following table:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in order the 60 parliamentary constituencies in England where the rate of unemployment is highest, indicating in each case the percentage of the total work force unemployed; and if he will state the percentage increase in each constituency which has taken place since such constituency analysis first became available.

Mr. Alan Clark: Unemployment rates for parliamentary constituencies are not available. Information on the changes in unemployment by constituencies since June 1983 is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Employmment whether he will list in the Official Report the number of people currently unemployed in north-east Cambridgeshire; what percentage of the working population this represents; and how many have been unemployed (a) for three months or more and (b) for over one year.

Mr. Alan Clark: Unemployment totals for parliamentary constituencies are now available in the House of Commons Library. Unemployment rates are available only for travel-to-work areas and for counties. Information on the duration of claimant unemployed in parliamentary constituencies will become available next year.

Pay Statements

Mr. Prescott asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied that the industrial tribunal system adequately ensures that workers receive pay slips and written statements from their employers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I are satisfied that the relevant provisions of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, including the right to refer complaints to an industrial tribunal, provide adequate protection to employees with regard to written pay statements and statements of the main terms and conditions of employment.

Unemployment Benefit Offices (North West)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit offices in the north west of England are currently operating a system of monthly signing on only; and if he will specify the offices in question.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no unemployment benefit offices in the Department's north-west region currently operating a system of monthly signing. Some did operate monthly for a short period recently, but have now returned to the normal fortnightly system. As usual special signing arrangements will apply over Christmas.

Regional Benefit Investigation Team (Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many weeks the regional benefit investigation teams are spending in Stockport looking at Department of Employment officers and claimants.

Mr. Alan Clark: The north-west regional benefit investigation team is not currently working in Stockport nor does it have any immediate plans to do so.

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms were inspected by the Wages Inspectorate in each of the last five years; and of those firms inspected how many were found to be underpaying at least one of their workers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is given in the following table:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Establishments inspected by visit	34,807	34,657	24,399	23,272	26,332
Establishments inspected by other methods	18,014	15,337	13,494	16,242	16,226
Total	52,821	49,994	37,893	39,514	42,558

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Establishments found to be underpaying one or more workers	10,969	12,154	10,074	9,269	9,842
Workers underpaid as a percentage of those whose pay was checked by all methods	9·5	9·9	12·4	6·2	6·3

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors and other staff have been employed by the Wages Inspectorate in each of the past five years; and what has been the cost to public funds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures requested are given in the following table:

	October each year
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Outdoor inspectors in post	160	155	117½	116	116
Other divisional staff in post	122½	125½	110½	95	96
Cost in the relevant financial year (£ million)	2·71	3·34	2·74	2·77	2·99

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment for each of the past five years (a) how many workers' wages were examined by the Wages Inspectorate, (b) how many workers were paid arrears of wages as a result of examination by the Wages Inspectorate, (c) what was the total arrears in wages paid, and (d) what was the average arrears paid per worker examined.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following table:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Workers whose pay was checked by visit	244,941	269,134	181,974	165,118	139,305
Workers whose pay was checked other than by visit	Not available	26,357	23,830	162,509	193,548
Total	244,941	295,491	205,804	327,627	332,853
Workers paid arrears	22,457	28,373	24,117	18,562	18,494
Arrears paid	£1,511,760	£2,100,512	£2,037,930	£1,861,783	£1,860,110
Average arrears paid per worker checked	£6·17	£7·11	£9·90	£5·68	£5·59

Since 1979, in addition to checks by visit, a number of other successful methods for checking the pay of workers have been developed. A detailed explanation of the inspectorate's methods of checking pay and the results in 1983 is given in pages 451 and 452 of the October 1984 issue of Employment Gazette. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment what measures have been taken to simplify the Wages Inspectorate regulations since the problems of compliance were first pointed out in the Employment Gazette in 1977.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scope for simplifying wages orders is limited by the complexity of the provisions included in them which are matters for the councils themselves. The Department of Employment has over the years encouraged and assisted wages councils to simplify their orders as much as possible. Many councils have taken steps to try to make the meaning of their orders clearer and some have included guidance notes to aid users. More recently, the Wages Inspectorate has prepared brief digests of the main provisions of the orders of the seven largest councils. These cover about 90 per cent. of all wages council workers.

Wages Councils

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff have been employed by his Department's secretariat servicing wages councils in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of staff in post in the office of wages councils, which provides the secretariat for the councils, on 1 October in each of the last five years was as follows:

	Numbers
1980	15
1981	16
1982	14
1983	12
1984	11

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of maintaining the wages councils, including his Department's secretariat, for each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost of maintaining wages councils, including the cost of the Wages Inspectorate, for each of the past five years is set out below.

	£ million
1979-80	4·325
1980-81	4·277

	£ million
1981-82	4·067
1982-83	3·839
1983-84	4·029

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of the backdated awards made by wages councils over the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A list of backdated awards is as follows:

Wages council	Effective date of award	Date of issue of wages orders

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were brought by wages councils over the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers of employers prosecuted for offences under the Wages Councils Act 1979 were 12 in 1979, eight in 1980, 10 in 1981, seven in 1982 and two in 1983.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Appeal Board (Dr. Clift)

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister for the Civil Service who sat on the Civil Service appeal board which considered the procedures followed in Dr. Clift's case; if there were any forensic experts; for how long they sat; if they considered the evidence of the reports of the forensic scientists invited by Dr. Clift to comment on his Department's conclusions on his work; what other forensic experts gave oral or written evidence; and what was their status.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Civil Service Appeal Board is an independent body. Its remit covers appeals from civil servants under notice of dismissal or compulsory early retirement (other than on medical grounds) and those who consider themselves to have been debarred unfairly from undertaking political activities. Its hearings are informal. It takes oral and written evidence from the appellant and the employing department and the sole criterion for decision is "fairness". Its findings are relayed to the appellant and the employing department but are not made public.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total number of individuals who (a) pay income tax, (b) have a taxable income after allowances of £1,000 or less and (c) have a taxable income of more than £1,000 but less than £3,000.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report his Department's contemporary estimates of the numbers of (a) taxpayers at the time of the Budgets of the years 1979 to 1984 inclusive and (b) persons taken out of the income tax system as a result of the changes made in those Budgets.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the contempory estimates of numbers of persons with earnings above the minimum limit for national insurance contributions at the time of the autumn statements in each of the years 1979 to 1984 inclusive; and what were the estimates for the numbers brought below that limit by the changes made in each of those years.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Chief Electoral Officer

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums were allocated to and spent by the chief electoral officer in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years for training his staff; how much of these sums was expended on (a) training full-time employees, (b) training part-time employees, in each electoral office, (c) training prospective presiding officers and their prospective clerks and (d) those who were the prospective officers in charge of a polling station; what percentage of the total this represented in each of these categories; in which electoral offices the sums were expended; and how much was expended in each such office.

Mr. Scott: The information requested concerning electoral offices is not available because training of full-time and part-time staff in these offices is conducted in-service under the supervision of the chief electoral officer or the relevant deputy electoral officer as appropriate.

In the light of experience at the Northern Ireland Assembly elections in 1982, the chief electoral officer requested special additional funds for the training of presiding officers, senior presiding officers and other temporary senior election staff. The then Secretary of State agreed in May 1983 that an appropriate annual sum should be made available. A sum not exceeding £27,000 was allocated for financial year 1983-84 and the same sum for financial year 1984-85.

Allocation of funds between electoral offices is a matter for the chief electoral officer; information in the form required cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. I understand that expenditure for financial year 1983-84 and so far in financial year 1984-85 by electoral offices was as follows:

Electoral Office	Financial Year 1983-84 £	Financial Year 1984-85 £
Ballymoney	2,141·37	nil
Hillsborough	1,450·00	669·68
Newtownards	1,592·86	702
Belfast 'A'	1,702·50	1,983·20
Belfast 'B'	1,652·50	nil
Banbridge	2,427 12	nil
Londonderry	815·13	1,074·70
Dungannon	1,611·69	nil
Omagh	1,102·36	nil
Newtownabbey	1,857·24	nil
Total	16,352·77	4,429·58

Note: The number of electoral offices has been increased during the period in question and some locations have changed. The table above shows the distribution of funds according to the present electoral organisation.

TRANSPORT

Coachbuilding

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the effect on the coachbuilding industry of the new proposed transport legislation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Our proposals are designed to stop the decline in the use of bus services and are therefore likely to be in the long-term interests of those involved in vehicle manufacture.

Motor Cycles and Cars (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport, for the last five years for which figures are available what was the number of 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21-year-olds killed while driving motor bikes and cars, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: Fatalities among car and motorcycle (including moped) drivers are as follows for the last three years. Further years would incur disproportionate costs.

Motor cycle rider fatalities

Age	16	17	18	19	20	21
1981	37	172	148	122	75	61
1982	27	146	143	106	74	60
1983	34	90	83	103	78	63

Car driver fatalities

Age	16*	17	18	19	20	21
1981	6	24	42	64	53	41
1982	1	29	60	65	61	54
1983	0	29	50	52	47	44

* Persons driving illegally

Fatality rates for motorcyclists and car users of various ages are shown in tables E and F of "Road Accidents Great Britain 1980", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the total number of miles driven by 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21-year-olds on motor bikes and in motor cars, respectively.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Estimated miles driven (millions) in 1983: Great Britain

Ages	Motor Cycles	Motor Cars
16	1,600	—
17		600
18		1,150
19		1,650
20		2,050
21		2,550

The figure for motor cycles includes mopeds. It cannot be disaggregated by age-group, because the available data are based on a small sample of motor cycles in 1978-79.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Anti-spray Devices)

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce measures to compel the use of anti-spray devices on heavy goods vehicles for use in wet weather.

Mrs. Chalker: Statutory Instrument 1984 No.: 1543 requiring lorries to be fitted with spray-reducing equipment was laid before Parliament on 10 October this year. The effect is that new lorries and existing heavy trailers must be fitted with the necessary equipment from various dates between 1 May 1985 and 1 October 1987.

A259 (Improvements)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the improvements scheduled or under consideration on the A259 between 1985 and 1989 and between 1990 and 1994.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

Main Programme for start of construction April 1987 onwards
- Rye bypass
- Winchelsea bypass

Regional Programme
- Guestling Thorn diversion
- Icklesham bypass
- Brooklands diversion
- Brenzett Junction

The timing of these schemes will depend on the progress of the statutory procedures and the availability of funds. In addition, studies of options for improvements between New Romney and Hythe and for a western bypass of Hastings are in hand.

London Commuter Services

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of the Government subsidy to British Rail in respect of London commuter services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Grant for the public services obligation is paid to the British Railways Board in respect of the passenger rail network as a whole, and not in respect of individual services. The board's annual report for 1983 records that the London and south-east sector's loss in that year, before payment of PSO grant, was £274·9 million.

Dogs

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Transport, in view of the number of dog-related road accidents, if he will introduce legislation requiring dogs to be kept on leads in or near public highways.

Mrs. Chalker: I do not consider that the problem justifies legislative controls beyond the powers in section 31 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 which enable local authorities to designate roads on which it would be an offence to allow dogs without leads. However, we shall continue to give advice such as that which is already contained in the "Highway Code".

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress there has been on payments to the European Community by member states under the milk quota scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: We have pressed from the first for full details of implementation of dairy quotas in all member states to be made available. As a result of a request in July, the Agriculture Commissioner made a report in September on the general legislative and administrative progress made in other member states. A list of the main legal instruments adopted was given in reply to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) on 31 October 1984. Details of the progress made in cutting back milk production were given in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 19 November 1984, at column 76.

We continued to insist on the importance of dairy quotas being implemented fairly and equally throughout the Community at the October Agriculture Council, and at the Agriculture Council on 12-13 November we asked the Commission to take immediate steps if the arrangements for charging levy in November were not being properly applied in particular member states. In discussion it became clear that the French Government were not ready to collect levy in November.

The Commission decided as an interim measure to delay by 10 days the dates for the collection of the first payments under the supplementary levy arrangements. After further consideration the Commission is now adopting a measure which will require the levy for the first six months to be collected within 75 days after 30

September. The Commission has also said that it will immediately open infringement proceedings against any member state not applying the system or not applying it properly. We shall continue to insist that these arrangements are respected.

Land Drainage

Mr. Harrison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he will publish the inter-departmental review of land drainage which was completed by October 1983 and which has not yet reported;

(2) when he will report on the land drainage review which took place prior to October 1983; and when the consultation document will be issued.

Mrs. Fenner: The consultation paper on the financing and administration of land drainage, flood prevention and coast protection is under urgent consideration. We intend to issue it as soon as it is practicable to do so.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Southern Lebanon

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement with regard to possible British participation in an expanded United Nations force in southern Lebanon; and whether he will specify what type of assistance Britain could provide, at what level and for how long and under what conditions.

Mr. Luce: We have long supported the expansion of UNIFIL to monitor the early and complete withdrawal, on a basis agreed by negotiation, of the Israeli forces in occupation of south Lebanon and to contribute to the restoration of the Lebanon Government's authority there. We would be willing to consider a request from the United Nations for further logistic support of the type we already provide to UNIFIL.

Disarmament

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the graduated and reciprocated initiatives in tension reduction procedure of nuclear disarmament supported by the United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Luce: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish the text of the review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, "Unilateral Disarmament Measures: Report of the Secretary General"; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards this review.

Mr. Luce: Copies of the United Nations study on unilateral nuclear disarmament measures are being placed in the Library.

We believe that this study, which was produced by four neutral and non-aligned representatives and presented to the Secretary-General, lacks balance and depth, and does not advance progress towards nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the United Kingdom delegation to the Geneva conference of the United Nations Committee on Disarmament will present regarding (a) nuclear test ban, (b) cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, (c) prevention of nuclear war, and (d) arrangements to assure non-nuclear weapon states against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Luce: As United Kingdom working papers tabled at the conference on disarmament in 1983 indicated, an effective nuclear test ban is impossible without adequate verification safeguards. We are ready to continue the search for solutions at the conference in 1985. We trust others will join us.

Together with our allies, we shall play our part in the work of any ad hoc committees which the conference may decide to re-establish in 1985 on cessation of the nuclear arms race, prevention of nuclear war and arrangements to ensure non-nuclear weapons states against use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. We will pursue any proposal which makes a practical contribution to progress on arms control.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures his Department is taking to provide United Nations General Assembly resolution 38/73E about an immediate bilateral nuclear arms freeze either independently or through a joint declaration.

Mr. Luce: The United Nations General Assembly resolution to which the hon. Member refers is directed at the United States and the Soviet Union. It requests them to report to the General Assembly on the implementation of a bilateral nuclear arms freeze. The questions of a United Kingdom report does not arise.

We and our allies did not support this resolution. A freeze would perpetuate the present imbalance in favour of the Soviet Union and would remove the incentive for the Russians to negotiate reductions; adequate verification would also be extremely difficult.

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will veto any decision by the Council of Ministers that the European Economic Community as an organisation should sign the Law of the Sea Convention before the deadline on 9 December.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave on 9 November, at column 41-42, to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet). We have as yet taken no final decision on signature of the convention. We remain in touch with other members of the Community on this matter.

Extradition

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries with which the United Kingdom does not have an extradition treaty or any corresponding arrangement under the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967.

Mr. Renton: The countries are as follows:

Afghanistan
Algeria
Andorra
Angola
Bahrain
Benin
Brazil
Brunei
Bulgaria
Burkina
Burma
Burundi
Cambodia
Cameroon
Cape Verde
Central African Republic
Chad
China

Export Promotion (Cost)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of export promotion by his Department in European Economic Community and European Free Trade Association countries.

Mr. Rifkind: There are no separate figures available for the cost of export promotion alone by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the countries of the European Community and the European Free Trade Association. The total cost of commercial work performed by Her Majesty's embassies and subordinate posts in the European Community including export promotion, trade policy and protection and the promotion of inward and outward investment was approximately £11·3 million in the financial year 1983-84. For the rest of western Europe the equivalent figures was £5·4 million.

United Nations

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the United Kingdom's continued membership of the United Nations on the basis of its current activities and financing.

Mr. Renton: We will continue to play a constructive role within the United Nations.

Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of Government policy regarding the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus in the light of the recent United Nations talks.

Mr. Renton: We continue to recognise only one Cypriot state: the Republic of Cyprus under the Government of President Kyprianou.

Guatemala

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conditions the United Kingdom would expect to be met before resuming consular relations with Guatemala.

Mr. Renton: In accordance with article 2 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations it is not normal international practice to impose any preconditions. The establishment of consular relations between states takes place by mutual consent.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the official level talks with the Guatemala authorities referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford on 13 November, Official Report, column 173, will include discussions about aid.

Mr. Renton: The talks referred to will not include discussions about aid.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of his Department's commercial staff deployed in embassies overseas, from the latest available figures.

Mr. Renton: There are 585 UK-based and senior locally engaged staff engaged wholly or mainly on commercial work in overseas posts. When taken with others who spend part of their time on commercial work, this gives a total effort of 571 man years. These staff are supported by about 600, mainly locally recruited, secretarial and clerical staff. In addition, heads of post spend a significant proportion of their time on commercial work.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the proportion of his Department's commercial staff to all staff; and how that proportion has changed over the last 20 years.

Mr. Renton: One third of Diplomatic Service and senior locally engaged manpower (excluding support staff) is committed to commercial work. There are no comparable records for 20 years ago.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any plans to increase the percentage of his Department's commercial staff in embassies overseas.

Mr. Renton: The number of staff engaged in commercial work in overseas posts is kept under constant review and adjusted in light of changes in requirements.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the procedure for training his Deprtment's commercial staff.

Mr. Renton: All officers selected for commercial work undergo an intensive five-week course, to which many private firms and organisations contribute. Each officer then undertakes an individual programme of visits to interested firms. Similar, but shorter, arrangements apply to locally engaged staff. Commercial officers are occasionally brought to London for briefing on specific industries.

Overseas Posts

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what regulations govern the length of appointment in post overseas.

Mr. Renton: The length of appointment in overseas posts is varied according to the circumstances of the post and the grade and function of the officer. Generally, the standard tour length for Diplomatic Service officers of second secretary rank and above is 24 months. There are shorter tour lengths of 18 and 12 months for specified posts. Where the tour length is 24 months, postings normally comprise two tours. At the specified posts officers serve a three-year posting of either two 18-month or three 12-month tours. Postings for other staff may be shorter.

VE Day Celebrations

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the Soviet Union is represented at any celebrations of the 40th anniversary of VE Day.

Mr. Renton: We have no present plans for any official British celebration of this anniversary. The question of Soviet representation does not therefore arise.

Hong Kong

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reports of the assessment office and independent monitoring team submitted as part of the arrangements to test the acceptability in Hong Kong of the draft agreement on the territory's future.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: These reports have now been received. On 29 November a White Paper containing the reports will be laid before the House and published. The report of the assessment office will provide an assessment of opinion in Hong Kong on the draft agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the People's Republic of China and on the arrangements for the future of Hong Kong which it sets out. The report will include factual summaries of all views expressed and an overall assessment of the extent of acceptance by the people of Hong Kong of the draft agreement.

The independent monitors will state in their report whether they are satisfied with the way the assessment office has discharged its duties.

Copies of submissions to the assessment office will be placed in the Library of the House with the consent of the organisations concerned. Two volumes of evidence will be made available at the same time as the publication of the White Paper. A further volume will contain the evidence received by the assessment office towards the end of the consultation period: this is still being translated. It is hoped that this final volume will be placed in the Library of the House before the debate on the draft agreement.

SCOTLAND

Health Authorities (Food Hygiene)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate expenditure incurred for training in food hygiene by health authorities in Scotland in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: This is a matter for individual health boards. Information is not held centrally.

Hospital Kitchens

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much expenditure took place on modernising hospital kitchens in Scotland in each year since 1978; and what is the planned expenditure for 1984 and 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: Expenditure on modernising hospital kitchens is met from health boards' ordinary capital programme allocations and the information sought is not held centrally.

Nursery Education

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the percentage of three and four-year-olds in Tayside region receiving nursery education in the latest two years; and what are the corresponding figures for Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The latest available information is set out in the following table:

Numbers and percentages of three and four year old pupils in education authority nursery schools in Tayside and Scotland for 1982 and 1983*

Authority	Three year-olds				Four year-olds				Three and four year-olds
	1982		1983		1982		1983		1982		1983
	No.	Per cent.	No.	Per cent.	No.	Per cent.	No.	Per cent.	No.	Per cent.	No.	Per cent.

Scotland	11,929	19	11,501	17	22,482	38	24,855	39	34,411	28	36,356	28

* Includes both full-time and part-time pupils.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average annual number of people in employment in Dundee in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Estimates on this basis are not available. But the estimated numbers of employees in employment in Dundee job centre area in June of each of the years 1974 to 1978 were 91,168; 93,304; 89,981; 89,112; and 89,412 respectively; and for September 1981 the estimated number was 81,607. Consistent estimates for the remaining years are not available.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish information on education expenditure by local authorities for 1983-84.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Summary expenditure and income information for education and other local authority services will be published in "Scottish Local Government Financial Statistics 1983-84" as soon as possible after all relevant statistical returns have been received from local authorities.

Mental Patients (Dental Care)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision of dental care he recommends for inmates of long-stay geriatric mental and mentally handicapped hospitals.

Mr. John MacKay: The dental care of such patients is usually undertaken by salaried dental staff employed by Health Boards, though general dental practitioners are sometimes given part-time appointments to carry out this work. It is for health boards to determine the level of dental care that is provided under these arrangements.

Librarianship and Information Studies (Honours Degree)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Education Department will give approval to an honours degree course in librarianship and information studies; and what is the nature of the assessments undertaken by the Department to ascertain the demand among libraries for such a course.

Mr. Allan Stewart: With the approval of the Scottish Education Department, Robert Gordon's Institute of Technology at present offers a degree course in librarianship and information studies, which is validated by the Council for National Academic Awards. Before approval could be given to any proposal by RGIT for an extension of the course to honours level it would be for RGIT to provide adequate evidence of employer demand and thus of enhanced future employment prospects for potential students, together with a clear indication of the additional resources required. The Scottish Education Department would need to be satisfied that the resource implications were acceptable, that the extended course would fit appropriately into the overall pattern of higher education in Scotland and that demand for it was not met elsewere in the system. There is no current proposal before the Department either for extension of the RGIT course or for the introduction of an honours degree course elsewhere.

International Youth Year

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial or other support his Department has given to the Scottish International Youth Year secretariat.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Grants given to the national co-ordinating committee for Scotland since 1 April 1983 amount to £34,794.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for the 1,320 persons charged with offences since the beginning of the mining strike, what offences each has been charged with.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General for Scotland on 31 October 1984 at column 1293-5, which contains all the information readily available.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will now announce the detailed arrangements for the payment of enhanced rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the Highlands and Islands Development Board area.

Mr. John MacKay: The enhanced rates will be introduced with effect from 1 January 1985. My right hon. Friend has decided to grade the enhanced rates on eligible hill cows, but not on sheep, in accordance with the farm-by-farm grading system in the former Scottish winter keep scheme. My right hon. Friend has made an administrative scheme under the powers contained in section 4 of the Congested Districts Act 1897 which, subject to clearance by the European Commission, will result in the payment of the following rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances on eligible hill cows and on specially qualified hill sheep within the Highlands and Islands Development Board area:—

	£ per cow	£ per specially qualified sheep
Class A holdings	47·00	6·80

Those who are within the small part of the Highlands and Islands Development Board area outwith the congested districts will be paid by means of an arrangement with the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

The Scottish islands special grant scheme, which terminates on 31 December 1984, will not be renewed, but farmers and crofters in the islands, where there is generally a high proportion of C grade holdings, will benefit particularly from the enhanced rate which the C grade holdings will attract.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Rayner Scrutinies (Reports)

14. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many reports from the first group of Rayner type scrutinies have been published; and what further action he is planning.

Mr. John Patten: Five reports of Rayner type scrutinies in the NHS have been published and a sixth will be published shortly. A further two are under consideration within the Department and one more is awaited.

The five published scrutinies have all been sent to health authorities, either for consultation or implementation. We will be issuing further advice when we have considered the comments we have called for.

These five scrutinies identify total potential savings of around £57 million a year plus further substantial savings from sale of surplus property. We propose to launch a further round in the new year to build on the excellent work already begun.

School Clothing (Single Payments)

15. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce regulations to allow local offices of his Department to make single payments for items of school clothing to all claimants with dependent children in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to do so. Education authorities in England and Wales have powers and in Scotland a duty to provide help with school clothing where they consider it necessary.

Mental Health Act 1983

16. Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in implementing the Mental Health Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Progress in implementing the Mental Health Act continues to proceed satisfactorily.

45. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during October 1984 a hospital has declined to confirm that it is able to accept a patient pursuant to the provisions of sections 35, 36 or 38 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available.

Blindness Allowance

17. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received proposing the introduction of a blindness allowance.

35. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received (a) from hon. Members and (b) from other persons concerning the need for a blind person's allowance.

60. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the payment of an allowance to all registered blind people to compensate them for the additional costs brought about by their handicap.

Mr. Newton: We have received approximately 170 communications mainly from hon. and right hon. Members, referring to a campaign for a blindness allowance, organised by the National Federation of the Blind, the National League of the Blind and Disabled and the Royal National Institute for the Blind. I also met recently with a delegation from these organisations.

39. Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will bring forward proposals for the introduction of a means-tested blindness allowance to replace the existing range of benefits available to the blind; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 22 October at column 514.

Benefits (Take-up)

18. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services with what estimate of the take-up rate of supplementary benefits his Department is currently working in calculating its expenditure plans on those benefits for the coming year.

Mr. Whitney: Expenditure plans are based on changing trends in the number of beneficiaries and therefore take account implicitly of changes in take-up.

Strikers (Supplementary Benefit)

19. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to reintroduce the payment of £15 per week of supplementary benefit to the families of trade unionists on strike.

Mr. Newton: No.

Newcastle Computer Dispute

20. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps the Government propose to take to end the disruption to social security payments from Newcastle; and if he will make a statement.

40. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current industrial dispute at his Department's computer centre at Newcastle.

Mr. Newton: We have made every effort to end this dispute on the basis of an offer which means that no one need lose take-home pay. I am pleased to say that the striking members of two of the three unions involved have overwhelmingly accepted this offer and have agreed arrangements to return to work tomorrow. The offer has however been rejected by striking members of the Civil and Public Servants Association, despite a recommendation to accept by their national officials. We urge those still taking action to re-examine swiftly their position; meanwhile we are considering what further steps should be taken to restore the service that pensioners and the public are entitled to expect.

Mentally Sick Persons

21. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what inquiries are made before a mentally sick person is returned to live alone in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This will depend entirely on the circumstances of each individual case. Consultant psychiatrists are responsible for discharge decisions and we should expect them to assure themselves that appropriate aftercare arrangements have been made, where necessary. It should be remembered, however, that most patients are not detained and are free to discharge themselves whenever they choose.

Employers' National Insurance Contributions

22. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of abolishing employers' national insurance contributions for all employees earning less than £100 per week.

Mr. Whitney: The Government Actuary calculates that should the national insurance fund lose the income from secondary contributions in respect of all employees earning less than £100 per week, the cost would be around £930 million in 1984-85 terms.

Board and Lodging Allowances

23. Mr. Aitken asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he expects to make in his Department's expenditure on supplementary benefit provision for board and lodgings claimants; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to check that charges made by private residential homes are reasonable.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend hopes to publish proposals for consultation shortly.

25. Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider introducing legislation to require either officers of the Department of Health and Social Security or local authorities to inspect board and lodging and hotel accommodation for the homeless to ensure satisfactory standards as a pre-condition of the Department of Health and Social Security making grants for such board and lodgings.

Mr. Newton: Local authorities already have powers under housing legislation to inspect houses in multiple occupation and enforce standards. They also have a wide range of powers in relation to hotels, under the Public Health Act 1936, the Food and Drugs Act 1955, and the Fire Precautions Act 1971.

It is for the individual supplementary benefit claimant to find his own accommodation. If the only lodgings he is able to find are of a poor standard, he will nonetheless be paid sufficient benefit to enable him to meet a reasonable charge. Where, however, DHSS staff become aware of an establishment which gives cause for concern, they are expected to draw it to the attention of the local authority so that appropriate action can be taken.

National Health Services (Demand)

26. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the likely increase in demand for National Health services in the next five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Demographic change is estimated to increase demand for hospital and community health services by about 1 per cent. a year over the next five years. It is not possible reliably to estimate other increases in demand that continue to arise as a result of medical advances and social changes.

Disabled People

27. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by his Department since 18 November 1983 on publicity to counter discrimination against disabled people amongst the general public; and if he will make a statement.

64. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to introduce any legislation to outlaw discrimination against disabled people.

Mr. Newton: The Government have no plans for general anti-discrimination legislation or publicity, but we have already legislated to promote and protect disabled people's interests in the fields of education, telecommunications and transport, and in relation to parts of the social security system. We have also taken initiatives such as the Fit for Work campaign and the establishment of the English access committee. We will continue to take appropriate steps to promote the integration of disabled people; for example my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will shortly be bringing forward proposals for new building regulations to ensure disabled people's right of access to new public buildings.

Dentists (Treatment Costs)

28. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dentists provided treatment in 1983 at an average cost of more than twice the national average treatment cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as the information is available.

Joint Financing (North-East)

29. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what money is to be made available by his Department for joint financing schemes in the north-east in the next financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Joint finance allocations for 1985-86 will be announced shortly.

Social Security Reviews

30. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current state of his social security reviews.

Mr. Newton: The review teams are assessing the evidence they have received and are aiming to conclude their work by the end of this year. We shall then draw the results together with a view to publishing our conclusions and proposals in the early part of next year.

43. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has finished taking oral and written evidence on the social security reviews.

Mr. Newton: It is assumed that all those intending to submit written evidence to the reviews have now done so. Nineteen public sessions have been held at which oral evidence was heard, and no other such sessions are planned.

38. Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, when he expects to publish his conclusions on the reviews of social security.

Mr. Newton: Conclusions, and proposals for changes arising from the review, are expected to be published in the early part of 1985.

Prescription Charges

31. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider introducing prescription charges set as a proportion of the cost of drugs prescribed, rather than continue the present system of flat-rate charges.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to do so.

Maternity Units (Rural Areas)

32. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the policy of his Department on the maintenance of maternity units in small local hospitals in rural areas; and what evidence is available to him of the wishes of mothers-to-be for the retention of these facilities.

Mr. John Patten: Our general view is that women should be encouraged to have their babies in a hospital offering the range of obstetric, paediatric and supporting services that is necessary to cope with any emergency. Some small consultant and GP maternity units, which do not have all such facilities, may be required in certain rural areas on geographical or social grounds. Responsibility for determining the pattern of maternity services best suited to local needs and circumstances must rest with the district health authority concerned. We would expect the wishes of mothers-to-be to be represented to those authorities by community health councils, the views of which are always carefully considered by my right hon. Friend if he is asked to make any final decision about the closure or change of use of a hospital, including small local hospitals.

Organ Donors

33. Mr. Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there has been an increase in the number of donors coming forward snce the launch of the organ card campaign.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 30 October at column 964.

South-East Thames (Regional Strategy)

34. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received following the publication of the outline regional strategy 1985-1994 by the South-East Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received one letter, about the period allowed for consultation before publication of the strategy.

Youth Training

36. Mr. John Townend asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change the system whereby young people who turn down a youth training scheme place are still eligible for social security benefits.

Mr. Whitney: Under section 20(1)(e) of the Social Security Act 1975 a person who without good cause refuses a reasonable opportunity of receiving training is disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit for up to six weeks. Any supplementary benefit to which the person may be entitled is reduced for the same period, normally by 40 per cent. of the personal scale rate. These sanctions apply to young people who turn down a youth training scheme place. We have no plans to change these provisions.

Solvent Abuse

37. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take further action to prevent solvent abuse.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 26 July, Official Report, at column 770-71 and on 14 November at column 289.

Benefits

41. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the population of England and Wales is relying on state benefits at the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: Estimates derived from the family expenditure survey data indicate that in 1981 at least 24 per cent. of people in England and Wales were in families where social security benefits comprised at least 50 per cent. of total family income; the major factor being that retirement pensions form over half the income of some 80 per cent. of those over retirement age. These estimates are subject to sampling error and do not include people who are living in institutions. The proportions will be underestimated to some extent since the data on which they are based do not take account of the actual income of people who have been sick or unemployed for less than three months at the time of the survey interview; instead the individual's income reflects the normal income when in work.

55. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to protect the real value of social security and other benefits.

Mr. Newton: Most benefits have been increased by more than the rise in prices since this Government came to office. In particular, between the uprating in 1978 and this year's, retirement pension has increased by seven percentage points more than the retail prices index. There is also full provision in the social security programme for an uprating in November 1985 based on the assumed rise in prices in the twelve months to the previous May.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list in the Official Report for the following social security benefits, in each case (a) nationally and (b) in the East Anglian region (i) the take-up rate, (ii) the average weekly amount unclaimed and (iii) the total annual value of the unclaimed benefits for (1) family income supplement, (2) supplementary benefit, (3) one-parent benefit and (4) free school meals, at the latest date for which figures are available and in each of the preceding three years.

Mr. Whitney: Not all the information requested is available. The data on take-up of benefits do not allow for regional break-downs to be made. National estimates on an annual basis are available only for one-parent benefit. Estimates of take-up of means-tested benefits are made from analyses of survey data and these are not made annually. The latest available estimates for Great Britain are given in the table:

	*Year	Take-up rate (per cent.)	Average weekly amount unclaimed £.p	Total annual value of unclaimed benefit £ million
Family income supplement	1981-82	about 50	8·30	57
	1978-79	about 50	3·80	15
Supplementary benefit†	1981	71	10·50	760
	1979	70	5·60	355
One-parent benefit‡	1982-83	75	3·43	20
	1981-82	70	3·11	25
	1980-81	66	2·68	22
	1979-80	60	2·18	17
Free school meals‖	1980	81	not known	not known

Notes:

* Estimates for family income supplement in 1981-82, supplementary benefit and free school meals relate to calendar years; for one-parent benefit to fiscal years; and the 1978-79 estimate for family income supplement was derived from Family Finances Survey data collected between October 1978 and September 1979.

† The estimates for 1979 and 1981 are not directly comparable because of the introduction of automatic heating additions in 1981.

‡ Estimates relate to those who stand to gain from claiming the benefit.

‖ This Department of Education and Science estimate relates to take-up among children in families in England receiving supplementary benefit or family income supplement. There are no comparable estimates for earlier years. No estimates of take-up in Scotland and Wales are available.

Supplementary Benefits (Trade Disputes)

42. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the supplementary benefits regulations in relation to trade disputes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I am satisfied that the regulations provide an appropriate framework for the assessment and payment of those involved in trade disputes.

Smoking

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to discourage smoking.

44. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new initiatives he intends to take to curb cigarette smoking.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are concerned to reduce smoking in this country and are taking action on a wide range of fronts to achieve this aim. In the last Budget the duty on cigarettes was increased by 10p per packet. During the year we have given an extra £½ million to the Health Education Council for its anti-smoking campaigns, while the grant to Action on Smoking and Health for 1984-85 has been increased by 12 per cent. To help reduce the risk to people who continue to smoke we have recently concluded a voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry which will bring about a further reduction in the average tar yield of cigarettes and provide a good deal of extra money for research into the effects of tobacco product modification.

Special attention is being paid to discouraging smoking among young people. Recent Government action in this field has included the publication of new guidelines for retailers on illegal sales of cigarettes to children under 16 and an increase in the maximum penalty for this offence. In addition, a leaflet has been sent to schools drawing attention to the dangers of smoking and two further research studies of children's smoking habits have been commissioned.

The Government will continue vigorously to discourage smoking at every opportunity and strive to achieve further progress in dealing with this major public health problem.

Abortions

46. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service abortions have been carried out since the enactment of the Abortion Act; and how many there have been to date in the current year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 1968 and the end of March quarter 1984, the number of National Health Service abortions carried out in England and Wales was 831,825. The provisional number for the March quarter 1984 was 16,708.

NHS (General Managers)

48. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general managers have now been appointed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: General manager appointments have now been settled in 12 regional health authorities, 38 district health authorities and four special health authorities.

Local Health Authorities (Membership)

49. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what instructions he has given to local health authorities regarding political affiliations and sympathies of their existing or new members.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Health Care Systems (Comparisons)

50. Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has recently made a comparative study of the administrative cost of the health care systems with the United States of America, France and Sweden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No recent comparison has been made.

Social Security (No. 2) Act 1980

51. Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has proposals to amend section 6 of the Social Security (No. 2) Act 1980.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to amend this section.

Hospital Beds (London)

52. Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has caused the increase to 115,000 in waiting lists for hospital beds in London.

Mr. John Patten: Out of the 31 London health districts, waiting lists decreased in 12 districts between March 1983 and March 1984 and increased in 19 districts. We do not have sufficient information to identify any significant trends but the increase over the year in the numbers awaiting treatment must be seen alongside the evidence of increased patient services being provided in the NHS in London. The latest figures, for the year to December 1983, show an increase over the previous year of 27,946 in the number of inpatients treated, 19,539 more day cases and 104,270 more outpatient attendances in acute specialties.

Community Health Councils (Visits)

53. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to give rights to members of community health councils to visit regularly elderly people and others staying in private homes registered by area health authorities or local authorities.

Mr. John Patten: No. Community health Councils are not concerned with services provided outside the National Health Service. By agreement with the private sector, councils can already visit private homes where people are being treated as National Health Service patients.

Cot Deaths

54. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to investigate the causes of cot deaths.

Mr. John Patten: The Department is expecting shortly the report of a major multicentre study of post-natal mortality, that it has been funding over the last seven years, which may throw some light on our understanding of cot deaths. We shall be considering carefully the implications of its findings, and the outcome of a seminar to be held on this subject in the new year, with regard to both the need for further basic research into this subject and the delivery of relevant health services.

Area Health Authorities (Waiting Lists)

56. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which three area health authorities have the longest waiting lists for (i) ear, nose and throat and (ii) orthodontic treatment.

Mr. John Patten: Information is available centrally only on inpatient waiting lists and this is given in the table. About half of all admissions to hospital are immediate, and many of those on waiting lists already have a planned date of admission. Only seven district health authorities have inpatient waiting lists for orthodontics.

National Health Service Hospitals

Speciality	District Health Authority	Number of persons on in partient waiting list at 31 March 1984
Ear, nose and throat	South Birmingham	3,767
	South Tees	2,526
	Bloomsbury	2,416
Orthodontics	Worthing	39
	Merton and Sutton	23
	North Lincolnshire	10
	Brighton	10

Forest Hospital, Buckhurst Hill

57. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received by his Department against the threatened closure of the Forest hospital, Buckhurst Hill.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Formal consultation by Waltham Forest health authority on its proposal to close Forest hospital is not yet completed. We are now receiving letters from members of the public. They are being passed to the health authority so that they can be considered together with other comments received, and the writers are being told.

NHS (Property Statistics)

58. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many houses, flats and bedsitters are owned by the National Health Service; and what is their total market value.

Mr. John Patten: The NHS in England owns some 100,000 units of staff residential accommodation of which over 20,000 are houses and flats and over 70,000 are bedsitter or hostel type accommodation. The total market value has been estimated to be in the region of £1,100 million.

Drugs (Expenditure)

59. Mr. Maude asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of total National Health Service expenditure was attributable to the cost of drugs in the latest year for which figures are available compared with 1975.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proportion of total National Health Service expenditure attributable to the cost of drugs was 7·8 per cent. in the financial year 1975-76 and, provisionally, 10·9 per cent. for 1983-84.

Death Grant

62. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make a statement on the death grant.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Maternity Services

63. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent improvements his Department has sought in the maternity services.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have emphasised to health authorities, in their document, "Care in Action", the priority they attach to improvements in the maternity services. We have asked authorities to take action to improve their maternity services, where necessary, in the light of the advice given by the maternity services advisory committee, which the Government set up in 1981; and we will be asking regional health authorities in due course to report back on the action taken.

Disposable Syringes

65. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now make disposable syringes available on National Health Service prescriptions to diabetics dependent on insulin.

Mr. John Patten: We cannot justify the considerable additional cost of making such single-use syringes generally available on prescription to all insulin-dependent diabetics. If it is medically essential for a particular patient to use them they may be supplied through the hospital service.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

66. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present financial help given by his Department towards the rebuilding of St. George's hospital, Tooting, SW17.

Mr. John Patten: The approved building cost of current capital schemes for the redevelopment of St. George's hospital, Tooting is £27 million; of which £20 million is provided from DHSS funds and £7 million from the University Grants Committee.

Students (Benefits)

67. Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the entitlement to benefit of a full-time student over 18 years of age living away from home with no dependants and no income or parental support.

Mr. Whitney: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to supplementary benefit and housing benefit. A full-time student over 18 years of age, living away from home with no dependants and no income or parental support, is excluded from supplementary benefit during term time because he is not available for work, with the exception of disabled students with restricted job prospects. During vacations he can claim benefit subject to the normal rules. He will be entitled to housing benefit throughout the academic year according to the level of his rent and/or rates.

Pensioners (Scale Margin)

47. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will reconsider the decision to alter the available scale margin for pensioners over 70 years of age.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. Supplementary pensioners receive the long-term rate of benefit. This higher rate was originally given partly in order to remove the need for claimants receiving it to claim additions to their benefit for special needs such as extra heating or special diets. The whole of the difference between this rate and the ordinary rate of benefit was therefore deducted from any additions for special needs to which claimants were entitled: it was not intended that claimants should have both. The difference between the two rates has increased to, for example, £11·55 for a couple from this week, but the deduction from additions for special needs remained at 50p for 16 years. It was reasonable therefore to increase the deduction to £1 a week, and to apply it once again to heating additions as was the case before 1973. No one will be worse off in cash terms as a result of these changes and they have enabled us to extend automatic heating additions to supplementary pensioner householders aged 65 to 69 and to pay heating additions at the higher rate of £5·20 a week to all supplementary pensioner householders aged 85 or over.

Heating Allowance

61. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the decrease in the heating allowance paid to retirement pensioners from 29 November 1984.

Mr. Newton: Supplementary benefit heating additions are being increased from this week in line with the rise in fuel prices over the year to last May. For reasons set out in the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) we decided that it would be reasonable to increase to £1, and reapply to heating additions the "available scale margin" deduction for additions for special needs given to people receiving the higher long-term rate of supplementary benefit. No one will be worse off in cash terms as a result of these changes, and they have enabled us to extend automatic heating additions to supplementary pensioner householders aged 65 to 69, and to pay heating additions at the higher rate of £5·20 a week to all supplementary pensioner householders aged 85 or over. Overall, we expect to spend some £400 million this financial year on heating additions after allowing for the effect of the changes referred to above: this is some £20 million more than was spent in 1983-84 and about £140 million more in real terms than was spent in 1978-79.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has on the numbers of supplementary benefits claimants of 25 years or under who have moved from their parents' homes in the most recently available period, broken down into the following categories (a) those who were treated as non-householders in their new accommodation, (b) those who were treated as boarders in their new accommodation and (c) those who were treated as householders or joint householders in their new accommodation;

(2) what are the most recently available figures for the numbers of young supplementary benefit claimants who are living in their parents' homes, broken down into the following categories: (a) 16 and 17 year olds, (b) 18 to 20 year olds and (c) 21 to 25 year olds; and what was the average amount of benefit paid for each of these groups;

(3) what are the most recently available figures for the numbers of young supplementary benefit claimants who are treated as boarders, broken down into the following categories: (a) 16 and 17 year olds, (b) 18 to 20 year olds and (c) 21 to 25 year olds; and what was the average amount of benefit paid to each of these groups.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of people who were refused unemployment or supplementary benefit for failing to take up suitable employment in the United Kingdom in 1983.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Dr. Boyson) to him on 14 May at column 67-68 where he gave the figure for refusal of unemployment benefit in 1983 as 1,896. I regret that the corresponding figure for reductions of supplementary benefit is still not available as processing of the statistics has been delayed by the strike at our Newcastle computer centre.

NHS (Griffiths Inquiry)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress he has made in implementing the recommendations of the Griffiths inquiry into the management of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities are making good progress in implementing the recommendations of the management inquiry report in accordance with the guidance issued by the Government in June. The appointment of general managers, as a key step in carrying forward the other recommendations in the Report, is broadly on schedule: we have agreed to proposals, for action in all RHAs, 107 DHAs, and four SHAs. Of these five Regional and 72 district health authorities have opted for open advertisement. Appointments have now been settled in 12 regional health authorities, 41 district health authorities and four special health authorities.

Maternity Services Advisory Committee

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the next report of the maternity services advisory committee will be published;

(2) what will be the next task of the maternity services advisory committee.

Mr. John Patten: The maternity services advisory committee's third report is expected early in the new year. We shall be considering then arrangements for its publication, and the question of the committee's future.

Distressed Neonates

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many distressed neonates referred from peripheral hospitals to (a) neonatal intensive care units and (b) special care baby units have been rejected in each region.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally.

NHS Hospitals (Food Hygiene)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to ensure a more thorough standard of hygiene and food preparation in National Health Service hospitals, especially in geriatric hospitals.

Mr. John Patten: We have no reason to believe that the general standards of hygiene and food preparation in National Health Service hospitals are unsatisfactory. We shall consider whether further actions is required when the repot of the inquiry into the outbreak of food poisoning at the Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield is received.

Clinical Wastes (Disposal)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the second report of the working party on the disposal of clinical wastes in the London area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report's recommendations, which concern wastes arising from general medical and dental practice, will be considered in the context of guidance about the disposal of such wastes which our Department is preparing.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doses of benzodiazepines were administered in hospitals in each of the last five years in (a) Merseyside regional health authority, (b) East Berkshire regional health authority, (c) Greater Manchester regional health authority and (d) Wessex regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is not available.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many prescriptions for benzodiazepines were issued in each of the last five years for those people aged 16 to 24 years, 25 to 34 years, 35 to 44 years, 45 to 60 years and over 60 years:

(2) what was the total number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines issued by year during the last five years; and what was the regional breakdown.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of NHS prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in England for the last five years is as follows:

	Millions
1979	25·7
1980	23·9
1981	24·2
1982	24·4
1983	23·3

Information on the regional pattern could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on the age breakdown of patients for whom they were prescribed is not available.

Pensioners

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the total numbers of people in the United Kingdom in receipt of (a) retirement pension only, (b) supplementary pension only, (c) retirement pension and supplementary pension, (d) all public sector pension schemes and (e) retirement pension and a public sector pension, in 1983.

Mr. Whitney: The available information is as follows:

1983

	Thousands
Retirement Pension only (a)	7,773
Supplementary Pension only (b)	90
Retirement Pension and Supplementary Pension (c)	1,604
Public Sector Pensions (d)	2,320

(b)-(c) Social security statistics December 1983.

(d) The Government Acturary's Survey of Occupational Schemes: 1979 (HMSO)—latest available estimates.

Note:

The Government Actuary's Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes is published quadrenially and figures from the 1983 survey are due to be published shortly. Whilst no estimates are available of the number of public sector occupational pensioners who also have a state retirement pension it is likely that almost all people over pension age who have a public sector occupational pension will also have a state retirement pension.

Heating Additions

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners currently receive heating additions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The final results of the "Annual Statistical Enquiry" for December 1983 are not yet available. Provisional figures suggest that the number of supplementary pensioners receiving heating additions in December 1983 was somewhat over 1·4 million.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the additional number of pensioners who will benefit from the extension of heating additions; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what extra help the very elderly will receive following changes in calculating additions for heating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We estimate that about 80,000 supplementary pensioners aged 65 to 69 will receive basic rate heating additions (£2·10 a week) and about 90,000 aged 85 or over will receive higher rate heating additions (£5·20 a week) from this week as a result of changes we have made to the supplementary benefit regulations. Taken together with the associated change to the available scale margin, the net effect will be to give those affected over 85 up to £2·60 a week more than they would otherwise have received — the exact figure varying according to what other additional payments they were receiving previously.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unoccupied hospital beds there were in England in 1983.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

RHA General Managers (Appointments)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appointments of general managers by regional health authorities have not been confirmed by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Every regional health authority's proposals for appointing a general manager are being discussed with Ministers before the authority proceeds to formal appointment. Twelve appointments have been made and two remain to be made.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to estimate the number of additional staff employed by local authorities to administer the housing benefit scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Final figures are not yet available for 1983-84 but on the basis of estimates so far received from local authorities, about 3,500 additional staff are being employed. The fact that this is more than originally estimated is probably due to a number of factors including a marked increase in take-up, which would have affected the staffing requirement in the Department if the work had not been taken on by local authorities. The independent review of the housing benefit scheme, which is due to report to my right hon. Friend by the end of the year, is looking, among other things, at ways of simplifying the scheme and improving its administration.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of branded medicines obtainable without a prescription which were supplied in 1983-84 under prescription were supplied to people entitled to free prescriptions; and what proportion these prescriptions represented of the £120 million per year he referred to on 8 November, Official Report, column 226.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1984, c. 218]: In 1983, the latest year for which information is available, 81 per cent. of prescriptions for medicines obtainable without a prescription in the groups covered by the measures to which my right hon. Friend referred on 8 November, at column 226, were supplied to people claiming exemptions from prescription charges, including those covered by prepayment certificate; and these prescriptions represented around 50 per cent. of the £120 million per year to which my right hon. Friend also referred.

Housing Benefits Scheme

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the report of the National Audit Office on the housing benefits scheme.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 19 November 1984, c. 64]: The National Audit Office report records the results of an initial examination of the housing benefits scheme and gives some provisional findings about the administrative difficulties that arose during its first year of operation. Those difficulties are being examined by the independent review of the scheme now being conducted under the chairmanship of Mr. Jeremy Rowe, CBE. The review has been asked to examine the structure and scope of the scheme with a view to simplifying it and improving its administration by local authorities.

ENERGY

Power Stations

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much extra oil has been used in the current year to date to blend with coal burnt in power stations; and if he will estimate its effect on sulphur and other discharges into the atmosphere.

Mr. Goodlad: The amount of oil burnt with coal in public sector power stations in England and Wales is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. On the basis of equivalent heat content, the average amount of sulphur in fuel oil and in coal is very similar. The substitution of oil for coal in power stations is thus unlikely to have a significant effect on sulphur and other discharges into the atmosphere. Discharges into the atmosphere will continue to be subject to monitoring by Her Majesty's Alkali and Clean Air Inspectorate.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply dated 15 November, Official Report, column 335, concerning the price of fuel deliverd to power stations, whether he will provide separate figures for heavy fuel oil.

Mr. Goodlad: Separate figures for heavy fuel oil are not readily available.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the initial finance of the Coal Board Enterprise Company has so far been allocated.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to the reply, 26 November 1984, c. 609]: I informed the House that the initial funds of £5 million provided to the new company by the National Coal Board would be kept under review. I have today agreed to the National Coal Board doubling the funds available to NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. from £5 million to £10 million. This figure will be kept under review and will be increased further when the need arises. I am pleased that the company has already received 150 inquiries.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pension Funds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the amount of interest on central Government debt payable to pension funds in the current financial year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No statistics are collected on interest paid by the central Government to pension funds, and a reliable estimate cannot be provided.

Small Workshops (Allowances)

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend section 73 of the Finance Act 1982 granting 100 per cent. allowances for very small workshops beyond its terminal date of 26 March 1985.

Mr. Moore: I have no such plans.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Commission of the European Communities concerning value added tax coverage on specific items.

Mr. Hayhoe: The EC Commission has sent the United Kingdom Government a reasoned opinion under article 169 of the Treaty of Rome, alleging that certain aspects of the VAT zero rates in force in the United Kingdom are contrary to the provisions of the sixth VAT directive. The United Kingdom Government do not accept the Commission's views.

Newspapers and Magazines (VAT)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from the Scottish Daily Newspaper Society against the imposition of value added tax on newspapers and magazines; and what was the nature of his reply.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have noted press reports about representations on this subject being made by the Scottish Daily Newspaper Society but they have not yet reached me. When they do I will reiterate that although the Government are committed to a shift in the burden of taxation from taxes on earnings to taxes on spending, we have no set views at present on how this might best be done.

Japan (Bilateral Talks)

Mr. Franks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the recent bilateral talks between British officials and officials of the Japanese Ministry of Finance.

Mr. Lawson: I had suggested these talks to seek to ensure that the freedom with which Japanese banks and securities houses operate in London was matched by freer access for British financial institutions wishing to operate in Japan.

I believe the talks were valuable. Following the talks practical steps were taken promptly in Tokyo to deal with certain outstanding applications by British firms for securities licences, and to liberalise restrictions on British and other foreign banks in Tokyo. I look for further progress in the next year or so by the Japanese authorities in liberalising their financial markets and opening them to overseas competition.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total number of individuals who (a) pay income tax, (b) have a taxable income after allowances of £1,000 or less and (c) have a taxable income of more than £1,000 but less than £3,000.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1984, column 445]: The latest estimates for 1984-85 are:

Taxable income range	Individuals paying tax millions*
Less than £1,000	3·4
£1,001 to £3,000	6·5
Over £3,000	13·9
Total	23·8

* Including taxpaying wives.

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report his Department's contemporary estimates of the numbers of (a) taxpayers at the time of the Budgets of the years 1979 to 1984 inclusive and (b) persons taken out of the income tax system as a result of the changes made in those Budgets.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1984, c. 445]: The latest estimates are as follows:

Thousands

	*Number of taxpayers	Number of taxpayers if allowances had remained at the level of the previous year*	Difference
1978-79	25,900	—	—
1979-80	25,900	27,200	1,300
1980-81	25,200	26,500	1,300
1981-82	24,800	24,800	0
1982-83†	24,600	25,800	1,200
1983-84†	24,100	25,350	1,250
1984-85†	23,800	24,650	850

* Including taxpaying wives.

† Provisional.

In each case the latest estimate of the effect of the Budget changes on taxpayer numbers is within 100,000 of the estimate made at the time of the Budget concerned.

Income Tax

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total income tax was paid by people with the highest (a) 5 per cent., (b) 10 per cent. and (c) 20 per cent. of incomes in each of the last 10 financial years for which statistics are available.

Mr. John Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 271]: The information requested is given in the table. Estimates are not available for 1979-80 or 1980-81.

	Percentage shares of total taxes on incomes
	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75

CSO estimates from Survey of Personal Incomes and Family Expenditure Surveys.

Personal Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the contemporary estimates of numbers of persons with earnings above the minimum limit for national insurance contributions at the time of the autumn statements in each of the years 1979 to 1984 inclusive; and what were the estimates for the numbers brought below that limit by the changes made in it in each of those years.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1984, c. 445]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested, but the table shows the estimated effect on the number of class 1 contributors of the increases in the lower earnings limit in 1980-81 to 1985-86. The table gives estimates of the average number of employees in the United Kingdom for whom class 1 contributions were payable, and for each of the years an estimate of the additional number of employees who would have been liable for contributions if the lower earnings limit (LEL) had not been increased in that year.

	Estimated average number of employees for whom class 1 contributions were payable	Estimated number of employees excluded from contributions by the increase in the LEL
1980-81	20,500,000	400,000
1981-82	19,500,000	400,000
1982-83	18,750,000	225,000
1983-84	18,750,000	250,000
1984-85	19,000,000	125,000
1985-86 (forecast)	19,250,000	115,000

TRANSPORT

A12 (Crash Barriers)

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether it remains his policy to re-erect crash barriers along the A12 motorway in Chelmsford.

Mrs. Chalker: No provision has been made to incorporate crash barriers in the A12 Chelmsford bypass. I am however considering again whether they can be justified under the Department's criteria.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Ridley: I visited the port of Liverpool on Friday 23 November and opened a new £2½ million grain and animal feed discharge facility at Seaforth. The installation was financed by Continental Grain, one of the world's largest grain trading and processing companies, and will bring more business and employment opportunities to Merseyside. This type of private enterprise investment in a port illustrates the evolving spirit of co-operation and partnership between ports and their customers and has my full support.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Nuclear War (Precautions)

82. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Attorney-General whether Her Majesty's Government have made provision for the secure storage of information about land and property ownership in the event of nuclear war.

The Attorney-General: I can only answer for the Land Registry's records for which no specific provision has been made.

Divorce

Mr. Dubs asked the Attorney-General when he expects to complete the research project into the financial consequences of divorce.

The Attorney-General: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys hopes to complete the research project into the financial consequences of divorce by December 1985.

Illegitimacy

Mr. Dubs asked the Attorney-General if he plans to implement the Law Commission's recommendation on illegitimacy.

The Attorney-General: The Law Commission's recommendations have been accepted by the Government. They will be implemented when resources become available, though this will not be during the current Session.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dubs asked the Attorney-General how many applications for criminal legal aid have been made since March 1984; and in how many cases the applications were (a) granted initially, (b) refused, (c) the rights of recourse were exercised and (d) the applications were successful on recourse.

The Attorney-General: Complete statistical returns from the courts for the quarters 1 April—30 June and 1 July—30 September are not yet available. Information so far received shows that the Crown court granted 99 per cent. of applications to it for legal aid for trials, 98 per cent. of those for committals for sentence, and 36 per cent. for appeals. The magistrates' courts granted 99 per cent of applications to them for legal aid for committals for trial, and 89 per cent. (91 per cent. indictable, 65 per cent. summary-only) for all trials before them. In the same period, 1,496 applications to criminal legal aid committees were made under the recourse provisions, and 993 of these were granted.

"Court Business"

Mr. Dubs asked the Attorney-General if he will publish the circulation list of the journal Court Business published by the Lord Chancellor's Department; and on what basis other people and organisations can obtain it.

The Attorney-General: "Court Business" is primarily a bulletin for the guidance of staff of the Lord Chancellor's Department and for the information of the judiciary. The Lord Chancellor has no plans to make it more widely available or to publish the circulation list but would be ready to reconsider this if there was evidence of demand adequate to justify the expense of either operation.

Lenient Sentences (Appeals)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Attorney-General on what criteria he will refer lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal under the proposed new legislation.

The Attorney-General: The purpose of the proposed provision as at present formulated is to provide a means of enabling sentences which appear inappropriate on the basis of established sentencing principles, which raise novel issues of sentencing, or which otherwise raise questions of public concern, to be reviewed by the Court of Appeal consistently with the principle that these are matters for the courts. Assuming the proposed legislation is enacted in substantially its present form I would expect to use the new power sparingly and on the basis of a careful assessment of the extent to which the sentence in question falls outside accepted norms of its implications for the public interest. I do not equate the public interest with the vociferous media and other criticism which occasionally accompanies an excessively lenient sentence and which may be out of all proportion to its significance.

Justices' Clerks

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General what is the mechanism for inviting clerks to the justices to seek early retirement; and what arrangements are made in this respect.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

Under section 25 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979, the appointment of a justices' clerk, subject to the approval of the Home Secretary, is a matter for the magistrates' courts committee, and the clerk then holds office during the committee's pleasure. For termination of an appointment, whether on early retirement grounds or otherwise, the Secretary of State's approval is required only where the magistrates for the division or divisions for which the clerk is appointed do not consent to the decision. Justices' clerks are pensionable under the Local Government Superannuation Regulations 1974 (SI 520/1974) and retiring awards would be calculated in accordance with those regulations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

International Year of Peace

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the draft programme for the International Year of Peace, 1986, approved by the United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's contribution to the International Year of Peace 1986 is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

"Parental Influence in Schools"

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what responses he has received to the Green Paper, "Parental Influence in Schools"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Responses to the Green Paper have been received from over 700 individuals and organisations. In the light of these, the Government are now carefully considering the way ahead and will make an announcement in due course.

Swann Committee (Report)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he can now announce a publication date for the Swann committee report on the education of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Dunn: I understand that the committee hopes to deliver its final report to my right hon. Friend in the near future.

Student Councils

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the policy of his Department towards the setting up of representative student councils in schools and colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Provision is normally made in the articles of government of public sector institutions of further and higher education for the establishment of a students' union, one of whose functions will be to represent the views of students in discussion with institutional authorities. Whether to set up a school council is best left to individual schools to decide in the light of their own needs and circumstances.

International Youth Year

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grants or other financial contributions his Department has made to the English, Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish International Youth Year secretariats, respectively; and what conditions were placed on the use of those grants.

Mr. Brooke: Grants made to the national co-ordinating committee for England since February 1983 amount to £75,514. The award of grant is subject to the provisions of the Education (Grant) Regulations 1983 and Government accounting arrangements apply. Grants for the committees in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland, respectively.

Secondary Schools (Community Links)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what his Department has done to encourage close links between secondary schools and local industry, commerce and other parts of the local community; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government recognise the importance of such links as a means of promoting mutual understanding, enhancing pupils' knowledge of how the nation earns its wealth, and helping to prepare young people for adult and working life.

The Department is committed to providing a lead on school-industry matters, but responsibility for local links rests with local education authorities and local communities. The Department wrote to chief education officers on 15 March 1983 drawing attention to the importance which the Government attach to links with industry and commerce and it has subsequently been in contact with a number of employers and employers' organisations on the role that employers might play.

The Department is in close touch with, and in some cases provides financial support for, national organisations whose principal function is to promote local liaison activities, including work experience. It is also actively involved in the preparations for Industry Year 1986 which include considerations of how school-industry activities can be expanded and strengthened.

Opportunities for the further development of co-operation between schools, local employers and the wider community are being provided by the Department's programme of development projects for lower attaining pupils. The Department's microelectronics education programme is also providing a stimulus. The Department is also associated with a number of European Community projects which are exploring the further development of links between schools and the wider community in member countries.

The Department works closely with the Manpower Services Commission on all aspects of the technical and vocational education initiative, which is also promoting local links, and with the Department of Trade and Industry on all matters relating to school-industry liaison.

Books

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures showing spending on books alone by each local education authority in England and Wales (a) in terms of their overall allocation and spending per pupil and (b) in cost and real terms using 1979-80 as the base year for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 353]: Figures are not readily available to prepare a complete answer in the form requested for the five-year period in question, but within the time available it has been possible to calculate the following data:

Local education authority expenditure per pupil on the provision of books in primary and secondary schools—England

WALES

International Youth Year

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial or other support his Department has given to the Wales International Youth Year secretariat.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The Department has given £22,316·95 to the national co-ordinating committee in Wales since April 1983.

AIDS

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome are known to have occurred in Wales; what specialist medical advice he has so far received; what consultation he has had with the blood transfusion centre at Rhydlafar, near Cardiff, regarding steps to be taken to ensure that blood donors are free of this disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Three cases of AIDS have been diagnosed in Wales to date. Specialist medical advice is provided on AIDS by the chief medical officer at the Welsh Office and his professional staff who consult experts on this disease within the United Kingdom. Officials at the Welsh Office are in constant contact with the consultant regional epidemiologist of the public health laboratory service, the director of the Welsh regional blood transfusion centre at Rhydlafar, and the department of haematology at the University of Wales college of medicine, and action has already been taken to ensure that all possible precautions are being observed.

Dairy Industry Workers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many dairymen and other workers in the dairy industry in Wales have registered as unemployed since the implementation of the European Community milk quota scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aerial Crop Spraying

80. Mr. Dormand asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to institute additional controls on aerial crop spraying; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. John) on Monday 19 November 1984 at column 77.

Farm Animals Welfare Council (Code of Conduct)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to introduce statutory regulations based on the Farm Animal Welfare Council's codes of practice.

Mrs. Fenner: I understand that the Farm Animal Welfare Council is currently reviewing the welfare codes which Parliament has approved and will then advise Ministers on whether in their view any of the codes' recommendations might more appropriately be made statutory. We must await the council's report.

Milk

Mr. Warren asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue a statement showing the progress made by each of the member states of the EEC in implementing the requirements of the dairy products quota system and the reasons for the delays in the required implementation by some of the member states.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on Monday 26 November 1984 at column 402.

Mr. Spence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what percentage amount the national milk price has altered in each European Economic Community country including the United Kingdom for each of the years 1982-83 and 1983-84; what change is proposed in each country for 1984-85; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: At each price fixing the Community sets the target price for milk to which the various dairy support prices under the common agricultural policy are related. The following table shows the target price converted into national currencies at the green rates. The Commission has not yet made proposals in respect of the 1985-86 marketing year. It should be noted that the target prices cannot be equated with actual market prices, which will vary according to market circumstances, or with returns to producers (which will be affected by factors such as the actual level of returns from the market, production costs, and national inflation rates).

Annual percentage changes in the European Community target price for milk in national currencies by member state 1982-83 to 1984-85

	Percentage changes over previous marketing year
	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85*
Germany	+7·1	+1·0	−3·2
France	+14·2	+8·2	+5·9
Italy	+16·1	+6·4	+6·8
Netherlands	+8·3	+1·5	−0·6
Belgium/Luxembourg	+16·4	+5·6	+4·6
United Kingdom	+10·5	+2·3	0
Ireland	+10·5	+7·1	+4·6
Denmark	+14·2	+2·9	+2·2
Greece	+16·7	+21·9	+17·2

* The green rates used are those applying at the start of each marketing year except in the case of Germany and The Netherlands in 1984-85 where account has been taken of the revaluations taking place on 1 January 1985.

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is yet in a position to invite more milk producers to join the outgoers' scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: It is our intention to invite further groups of producers to join the scheme as soon as this is warranted by the number not taking up earlier invitations. This week we shall be inviting a further 150 producers to join. These are producers who are offering up between 250,001 and 275,000 litres of quota, amounting to 39·3 million litres. As before, a small number have been excluded because milk production is a relatively small part of their overall farming enterprise.

PRIME MINISTER

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to alter departmental responsibility for the administration of regional development grants.

The Prime Minister: Yes. With effect from the date of the introduction shortly of the new regional development grant scheme, the Scottish and Welsh Offices will administer all regional development grants in their respective territories.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Nuclear Shelters

81. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what help he can offer in providing information on suitable accommodation for public shelters in the event of nuclear attack.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The 1983 regulations require local authorities to plan for the utilisation of buildings and other structures suitable for use as public shelters. Guidance on how to conduct a survey to identify suitable buildings will be issued with the consolidated circular early next year.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cautions were administered by the Metropolitan police from April 1984 to date compared with the same period in 1983; and what were the figures for each police district;

(2) how many prosecutions were brought by the Metropolitan police from April 1984 to date compared with the same period in 1983; and what were the figures for each police district.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Information for 1984 is not yet available. The available information for 1983 is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1983", supplementary tables vol. 3, in table S3.2A, for persons found guilty, and table S3.7A, for persons cautioned.

Burglaries (Statistics)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for each of the past five years what was (a) the number of reported burglaries and (b) the clear-up detection rate, in the police area covering Leyton and Leytonstone.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information for J district, which includes Leyton and Leytonstone, is as given in the following table:

Offences of burglary recorded by the police in J district of the Metropolitan police district*

	Offences recorded	Percentage clear-up
1979	6,065	10
1980	7,081	14
1981	7,976	10
1982	8,263	9
1983	7,841	8

* Waltham Forest, Redbridge, etc.

Coroners

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to allow coroners the power to refer issues of public concern to a futher judicial inquiry.

Mr. Mellor: No. The existing law already provides for various forms of inquiry into a death additional to the inquest in a coroner's court.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation providing further rights of appeal from decisions of coroners' courts.

Mr. Mellor: The report of the Brodrick committee on death certification and coroners (Cmnd. 4810) made recommendations for extending existing provisions of the right of appeal against the decision of a coroner's court. We have no immediate plans for legislation on these proposals; but my right hon. and learned Friend will keep them in mind in the course of his further consideration of the future of the coroners' system.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to give effect to those parts of the Brodrick report on coroners which have not so far been implemented, with regard to the role of juries.

Mr. Mellor: The recommendations of the Brodrick committee on death certification and coroners (Cmnd. 4810) concerning juries have been partially implemented by section 56 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 and the Coroners Juries Act 1983. The outstanding recommendation, giving coroners complete discretion in deciding when to sit with a jury, will be considered in the context of any future proposals for reorganising the coroners' system.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why, when polariod photographs of persons arrested in connection with the current mining dispute are taken in police stations, two photographs are taken; to what precise use each is put; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the practice of taking a polaroid photograph of an arrested person—usually with the arresting officer—is intended to ensure that there is no confusion as to the identity of the arrested person or the officer who made the arrest. This photograph would normally be kept with the case papers or charge sheet and would be destroyed after any court proceedings. I am not aware that it is general police practice to take two polaroid photographs. The police may, however, take a second photograph with a conventional camera of an arrested person for the purpose of local records. Such a photograph would be destroyed if the person was not proceeded against or was acquitted. When photographs are destroyed, it is normal police practice for this to be done in the presence of the person if he requests.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the relevant chief constables as to whether information on the number of people taken to police stations during the current coal mining strike who have been detained overnight is stored in any police computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Information about persons detained overnight is kept in records compiled manually. I am not aware of any instance in which it is stored on a computer.

City of London (Franchise)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration the Government have given to the extension of the franchise within the city of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans for legislation to alter or extend the franchise in the city of London. Any such proposals would need to be considered on their merits.

Car Registration Numbers (Police Computers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of car registration numbers currently on (a) the police national computer and (b) other police computers in relation to vehicles which have been, or are suspected of being, involved in riot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am making inquiries and will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Capacity

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the changes to manpower levels which may be required in probation and after-care services resulting from the planned increases in prison capacity.

Mr. Mellor: To meet the planned increase in prison places it is estimated that 45 additional probation staff will be required by 1988.

Members of Parliament (Salaries and Allowances)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in the Official Report the salaries and allowances payable to, and expenses which may be claimed by, United Kingdom Members of Parliament and British Members of the European Parliament.

Mr. Mellor: Members of Parliament are statutorily entitled to receive an additional salary of £5,369 p.a.—that is, one third of their salary as Members of Parliament—if they are also Members of the European Parliament.

The allowances payable to, and expenses which may be claimed by, Members of the European Parliament are matters for the Parliament itself. Full details can be obtained from the Secretary-General in Luxemburg.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the experimental use of the system known as crime pattern analysis at the police national computer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 4.26 to 4.28 of the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for 1983 (HC528) and to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 13 November, at column 9. The effectiveness of this application, which is in use on a trial basis, is being kept under review.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes of violence were reported in the area of each police authority in England in each quarter of 1983-84 and in each of the first two quarters of 1984-85.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is given in the following table:

Police (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how spending per police officer in the Metropolitan police compares with the targets set by his Department for other police forces.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend does not set targets for other police forces.

Drug Trafficking (National Reporting Centre)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the national reporting centre has been used in the efforts to combat drug trafficking in 1983 or 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Crime (Clear-up Rates)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps the Metropolitan police have taken to study the training methods of other police forces with higher clear-up rates for crime;

(2) whether, as police authority for the metropolis, he has sought advice from (a) police authorities and (b) chief constables in the rest of England on how best to carry out his responsibilities with regard to the clear-up rate of crime in the Metropolitan police area;

(3) when he expects the clear-up rate for crime in the Metropolitan police area to match that of the West Midlands police force.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Clear-up rates alone are not considered a sufficient measure of any police force's response to crime. Although the clear-up rate in the Metropolitan police district is lower than in some provincial forces, except in respect of serious crime, the total number of arrests in the Metropolitan Police District is proportionately similar to the number elsewhere. I understand from the Commission of Police of the Metropolis that his officers have regular exchanges with other forces about training methods and that his management services department has examined investigative practice in a number of provincial police forces to try and determine the reasons for differences in clear-up rates. None of the conclusions of that research has pointed to variations in training as a contributory factor. It has suggested that clear-up rates can be affected significantly by the extent to which offences are taken into consideration or otherwise disposed of without formal proceedings. The commissioner accordingly set up in April 1984 an experiment for one year to test the effects of a scheme which has proved successful elsewhere of interviewing prisoners about otherwise unsolved crimes.

Burglar Alarms (False Alerts)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Metropolitan police have taken and what advice they have sought from other police forces to reduce the incidence of attendance at false alerts from burglar alarms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, in common with other police forces in England and Wales, he operates a policy of withdrawal of direct police response to alarms which generate an unacceptable number of false calls. Police response is reinstated only after a specified period and after inspection by the Metropolitan police burglar alarm inspectorate. Guidelines on intruder alarm policies were issued to forces by the Association of Chief Police Officers last April and the Metropolitan police were involved in the preparation of these.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether consideration has been completed of the recent recommendation made by the Committee of Public Accounts in its 18th report that the Forestry Commission should publish details, including prices obtained, for properties sold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government are still considering their response to this recommendation. When a decision is reached it will be made known to the House.

Lawyers (Competition)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in the last three months from the legal profession concerning his proposals to increase competition among lawyers.

Mr. Ancram: I am in close touch with the Law Society of Scotland whose representatives I met recently to discuss conveyancing by employed solicitors, fee quotation and advertising. My right hon. Friend has also received a number of representations on these matters from individual solicitors or firms.

AIDS

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome are known to have occured in Scotland; what specialist medical advice he has so far received; what consultation he has had with blood transfusion centres in Scotland regarding steps to be taken to ensure that blood donors are free of this disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: By 26 November three confirmed cases of AIDS had been registered with the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit. Specialist medical advice is received from the unit, the Scottish national blood transfusion service and specialists in other relevant disciplines. The SNBTS has, in consultation with my Department, issued a revised leaflet on AIDS and how it concerns blood donors. Steps are being taken to ensure that this leaflet is seen by all potential donors in Scotland before they give blood. It reinforces my Department's previous advice that persons at high risk of contracting AIDS should not donate blood.

Dairy Industry

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dairymen and other workers in the dairy industry in Scotland have registered as unemployed since the implementation of the European Community milk quota scheme.

Mr. John MacKay: I regret that this information is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Youth Year

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution his Department intends to make towards International Youth Year.

Mr. Luce: Most other countries share our view that the main thrust of activities during International Youth Year should be at the local and national levels. However, the British Council's exchanges department will be giving priority in 1985 to projects with IYY themes, and the Overseas Development Administration will maintain its funding of the Commonwealth Youth Programme, which is holding a Pan-Commonwealth youth conference in 1985. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is also considering an application from the British Youth Council for a grant in 1985 for its international work.

United States Senators (Dublin Visit)

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representatives of the British Government met United States senators visiting Dublin on 10 November to discuss issues of Irish neutrality or the European Economic Community.

Mr. Luce: No.

Arms Control

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to encourage further bilateral and multilateral nuclear arms control agreement talks.

Mr. Luce: We have continued to support the United States in its willingness to negotiate balanced and verifiable arms control agreements without preconditions. We have urged the Soviet Union to match the American commitment. We welcome the announcement of a meeting in January between Mr. Shultz and Mr. Gromyko. We hope this will lead to agreement on how to carry forward negotiations on the whole range of nuclear and outer space arms control questions.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government plan to propose or implement measures to carry out the recommendations of the final document of the 10th special session of the United Nations General Assembly, resolution S-10/Z, about nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Luce: The final document of the 10th special session of the United Nations states that the process of nuclear disarmament should be carried out in such a way, and requires measures to ensure, that the security of all states is guaranteed at progressively lower levels of nuclear armaments. The document also states that the achievement of nuclear disarmament will require urgent negotiation of agreements at appropriate stages and with adequate measures of verification satisfactory to the states concerned.

We endorse this approach.

Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to comply with United Nations General Assembly resolution 38/183 J which calls for nuclear arms limitation and disarmament through independent initiative.

Mr. Luce: United Nations General Assembly resolution 38/183 J requested the Secretary General to prepare, with qualified governmental experts, a study on unilateral disarmament measures. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 27 November at column 449.

World Disarmament Campaign

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to give any funds to the United Nations world disarmament campaign.

Mr. Luce: Our contribution to the United Nations and its specialised agencies this financial year is some £140 million, part of which is used to fund United Nations services in support of the world disarmament campaign. We also devote substantial sums of money to our own disarmament information activities, which are consistent with the aims of the world disarmament campaign.

United Nations Peace Year

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to promote the United Nations Peace Year, which begins in October 1985.

Mr. Luce: Members of the United Nations have a continuing responsibility to work for international peace. We shall do this in 1986, as in other years, through complementary policies on defence, arms control, and the peaceful settlement of disputes. We plan also to mark the year with a conference on conflict management.

Political Torture

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has received regarding the use of political torture overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We regularly receive representations from human rights organisations and individuals about torture. We believe that the use of torture for political or any other purpose is totally abhorrent. We are anxious to do all we can to help put a stop to it.

EMPLOYMENT

International Youth Year

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Employment what contribution his Department intends to make to international youth year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government are directly supporting International Youth Year by grant aiding the co-ordinating committees in the United Kingdom. Activities for which the Department of Employment has responsibility and which have particular relevance to the objectives of the year include the youth training scheme, the community industry scheme and the community programme.

Young Workers Scheme (Tameside and Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for employment if he will list for the Stockport and Tameside districts the name and number and employers making use of the young workers scheme in 1984-85.

Mr. Alan Clark: The number of employees currently receiving support under the scheme could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. It is estimated that 390 employers in Stockport and 180 employers in Tameside have submitted approved applications so far in the current financial year. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, the names of individual employers receiving support under any of the employment measures cannot be released.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme (Tameside and Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Tameside and Stockport districts the number of firms and individuals taking part in the enterprise allowance scheme and the schemes being supported in each district.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures are not available in the form requested. However, in the Manchester East area, which includes Tameside and Stockport there were 645 people receiving the enterprise allowance on 20 November 1984.

Job-Splitting Scheme (Tameside and Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many job splits have been achieved under the job-splitting scheme in the Stockport and Tameside districts, respectively; and how these figures compare with his Department's original expectations.

Mr. Alan Clark: Eight full-time jobs have been split since the scheme began, five in Stokport and three in Tameside, providing 16 part-time jobs. No specific targets for take-up have been set for the scheme in particular areas. However take-up on the scheme nationally has been disappointing. As my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November at column 444, changes are to be made to improve its attractiveness and thus the help it can give to reducing unemployment.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total projected cost of the technical and vocational education initiative by the central Government and local authorities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The cost of mounting the first 62 projects under the technical and vocational education initiative will be approximately £150 million over seven financial years to 1989-90.

In addition the Government have recently announced a further extension of the initiative to enable those authorities not yet included to mount projects if they wish to do so. Each project will be within a ceiling of £2 million over five academic years beginning in 1985 or 1986.

Over the five-year existence of each project, central Government, through the Manpower Services Commission will meet, within the above financial limits, the additional costs incurred by local authorities as a result of their participation in the initiative.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many parliamentary constituencies have numbers of unemployed persons claiming benefit where the number who have claimed for over 52 weeks is more than half the total.

Mr. Alan Clark: Broad estimates of the numbers of unemployed persons claiming benefit for over 52 weeks in each parliamentary constituency are available in the House of Commons Library.

Dairy Industry Workers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many dairymen and other workers in the dairy industry in England have registered as unemployed since the implementation of the European Community milk quota scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available.

Work Permits

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether a decision has yet been made to continue after 1984 the special annual quota of work permits for workers from the Dependent Territories whose level of skill is below that required by the general work permit scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. It has been decided that the quota for 1985 will be 200—the same as this year. Within the figure of 200 no more than 150 permits will be allowed for any one territory.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future of mode B schemes within the youth training scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1984, c. 440]: The needs of most youngsters on the youth training scheme are generally best met through employer-led mode A schemes. However, mode B schemes have a continuing and important role to play, especially where the particular needs of some youngsters are best provided for in this way or where there is a limited range of opportunities available under mode A.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia (Ministerial Visit)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the visit of the Minister for Overseas Development to Ethiopia between 25 and 27 November.

Mr. Raison: I went in the RAF Hercules to relief camps at Korem and Mekele and to the port at Assab. I saw representatives of the Ethiopian Government, voluntary agencies and international organisations and had a long talk with Chairman Mengistu. The camps are tragic, but much hard work is being done and the number of children recovering from starvation and disease is encouraging. I was impressed by the splendid work of in the voluntry agencies and the superb operation of the RAF which has won it an enviable reputation in Ethiopia. Co-operation with the Ethiopian authorities is generally good.

I have decided to send a substantial quantity of blankets as well as extra conveyors to help unloading at the port. The need for food is paramount (and I was concerned at the lack of food aid expected in the next two weeks). I shall encourage other donors to work with the World Food Programme and the United Nations coordinator, Mr. Jansson, whom I met in Addis Ababa, to seek a sufficient and well-timed supply of food through 1985. I shall now be considering what further steps to take.

Sub-Saharan Africa Programme

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding Government support for the World bank's sub-Saharan Africa programme.

Mr. Raison: I have received representations from Members of Parliament and members of the public. Contrary to the impression they may have received, the recent World Bank report on sub-Saharan Africa contained no specific proposals for a US$2 billion World Bank special fund. Her Majesty's Government will look carefully at any proposals by the World Bank on what action should be taken on the report.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Disputes

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the effect on the prospects for investment in Britain of the recent industrial disputes.

Mr. Butcher: Although an upsurge in industrial disputes inevitably harms the climate for investment, their effect has been confined largely to the coal industry. The Department's last investment intentions survey indicated a rise of over 9 per cent. in 1984 in the volume of investment by manufacturing, construction, distribution and selected service industries and a further increase in 1985. This view was confirmed for manufacturing industry, by the CBI's quarterly industrial trends survey published on 30 October.

British Telecom

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is monitoring the purchase of British Telecom shares by overseas bidders operating within the British tranche; and what steps have been taken to ensure that an overseas applicant does not receive an allocation from the British and overseas tranches.

Mr. Butcher: The prospectus makes clear that 49,500,000 shares—a little under 2 per cent. of the United Kingdom portion—have been placed with Swiss Bank Corporation International Limited which has also applied for further shares. The allocation of shares is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to decide after applications have closed on 28 November.

Clothing (Safety Regulations)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to reintroduce the Nightdress (Safety) Regulations 1967, (S.I., 1967, No. 839) during the current parliamentary Session.

Mr. Fletcher: It is my intention to revise and update the current Nightdress (Safety) Regulations. My Department is consulting interested parties on the scope of the new regulations. I hope they will be presented for parliamentary approval in the spring of next year. Copies of the latest consultation documents have been placed in the Library.

Domestic Accidents (Statistics)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were (a) injured and (b) killed in domestic premises as a result of faulty electrical plugs, sockets and switches during 1982, 1983 and 1984 to date; which were caused by fires; and which from other causes.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is not available in the form requested. In the following data on accidents involving electrical plugs, sockets and switches, it is not known whether these items were actually at fault. Electrocutions reported by the electricity boards:

1982 — 3
1983 — 5
1984 — 2 (to date)

A sample of 20 hospitals in England and Wales provided the following numbers of non-fatal accidents in the home involving electrical plugs, sockets and switches:

1982 — 31
1983 — 31
1984 — 18 (to date)

Fire brigade statistics for 1982—the latest available—give the following figures for fires in dwellings where the source of ignition is thought to be electrical wiring, but fires involving plugs, sockets and switches are not recorded separately:

	Number
Fire	3,298
Non-fatal casualties	202
Fatal casualties	15

British Shipbuilders (Ferry Building)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will encourage British Shipbuilders to develop an extensive and competitive ferry building capacity.

Mr. Butcher: British Shipbuilders' product strategy is a matter for the management of the corporation.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry endorsed on 25 July the corporation's primary aims of concentrating its resources on a stable, cost-effective mainstream merchant shipbuilding business. We, of course, encourage the corporation to concentrate on areas in which it can be competitive.

Spirits (Sales)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Office of Fair Trading to investigate the discontinuation of sales of certain spirits to supermarket chains, manufacturers or distributors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: Under the Resale Prices Act 1976 it is generally unlawful for a supplier to withhold supplies from a dealer solely because the dealer has resold goods below the recommended price. But where the dealer has used similar goods as loss leaders within the previous 12 months, supplies may lawfully be withheld. Complaints about possible breaches of the Act should be directed to the Office of Fair Trading. The Director General of Fair Trading has said that he is prepared to investigate specific allegations of misuse of market power.

Extended Guarantee Insurance

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce legislation to protect the interests of those people who on purchasing certain types of electrical consumer goods, took out extended guarantee insurance policies with companies which subsequently went into liquidation;

(2) if, in the light of the case of Cavalier Insurance Company, he has made any changes in the arrangements within his Department relating to authorising insurance companies and checking that they take business only within their authorised categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: My officials have written to retail trade associations drawing their attention to the Cavalier case, urging them to do all they can to ensure that their members check with the Department that any insurance company offering to provide extended warranty insurance is authorised under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 to carry out that type of business. A number of inquiries have been dealt with as a result. At present I do not see a need for further legislation in this area. Existing legislation will be vigorously enforced by my Department, which continues to make inquiries into any scheme coming to notice where the nature of any insurance arrangement is not clear.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report progress on the rolling programme of references of nationalised industries to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980.

Mr. Fletcher: During 1984, reports were published on London Transport bus maintenance, the South Wales Electricity Board and the Post Office letter post service. I have received the commission's report on the Yorkshire water authority and the revenue collection systems of four area electricity boards. These will both be published in due course.

The commission is currently investigating British Rail property management.

I have concluded that, in the light of the Government's proposals for radical reform of the bus industry and the introduction of competition that will result, it would not be appropriate to make the reference of an aspect of public sector bus services in Scotland that was announced as part of this year's programme.

I have also decided, in view of the increase in the Post Office's work load caused by the current industrial dispute at the Department of Health and Social Security, to defer into 1985 the reference of Post Office counter services that was planned for this year.

Our policy of subjecting the public sector to independent external scrutiny will be carried forward by a full programme of investigations in 1985. An aspect of the British Airports Authority will be referred early in 1985. This will be followed in the course of 1985 by references of aspects of the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Board, the British Steel Corporation and the water industry as well as the postponed reference of Post Office counter services. Details of each reference will be announced as it is made.

EC (Industry/Steel Council)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Community Industry/Steel Council held on 22 November.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, agreed on a mandate for the Commission to negotiate a voluntary restraint arrangement with the United States on exports of pipe and tube. The proposed arrangement, aimed at forestalling possible unilateral United States action, is intended to provide EC exporters with a guaranteed share of at least 7·6 per cent. of the United States market. The Commission reported to the Foreign Affairs Council on 27 November on the results of its discussions with the United States. My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, will be making a statement shortly to the House on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council.

The Council also considered a Commission proposal to make certain amendments to the ECSC rules on steel aids, intended to help achieve the central objective of terminating state aids to steelmakers by the end of 1985. This issue, together with questions concerning the steel quota arrangements and ferrous scrap will be further discussed at a Council planned for 17 December.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Extradition

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of warrants for extradition, in connection with terrorist offences, which have been issued to the authorities in the Republic of Ireland by the Royal Ulster Constabulary for which the person named therein has not yet been extradited.

Mr. Scott: Since 1971, 123 arrest warrants in connection with terrorist offences have been sent by the Royal Ulster Constabulary to the Garda Siochana in respect of 88 persons who have not been extradited. A number of these warrants have been refused by the courts and some are no longer extant, but 37 warrants are currently with the Irish authorities for execution in relation to three individuals in custody.

Dairy Industry

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dairymen and other workers in the dairy industry in Northern Ireland have registered as unemployed since the implementation of the European Community milk quota scheme.

Dr. Boyson: The information requested is not available. Unemployment figures for the milk and milk products sector of manufacturing industry are not separately available. However, I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that the number of unemployed agricultural workers has dropped from 2,806 in October 1983 to 2,711 in October 1984.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Supplies (Nitrate Pollution)

18. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the progress made in reducing the level of nitrate pollution of public water supplies.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised that there is no danger to public health from nitrate in public water supplies. I will be looking carefully at applications submitted to the Department for derogations from the nitrate level of 50 mg/litre set in the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption.

Local and Public Authorities (Land)

19. Mr. Benyon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce a scheme of incentives and penalties to restrain local and public authorities from hoarding land.

Mr. Gow: Public bodies are encouraged already to dispose of surplus land in order to augment their receipts, and local authorities which do so are able to supplement their capital expenditure allocations.

Part of the purpose of registers of unused or underused land of one acre or more is to expose the wastefulness of land hoarding. Public bodies may be directed to dispose of registered land. On 19 November the first directions were made in respect of four sites in Darlington, Sunderland, Oldham and Nottingham.

My right hon. Friend will make further directions whenever he considers that to be appropriate.

West Midlands Police Force

20. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the West Midlands metropolitan authorities about the reorganisation of the West Midlands police force after the abolition of the county council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Of the west midland districts who commented on the point, four favoured three separate police forces and one favoured all purpose authorities.

Local Authority Houses

21. Dr. Mawhinney asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to encourage local authorities to ensure that all their council houses are habitable and in use.

Mr. Gow: We take the condition of local authority housing and numbers of empty dwellings into account in making housing investment programme allocations. On 31 March 1984 25,300 local authority owned houses and flats had been empty for more than a year this is the highest figure ever recorded. It is a disgraceful figure. Responsibility rests with the local authorities concerned. The Department has just completed a study of empty housing. A copy of the report was placed in the Library last week. I will be writing to all local authorities about this.

Planning Zones

22. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report progress on the setting up of simplified planning zones.

Mr. Macfarlane: The responses to the consultation paper on simplified planning zones are now being considered.

Local Authorities (Finance)

23. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the terms of reference of his internal inquiries into local government finance and related matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 26 October at column 747.

40. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of local government current expenditure for 1984-85 will be accounted for by central Government funding according to latest estimates; and how this compares with the last financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: Based on returns from local authorities, aggregate Exchequer grant (rate support grant and relevant specific and supplementary grants, paid in respect of their relevant expenditure) represents 48·3 per cent. of total relevant expenditure in England in 1984-85, and 49·8 per cent. in 1983-84.

51. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of unspent capital receipts of local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available from the returns which we obtain from local authorities.

Nuclear Electromagnetic Pulse (Departmental Transport)

24. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate what proportion of Government transport provided by his Department would be immobilised by a nuclear electromagnetic pulse.

Sir George Young: The Department's vehicle fleet is widely spread throughout the United Kingdom. The proportion which would be immobilised by nuclear electromagnetic pulse would depend upon the nature, weight and distribution of any attack.

Houses (Improvement)

25. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent on improving the housing stock in the United Kingdom for each of the past five years.

Mr. Gow: Reliable information in the form requested is not available. However, the "English House Condition Survey" in 1981 indicated that £5·9 billion was spent by households in England on their homes in that year.

Merseyside County Council

26. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from people in Merseyside respecting his proposal to abolish the Merseyside county council; how many were favourable to his proposal and how many unfavourable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: An analysis of the responses we have received on "Streamlining the Cities" has been published.

Insulation Grants

27. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to ensure that pensioners are made aware of the availability to them of insulation grants.

Sir George Young: My Department has supplied local authorities with leaflets and booklets for free distribution, and posters for display. These lay particular emphasis on the availability under the homes insulation scheme of 90 per cent. grants to the elderly, and severely disabled, on low incomes, for loft insulation.

Home Improvement and Repair Grants

28. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local authorities to clarify the conditions under which they can make home improvement or repair grants available for rewiring as a separate category of works.

Sir George Young: No. My Department has already given general guidance on the home improvement grant legislation as it affects England. I do not believe that further guidance is necessary.

37. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding home improvement grants and their administration following the Housing Act 1980.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 18 May.

46. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many repair and improvement grants he expects to be made in 1985-86.

Sir George Young: This will depend on decisions by individual local authorities.

49. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the availability of improvement and repair grants.

Sir George Young: Local authorities administer the home improvement grant system and it is for them to decide how much of their resources to make available for grants, in the light of changing circumstances.

63. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people currently on waiting lists for housing improvement grants.

Sir George Young: Local authorities administer the home improvement grant system and are not required to submit such information to the Department.

Domestic Rate Revaluation

29. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue the consultation document on domestic rate revaluation referred to in Cmnd. 9008.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We shall be making an announcement on this in due course.

Northumbrian Water Authority

30. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects to be the impact of his proposals for targets for water authorities on the water rates levied in the Northumbrian water authority's area.

Mr. Macfarlane: I expect the increase to be above the general rate of inflation but I cannot be more precise because I have yet to reach agreement on financial targets with individual water authorities and the effect on charges will only become clear when the authority fixes its budget early next year.

House Condition Survey

31. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the next English house condition survey will be carried out.

Sir George Young: Final decisions about the timing of the next survey have not yet been taken. We remain committed to monitoring the condition of the housing stock.

Green Belt Land (Greater London)

32. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the amount of green belt in the Greater London area in 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Calculations made in early 1975 indicated that almost 85,000 acres of land in Greater London was designated as green belt. The Greater London development plan, approved in 1976, confirmed this area in broad terms. More detailed figures are not available for recent years.

Milton Keynes (Hotel Development)

33. Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise his policy concerning developments in Milton Keynes to permit hotel development.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend has no policy which restricts hotel development in Milton Keynes.

Water and Sewerage Pipes (Renewal)

34. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to ensure that water authorities and local authorities can engage in large scale renewal programmes for water and sewerage pipes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South-East (Mr. Hicks).

Acid Rain

35. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to investigate possible links between locations of acid rain blight and the sites of nuclear establishments.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised that recent research in the Federal Republic of Germany indicates that the contribution of nuclear establishments to acid deposition is negligible and that preliminary examination suggests that this result also applies in United Kingdom conditions. I will write to the hon. Member when this examination is complete.

Water Mains and Communication Pipes

36. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he takes, and what powers are available to him, to require water authorities to take responsibility for maintaining water mains and communication pipes up to the boundary of the property occupied by the user; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Under the Water Act 1945 water authorities are responsible for maintaining water mains and communication pipes. The link from those pipes to individual properties is the responsibility of the owners or occupiers of the premises served. My right hon. Friend is aware that this sometimes causes difficulties, but he has no power to transfer the responsibility to water authorities.

Local Government Reform

38. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of savings resulting from the proposals to abolish the metropolitan county councils and the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend's latest estimate can be found in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy, after the abolition of the Greater London council, to publish details of all parcels of land transferred by order under the Green Belt (London and Home Counties) Act 1938.

Mr. Macfarlane: The 1938 Act does not contain powers for the transfer of land by order. The GLC interest in land held under the 1938 Act is to be transferred at abolition by order under the proposed transitional and consequential powers in the Local Government Bill. Individual plots will only be specified where this is necessary.

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had with the trade unions about the implications for staff affected by his proposals to abolish the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today written to the chairman of the local government committee of the TUC, renewing my right hon. Friend's earlier invitations to the unions to discuss these matters, and enclosing a detailed paper which sets out the staffing aspects of our proposals. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

75. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends publishing the Bill dealing with the proposed abolition of the metropolitan county councils and the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Local Government Bill was published on 22 November.

Unfit Houses

39. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes in England are unfit for human habitation.

Sir George Young: The most recent estimate available appears in table A of part 1 of the "English House Condition Survey, 1981", a copy of which is in the Library.

Homeless Persons

41. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been accepted as being homeless so far in the current calendar year; and how this figure compares with 1978.

Sir George Young: The number of households accepted by local authorities as homeless in the first half of 1984 was 41,400 compared with 26,500 in the first half of 1978. It is estimated that about a quarter of this increase was associated with changes in statistical procedures.

Housing Subsidy

42. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing authorities in England will be receiving general housing subsidy in 1985-86.

Sir George Young: I am unable to estimate the likely entitlement of individual authorities to housing subsidy in 1985-86.

Consultative Council on Local Government Finance

43. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when is the next meeting of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance which will receive details of the 1985-86 rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We hope to be able to announce details of the 1985-86 rate support grant settlement as usual in mid-December but I cannot be more precise at this stage. I anticipate that there will be a meeting of the consultative council on local government finance on the day that my right hon. Friend makes his statement to the House; officials are consulting the local authority associations about the arrangements.

Rate Support Grant

44. Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes announcing the details of the 1985-86 rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We hope to be able to make an announcement as usual in mid-December.

Multi-occupation Houses

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans any legislation to force local authorities to deal with dangerous conditions in houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Gow: Local authorities have wide powers which enable them to control the condition of houses in multiple occupation. Statutory Instrument 1981/1576 imposes duties in respect of means of escape from fire in specified houses in multiple occupation. The need for further measures will be considered in the light of research which my Department is carrying out into the use and condition of such accommodation.

Housing Mobility

47. Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to introduce further legislation to increase housing mobility.

Mr. Gow: When the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 came into force on 26 August, secure tenants were given a statutory right to exchange their homes. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present for further legislation on this subject.

Nuclear Shelters

48. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he gives to local authorities in considering planning applications for domestic, industrial and public nuclear shelters.

Mr. Macfarlane: None.

Housing Investment Programme

50. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total of housing investment programme bids which have been made to him for 1985-86.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 20 November to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) at column 151-52.

Housing Defects Act

52. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he has taken on the implementation of the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley) and to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 12 November at columns 133-34.

62. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Building Societies Association to discuss the Housing Defects Act.

Sir George Young: The Department's discussions with the Building Societies Association and the National House-Building Council about arrangements intended to enable building societies to lend with confidence on the security of repaired prefabricated reinforced concrete houses are continuing as a matter of urgency. My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement on the outcome of these discussions in the near future.

Atmospheric Pollution

53. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: Atmospheric pollution in the United Kingdom has been dramatically reduced over the past 30 years. The Government intend to achieve further reductions in emissions of specific pollutants from both fixed sources and vehicles in the years ahead. To this end my Department supports a growing programme of research and monitoring, is reviewing existing control legislation, and plays a full part in international collaborative work.

House Building

54. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority homes he expects to be started in 1985-86; and how this figure compares with 1978-79.

Sir George Young: My Department has made no estimate for 1985-86. In 1978-79, 62,000 dwellings were started for local authorities in England.

Block Grant

55. Mr. Cohorn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes making any changes to the block grant system following the recommendations made in the Audit Commission report on block grant.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: When the report was published, my right hon. Friend said that our immediate reaction was that whilst most of its recommendations seem reasonable, we had doubts about a number of arguments on which they were based. We are examining the report in detail. There are no present plans to change the arrangements for distributing block grant. My right hon. Friend announced on 9 October that Department of the Environment Ministers would be embarking on a series of studies into various aspects of local government finance, including the rate support grant system.

Rates Act 1984

56. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes visiting each of the local authorities designated under the Rates Act 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend and other Ministers from this Department have visited a number of the areas covered by the authorities selected for rate limitation over the past few months in the course of their normal duties. None of these visits has been arranged specifically as the result of the authority's designation for rate limitation.

Nuclear Shelters

57. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require that all new public buildings be constructed with cellars capable of being adapted as nuclear shelters.

65. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he can give any financial inducement to encourage the inclusion of nuclear shelters in the construction of new domestic, public or industrial buildings.

Sir George Young: No. Such measures would not be justified and would increase building costs substantially.

Local Authorities (Competitive Tendering)

58. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the deadline for comments upon the consultation paper on the extension of compulsory competitive tendering for local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: An announcement of a final date for comments will be made when the consultation paper is published, but I hope to be able to allow at least two months for responses to our proposals.

Football Hooliganism

59. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to implement the recommendations of his recent working party report on football hooliganism.

69. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from interested parties following the publication of "Football Spectator Violence" by his Department.

78. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the round of consultations following the publication of the official working group's report on football spectator violence.

Mr. Macfarlane: I launched the Government's consultation on the report — "Football Spectator Violence: Report of an Official Working Group"—on 16 August. With Ministerial colleagues from the Home Office, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department of Transport I am holding a series of meetings with representative organisations who wish to contribute to the debate. At my invitation, the Football Association is represented at these meetings.

By mid-December the Government will have met 17 organisations representing all sectors of the game of football as well as the police, magistrates, press and researchers. I am also asking these organisations to submit detailed written comments within the next few weeks. In addition, my Department has received 32 written responses to the report from other organisations and individuals.

The Government, with the football authorities, will consider all the representations received during this consultation and will then make a further statement on its conclusions.

Land Register

60. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of land are recorded on the local authority land register for July 1984 as being vacant, dormant or derelict land in public ownership.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant).

Local Authorities (Expenditure Limits)

61. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he expects to announce expenditure limits for those local authorities designated under the Rates Act 1984.

Mr. Waldegrave: We announced expenditure levels for authorities designated under the Rates Act 1984 at the time of the rate support grant announcement in July 1984. We hope to announce rate limits for these authorities at the time of the RSG settlement in mid-December.

International Garden Festival Site, Liverpool

64. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the International Garden Festival site in Liverpool.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 23 October at column 552-53.

Great Crested Newt

66. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council or other sources as to the declining population of the crested newt.

Mr. Waldegrave: None directly. I am however aware of some cases where the British Herpetological Society is in liaison with the owners of sites over deferring work so as to allow newts to be relocated.

Common Land

67. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on public inquiries set up by him to limit and restrict access on common land.

Mr. MacFarlane: When an application is made for an order to impose limitations and conditions as to the exercise of rights of public access to common land, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has discretion to hold a public inquiry to assist him in determination of the application. A decision whether or not to hold such an inquiry is taken in the light of the representations received in each case.

Grant-related Expenditure Assessments

68. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an independent inquiry into the effectiveness of grant-related expenditure assessments.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no case for an inquiry into the effectiveness of the grant-related expenditure assessments. GREs are reviewed annually and a development programme is drawn up in consultation with the local authority associations. As a result of the work this year, I hope to introduce a number of improvements to the way in which we allocate GREs, in the forthcoming RSG Settlement for 1985-86. I am satisfied that the GRE system represents a vast improvement on the pre-1981-82 system of need assessments.

Water Metering

70. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any water authority proposes to introduce further trials, or complete introduction, of compulsory universal metering within their areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacFarlane: I understand that a number of water authorities are looking at the possibility of metering trials within their areas. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 19 November at column 31.

Council Property Sales

71. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council properties have been sold under the right to buy legislation; and how many of these have been flats.

Sir George Young: From October 1980 to September 1984 about 426,000 dwellings were sold by local authorities and new towns in England under the right to buy legislation. About 13,000 of these dwellings were flats.

Public Bodies (Land Holdings)

72. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards compiling a full list of developable land owned by public bodies in cities.

Mr. Macfarlane: The registers of unused and underused public land which have been published under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 include developable land in cities. Sites of an acre or more are listed, and nearly half the land has been assessed as having potential for development.

Unemployed Construction Workers

73. Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of unemployed construction workers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The collection of unemployment statistics classified by individual industries has been discontinued.

Figures for employment in the industry are available. In 1983, 1,084,000 employees were in employment in the construction industry; and there were 413,000 self-employed.

The best prospects for increasing employment in the construction industry depend upon the continuing success of the Government's economic strategy — particularly firm control of the money supply, public expenditure and public borrowing, leading to lower interest rates and greater industrial confidence. These policies were reaffirmed in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Output in the construction industry is growing. In 1983, measured at 1980 prices, output totalled £21·1 billion, an increase of 4·2 per cent. on 1982. In the first six months of 1984, output totalled £10·87 billion, an increase of 6 per cent. compared with the first 6 months of 1983. In the first 9 months of 1983, new orders for the construction industry totalled £9·62 billion. In the first 9 months of 1984, the equivalent figure was £10·16 billion, an increase of 5·6 per cent. in real terms.

This recovery is being led by the private sector, with new orders for industrial and commercial work in the first nine months of the year no less than 20 per cent. higher than in the comparable period of 1983.

Leicester (Rate Capping)

74. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has sought discussions with Leicester city council about his rate capping proposals for the city and their intended effect on the services provided by that council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have repeatedly emphasised that it has over the last few months been open to any authority designated for rate limitation to approach me for a redetermination of their expenditure level. However time is running out, since I shall soon have to start the process of fixing rate limits.

I have not received any such approach from Leicester city council. I can only therefore assume that it is content to plan its spending within the expenditure level proposed.

Thamesmead

76. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to make an official visit to Thamesmead.

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction visited Thamesmead on 22 March and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State did so on 18 May. I intend to visit Thamesmead shortly, and have accepted an invitation to so so.

Islington

77. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on future central Government spending plans to meet the social needs of the people of Islington.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Islington inner city partnership has an allocation from my Department of £10·4 million in 1984-85, supported by 75 per cent. urban progamme grant. This is in addition to Islington council's current entitlement to £6·493 million block grant for 1984-85. If the council had met its expenditure target it would have received £24·011 million block grant this year. I am not yet in a position to announce urban programme allocations, or the rate support grant settlement, for 1985-86.

North-East Hampshire Structure Plan

79. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the inspector's report on the examination in public into the north-east Hampshire structure plan is likely to be published.

Mr. Macfarlane: The report of the panel who conducted the examination in public into the proposed alteration to the north-east Hampshire structure plan has been received by my right hon. Friend who is now considering it. The report will be published at the time that the proposed modifications to the alteration are advertised, when there will be an opportunity for objections and representations to be made.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report the distribution of 4,000 jobs created within the area of the London Docklands Development Corporation, as stated by the Minister for Housing and Construction on 20 November, showing the jobs lost, jobs created and jobs transferred into the area of the enterprise zone on the Isle of Dogs, and the remaining parts of the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Newham, respectively, together with their respective totals.

Sir George Young: The distribution of new jobs, that is jobs which had not existed in Docklands at the time the LDDC was established in July 1981, is as follows:

	Number
Enterprise Zone	*1,302
Rest of Tower Hamlets	1,629
Newham	1,008
Southwark	131

* All in Tower Hamlets

In addition, 59 jobs have been created as a result of LDDC funding of community project giving a total of 4,129. The corporation estimates that at least another 1,500 people are engaged in construction work in the area.

No comprehensive information is available on which of these jobs have been transferred from elsewhere although, as I told the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Mr. Mikardo) in an answer I gave on 26 October at column 747 a survey of the enterprise zone covering the period June 1982—May 1983 found that of 67 incoming firms 37 were new, 10 had come from elsewhere in Greater London and 1 from outside Greater London. The origin of the remaining 19 were unknown.

The number of notified redundancies in Docklands in the period July 1981 to March 1984 was 1,739. A breakdown of this figure on a geographical basis could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that the current length of time involved in issuing stop orders under section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 is sufficiently short to be effective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am generally satisfied with the effectiveness of the current procedures for making nature conservation orders under section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act, which temporarily prohibit certain damaging activities on particular sites and provide extra time for the owner or occupier and the Nature Conservancy Council to negotiate mutally acceptable arrangements for the management of the land. I appreciate the need for speed in such cases, and am keeping the matter under review.

Stansted-Heathrow (Inquiries)

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the inspector's report on the Stansted and Heathrow fifth terminal inquiries.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I have received the report today. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced during the debate on Second Reading of the Civil Aviation Bill on Wednesday 21 November at column 304, we intend to publish the report as soon as it has been printed.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the number and average amount of rate rebates granted in England and Wales in 1982-83, in total and by rating district.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library the information requested by my hon. Friend for 1982-83, the last year for which figures on this basis will be available. Rate rebates are now subsumed in the housing benefit scheme for which DHSS is responsible. The figures do not include rate rebates paid in respect of supplementary benefit recipients under the housing benefit scheme, following its introduction in November 1982, or rate rebates paid under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978.

Dog Licensing

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultative document on dog licensing.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have today published a paper setting out proposals which would put an end to the situation which exists at present whereby the dog licence costs more to issue than it raises in revenue. This follows criticisms made by the Public Accounts Committee and the Select Committee on the Environment of the absurdity of the existing national dog licensing arrangements. Whilst the paper reflects the Government's preference for giving local authorities power to establish their own licensing and registration schemes, we are anxious to consider the views of all those with an interest before reaching final decisions. Our aim is to promote responsible dog ownership and at the same time to enable local authorities and others to deal more effectively with dog nuisance. Comments on the proposals will be welcome. The paper is being sent to the local authority associations, animal welfare and veterinary organisations and others with an interest. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many environmental health officers are employed in his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Right to Buy

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to amend the Housing Act 1980 and the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 to extend the right-to-buy provisions to enable tenants to purchase lock-up garages which they have previously rented, or presently rent, with the hereditament which has been the subject of right to buy procedures.

Sir George Young: The position under the 1980 and 1984 Acts is that a tenant has the right to buy any land which is "let together with" the dwellinghouse. He can also request the landlord to include in the sale of any land which "is or has been used for the purposes of the dwelling-house".

The landlord must agree to such a request if it is reasonable in all the circumstances for the land to be included in the sale. Where a tenant has completed the purchase of his home, he has no separate right to buy a garage. We have no present plans for further amendments to extend tenants' rights to buy garages.

Tenants' Exchange Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each completed year of operation since the start of the tenants' exchange scheme on 1 April 1982, (a) the vote provision for the scheme, (b) the actual cost of the scheme and (c) the number of exchanges effected through the scheme (i) as reported by housing authorities in the housing investment programme returns and (ii) as a percentage of the total number of registrations under the scheme, including duplications.

Sir George Young: The figures for my Department are:

	1982-83	1983-84
(a)	£200,000	£300,000
(b)	£174,000	£190,000
(c) (i)	About 4,000	About 4,400
(ii)	6·9 per cent.	17·8 per cent.

Note: Item (c)(ii) refers to registrations accepted during each year.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of registrations under the tenants' exchange scheme from 29 November 1983 to the most recent date for which figures are available, net of renewals; and if he will give an estimate of the number of renewals.

Sir George Young: There were 33,876 registrations under the scheme between 29 November 1983 and 31 October 1984. Between 1 June 1984 (when they were first recorded separately) and 31 October 1984, there have been 7,909 renewals.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of civil servants now working in his Department on (a) duties associated with the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils and (b) rates limitation, listing in each case the numbers and ranks of offices and the estimated cost per year of each group.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1984 c. 153]: The number of staff working on abolition of the GLC/MCCs in my Department, including those administrating the controls in sections 7 to 9 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984, is as follows:

Grade	Estimated full-time equivalents
Grade 2	0·2
Grade 3	2·0
Grade 4	0·5
Grade 5	7·3
Grade 6	1·2
Senior Legal Assistant	2·5
Principal	15·0
Principal Engineer	0·8
Principal Planning Officer	0·4
Principal Research Officer	0·9
Statistician	0·5
Economic Adviser	2·0
PPTO Estates Officer	0·3
Senior Executive Officer	3·1
Senior Planning Officer	0·3
Senior Research Officer	0·9
Research Officer	0·1
Higher Executive Officer	13·5
Executive Officer	8·9
Clerical Officer/Assistant	12·4
Senior Personal Secretary	2·0
Personal Secretary	6·5
Typist	2·0
Total	83·3

The cost, including accommodation, of employing these staff for a whole year would be approximately £1·9 million (1984 prices).

In relation to rate limitation, the position has not changed significantly from that given in the answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West on 26 July, at column 810-12. Arrangements have now been made for responsibility for the work that will be involved in the rate limitation procedures covering the 18 selected authorities for 1985-86 to be distributed among officials who will also be responsible for case work arising from the rate support grant. The number of officials playing some part in these procedures has therefore increased, but the commitment of staff resources overall remains unchanged. The cost of this level of input, including accommodation, on an annual basis would be approximately £0·27 million (1984 prices).

DEFENCE

NATO Exercises

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercises carried out in Europe are made known to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Stanley: In accordance with the provisions of the 1975 Helsinki final act, all major military manoeuvres in Europe exceeding a total of 25,000 troops are notified by the NATO nations involved to all other states who participate in the CSCE process. In addition, NATO nations frequently notify smaller manoeuvres although there is no abolsute requirement to do so.

South Georgia (New Zealand Expedition)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance was given by Her Majesty's forces to the current New Zealand expedition to South Georgia.

Mr. Stanley: Members of the expedition were allowed to travel to the Falkland Islands on a Royal Air Force airbridge flight and onwards to South Georgia aboard a Royal Fleet Auxiliary. The expedition will be charged the full cost for both journeys.

Follow-on Force Attack

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence how the follow-on force attack policy differs from existing NATO strategy for responding to an attack.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the Adjournment debate of the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 31 October, in which I made it clear that follow-on forces attack is concerned with implementation of existing NATO strategy and is not a departure from it.

International Year of Peace

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions his Department intends to make towards the United Nations International Year of Peace, 1986.

Mr. Stanley: The Government's main contributions to the United Nations International Year of Peace will be in maintaining peace through the complementary policies of defence, balanced and verifiable arms control and the peaceful settlement of disputes. The Government will seek to do this in 1986 as in other years.

Long Range Stand-off Missile

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report as full a summary of the provisions of the memorandum of understanding referred to in the answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 83, concerning the conventionally armed long range stand-off missile, as may be provided without prejudicing national security.

Mr. Butler: The memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom, the United States of America and the Federal Republic of Germany concerning a collaborative feasibility study of a long range stand-off missile system (LRSOM) provides that the objective of the programme will be to produce a joint report containing future programme recommendations for subsequent consideration by the participating Governments. This report will assess:

(a) the operational, technical, financial and general feasibility of developing and producing a LRSOM to meet the NATO staff target;

(b) the technical, financial, and general feasibility of undertaking development and production of a LRSOM on a multi-national collaborative basis; and

(c) whether, if feasible, a multinational collaborative LRSOM would be worth while, compared with other options available to the participating Governments.

The memorandum of understanding also contains the detailed arrangements for management and financing of the feasibility study, contracting, information transfer, security and termination.

Mr. Harry Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will publish in the Official Report as full a summary of national studies of a conventionally armed long range stand-off missile referred to in his answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 83, as may be provided without prejudicing national security.

Mr. Butler: A summary of these studies could not be published without prejudice to national security.

RAF Tornado Crash

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the circumstances of the Royal Air Force Tornado crash near Schwienfurt in Germany on 8 November.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the crash occurred during a routine training sortie following action by the pilot to avoid collision with another aircraft. A summary of the findings of the board of inquiry will be released, in the normal way, once the accidence investigation is completed.

Naval Refits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the naval refits that have been put out to private contractors during 1984.

Mr. Lee: Contracts were placed during 1984 for the refits of HMS Euryalus and Otter, 12 Royal Fleet Auxiliaries, a floating dock and a tug. Contracts were also let for lesser work (including periodic overhaul) on other vessels, principally harbour craft and pontoons.

Naval Dockyards (In-house services)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list which in-house services in (a) Rosyth and (b) Plymouth, Devonport have been contracted out since 1979; and what is his estimate of the numbers of jobs affected.

Mr. Lee: Of the traditional in-house services, only cleaning tasks have been contracted out since 1979. This has produced manpower savings of 63 and 98 at Rosyth and Devonport respectively. Most of the displaced staff have been redeployed and redundancies have been limited to 51, all at Devonport.

Members' Questions

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, what criteria he uses in declining to answer questions on the grounds of disproportionate effort which would be involved.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1984, c. 412]: It has been the practice of all Governments that answers to parliamentary questions need to be prepared with the same regard to economy as applies to other aspects of Government business. It has been a long-standing convention that a Minister may decline to give a substantive reply to a question if he considers that the cost of providing that reply, mainly in terms of the cost of staff time involved, would be disproportionate to its value to Parliament and the public.

Naval Log Books

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal interval between the removal of a signals log from a vessel returning from patrol and its destruction; and where that log is kept in that interval.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c.335]: Signal logs will normally remain on the vessel concerned. If removed during a maintenance or refitting period, the ship's company would be responsible for their safekeeping.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Blood Products

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement regarding progress on the upgrading of the blood products laboratory at Elstree; whether he is satisfied that the amount of money allocated for this programme will enable it to be carried out effectively on schedule; and when he expects the United Kingdom will be self-sufficient in blood products.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The building of the new production unit at blood products laboratory, Elstree is progressing satisfactorily, and is presently due to be completed by the original target date of January 1986.

This new production unit, when completed, will have the capacity to meet the estimated needs of the National Health Service in England and Wales for all blood products. Scotland and Northern Ireland are virtually self-sufficient already.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to increase British production of factor 8 and 9 blood products and reduce dependence on United States imports.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government decided in 1982 that self-sufficiency in all blood products, including Factors 8 and 9, should be achieved, and that the blood products laboratory at Elstree should be rebuilt to provide the capacity to manufacture the blood product needs of the National Health Service in England and Wales. Work commenced in May 1983 and the project is presently on time for completion in January 1986.

Housing Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why information on the take-up of housing benefit supplement is not available.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the take-up of benefits is normally derived from analysis of family expenditure survey data. Housing benefit supplement was introduced in April 1983 and the 1983 family expenditure survey is not yet available.

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number, and proportion, of health authorities which operate a call and recall system for cervical cytology; and whether he has received any representations advocating the national implementation of such a system.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not keep information centrally on call and recall systems. We have asked health authorities to recall at five-yearly intervals women over the age of 35 who have at some time presented for a smear test and women who have had three or more pregnancies. We have had some representations suggesting that local systems which call women for a smear test might be more effective. Health authorities may introduce such a system if they decide that it is a local priority and they have the necessary resources. Our Department is currently funding research into the effectiveness of a local call system.

Dogs (Infection)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he makes of the spread of disease and infection via the dog population of the United Kingdom; and how many cases of disease and infection in humans each year are caused by dogs;

(2) if he will initiate a publicity campaign to foster public understanding of the way in which dogs can spread infection, in particular in relation to the need to observe strict hygiene in contact with dogs.

Mr. John Patten: Figures are not available centrally on the incidence of disease associated with dogs, but there is no evidence to suggest that, if correctly managed and cared for, they constitute a significant risk to human health. Veterinarians advise dog owners on the care and management of dogs, and the Health Education Council and several voluntary and other organisations have produced literature on responsible pet ownership and the necessary hygiene precautions. We do not, therefore, consider a publicity campaign necessary.

NHS Property (Security)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the measures taken since 1979 to improve security of National Health Service property as shown in the letter of 14 November from the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) to the hon. Member for North Norfolk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. My letter of 14 November was as follows

Ralph Howell Esq. MP

I attach a list of the main initiatives we have taken to improve the security of NHS property. The list is not exhaustive because security considerations often form part of wider activities and it is not possible to search through all the pieces of action which might have had security aspects. I hope you will find the list useful—I think it does show that great attention has been given and is being given to security by our Department and by the NHS.

KENNETH CLARKE

PS I do appreciate that we now want all this to begin to show some results.

Security: List of DHSS Initiatives

December 1980

Report of Central Management Services Study on Control of linen services.

September 1981
Report of second Central Management Services Study to identify whether losses in system were real.
1981
Departmental Supplies Information Group reported on control of stores by computer based systems followed by issue of Supplies Council Circular (81)3.
1982
A working group of NHS Treasurers reviewed a 1967 report on inventories.
November 1982
Deloittes, Haskins and Sells commissioned to study losses and security of supplies. Reported March 1983.
December 1982
HC(82)19 issued asking health authorities to review their procedures and to develop security strategies.
July 1983
FM(7)83 issued to NHS Treasurers asking them to produce statement to enable identification of unexplained losses.
30 November 1983
Report of Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs issued to health authorities who were asked to comment on improvements in security.
January 1984
Reports received from Regional Health Authorities giving progress on production of security strategies.
May 1984
FM(5)84 to NHS Treasurers asking them to record and report to the Department all discrepancies and unexplained issues of linen and other equipment and property.
1983 and 1984
Department contributed to National Association of Health Authorities Manual on Security.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the measures being taken to improve security of National Health Service property are in proportion to the actual losses from fraud and theft incurred in recent years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We believe that there is scope for improving security in the NHS and that the measures being taken will be cost-effective.

NHS (Theft and Fraud)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that losses to the National Health Service due to theft and fraud were no greater than 0·007 per cent. of total National Health Service expenditure in 1982-83.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figure represents only those losses known to be due to theft, fraud and criminal damage and we have no reason to doubt its accuracy. Undetected thefts will naturally not be reflected in the losses statement although, in future, unexplained losses will be accounted for.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to the national insurance fund of abolishing the employers' contribution for young employees up to the age of 20 years.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated cost to the national insurance fund of abolishing the employers' contribution for young people up to the age of 20 years is £550 million. The estimate is based on 1984-85 contribution rates and 1981-82 numbers and characteristics of contributors under 20 years of age, which are the latest available.

Invalidity Pensioners

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services at what level the earnings disregard for the wife of an invalidity pensioner would have to be to set to restore its real value at November 1978; and what would be the net cost of restoring it to this level.

Mr. Newton: If the £45 disregard had been maintained in line with prices since 1978 the present level would be £79·50. The net cost in 1983-84 of maintaining the value would have been about £35 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many invalidity pensioners receive a dependency addition (a) for a wife and (b) for a husband; and what is the highest earnings disregard which could be set if a common earnings disregard were introduced on a nil cost basis.

Mr. Newton: The most recent statistics available show that, at March 1983, there were 323,000 invalidity pensioners with an addition for a wife, and 100 with an addition for a husband. Because of industrial action affecting the computer, these are the latest available figures. The entitlement conditions for dependent husbands were, however, eased from November 1983 and additions for such dependants are now likely to be more numerous.

I shall reply to the latter part of the question as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the net cost of introducing a common earnings rule for adult dependants of invalidity pensioners at (a) £45 a week and (b) at the real value of the earnings disregarded at November 1978.

Mr. Newton: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Benefits (Take-up)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been spent by his Department in each of the past five years on take-up of the following benefits (a) statutory sick pay, (b) family income supplement, (c) national insurance benefits, (d) supplementary benefits and (e) housing benefits.

Mr. Whitney: The amounts spent in each of the past five financial years on promoting take-up of the benefits listed is in the table:

	1979-80 £'000	1980-81 £'000	1981-82 £'000	1982-83 £'000	1983-84 £'000

* Pre-introduction advertising directed at employers.
† Rent and rate rebates advertising by Department of the Environment.
‡ Approximately Estimated figure.
In addition to expenditure on publicity, the Department takes other steps to ensure that those concerned have access to information about benefits to which they may be entitled. These include: information about other benefits at the back of order books, local media activity by our regional information officers, the new freephone information and advice service, and improvements in service to the public in the Department's network of local offices.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the level of the supplementary benefit income disregard in November if its real value was equivalent to November 1974.

Mr. Whitney: The retail price index for November 1984 is not yet available; on the basis of the RPI for October 1984 the information is as follows:

	November 1974 £	October 1984 £
Disregard of earnings of person required to register and of other income.	1	3·11
Disregard of earnings of person not required to register and of war and industrial disablement pensions.	2	6·21

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments have been made to households in receipt of supplementary benefit in each of the last five years for which figures are available for (a) draught- proofing materials (b) hot water cylinder jackets and (c) space heating appliances under regulations 18, 9(s) and 9(d), respectively, of the Social Security Supplementary Benefit (Single Payment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Whitney: No information is available on the number of single payments of supplementary benefit given for hot water cylinder jackets or space heating appliances, or on the number of payments given for draught-proofing materials before 1981. According to the annual statistical inquiries conducted in December 1981 and December 1982 respectively, fewer than 1,000 payments were made for draught-proofing materials in 1981, and about 2,500 payments were made in 1982. Because these figures relate to single payments made during the 12 months preceding the date of each inquiry to people still in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of that inquiry, they are under-estimates of the total number of single payments made during the year. Figures are not yet available on the number of payments made for draught-proofing materials in 1983.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any plans to include day cases on statistical returns of waiting lists.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Services information steering group has recommended in its first report that each district health authority should submit a regular return on all patients awaiting elective admission including those not intended to say in hospital overnight. Health authorities have been asked to plan on the basis that the first report should be implemented by April 1987.

Office of Chief Scientist

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he established his inquiry into the functions of the office of the chief scientist in his Department; what are its terms of reference; when he expects it to report; and if he will publish the evidence submitted to it.

Mr. Fowler: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Changes)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the proposed increase in National Health Service charges; when they are to take effect; and whether they will include increased dental charges.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Changes in NHS charges will be announced in due course.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which district health authorities provide screening for sickle cell anaemia as part of routine post-natal testing; and which others have plans to provide it.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally.

Dentists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each family practitioner committee area for 1979 and each subsequent year the number of patients registered with dentists, the number of dental practices and the ratio between the two.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Patients are not registered with dentists nor are figures available on practices. The tables therefore give for each family practitioner committee area in England the total number of dentists wholly or mainly in practice in each area and the ratio of persons per dentist at 30 September for the years 1979-1983:

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why persons in receipt of family income supplement whose annual awards fall due for renewal from December onwards will not receive the increased level on 27th November, but must wait until their annual revision becomes due; how many persons will be disadvantaged by this new arrangement; and what is the longest time any family must wait until receiving the new award.

Mr. Newton: FIS awards, once made, continue for a year regardless of any changes in the recipient's circumstances, including increases in income. In view of this, we concluded that it was anomalous that awards should be uprated during their currency, especially because the result of doing so involves increasing benefit for many families whose circumstances would not justify it at the time.

It is estimated that about 210,000 FIS awards were in payment in November. Transitional arrangements were made which covered some 10,000 families, who will be able to take full advantage of the new rates if they so wish. Of the remaining 200,000 it is estimated that some 40,000 would have been entitled to a partial uprating and some 50,000 to a full uprating, if their awards had been reassessed at the time of the uprating.

The longest a family may have to wait before being able to qualify for an award under the new levels is 51 weeks, although the average is 23 weeks.

AIDS (Blood Donors)

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome are known to have occurred in England; what specialist medical advice he has so far received; what consultation he has had with blood transfusion centres regarding steps to be taken to ensure that blood donors are free of this disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 19 November, 85 subsequently confirmed cases in England had been reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre (CDSC). We receive medical advice from CDSC and specialists in the relevant fields of medicine including blood transfusion, genito-urinary medicine, immunology and oncology. After consulting the Advisory Committee on the National Blood Transfusion Service we have decided to ask all regional blood transfusion centres to issue, on an individual basis to all blood donors, a revised leaflet "AIDS and how it concerns blood donors". This leaflet reinforces our previous advice that persons at high risk of transmitting the AIDS virus should not donate blood.

RHAs (Managers)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the names of the managers so far appointed to the regional health authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The regional general managers appointed so far are:

Mr. B. Edwards—Trent RHA
Mr. G. Greenshields—North Western RHA
Mr. D. Hague—Northern RHA
Miss C. Hawkins—South Western RHA
Mr. J. Hoare—Wessex RHA
Mr. T. Hunt—North East Thames RHA
Mr. A. Kember—South West Thames RHA
Mr. D. I. Kenny—North West Thames RHA
Mr. P. Le Fleming—South East Thames RHA
Mr. D. Nichol—Mersey RHA
Mr. K. Punt—Yorkshire RHA
Dr. R. Rue—Oxford RHA

Appointments in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has made to liaise regularly with representatives of the central committee for hospital medical services and of medical executive committees with a view to assessing tasks performed by regional general managers in the course of their appointments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our Department already has long-standing arrangements through the Chief Medical Officer for regular liaison with the Central Committee for Hospital Medical Services, which would allow representatives of the committee to raise any particular points of concern on the general management arrangements.

Tuberculosis

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of tuberculosis diseases which have occurred during the last five years were found to be carried by homeless alcoholics.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not held centrally on the proportion of people with tuberculosis who are homeless alcoholics.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he is going to take to ensure that the incidence of tuberculosis amongst hospital medical staff is fully documented;

(2) what plans he has for making sure that the hospital staff exposed to risks of contracting tuberculosis receive regular chest radiographs; and what provisions he will make for the purpose of setting up screening programmes for professional foreign visitors attached to National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. John Patten: Guidance was issued to health authorities in 1978. We are looking into the specific points the hon. Member raises and will send her a full reply later.

Consensus Team Management

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how often he will be initiating studies to be conducted by his Department into the effects of the implementation of the Griffith's report on consensus team management.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to initiate such studies.

Griffiths Report

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications were submitted by doctors for appointment to the regional general management posts created on the basis of the contents of the Griffith's report; and how many doctors have been appointed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of 12 regional general managers appointed so far, one is a doctor. All information about individual candidates for general manager appointments is, and should remain, confidential.

Cigarettes and Tobacco (Tar Content)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has for modifying further the tar yield of cigarettes resulting from the poor effect of low tar cigarettes on mortality from coronary disease.

Mr. John Patten: In seeking to continue reducing the tar delivery of cigarettes, the Government's main purpose is further to reduce the risk of lung cancer to smokers. Current declining lung cancer mortality rates among men attest to the value of this policy. The voluntary agreement on tobacco product modification concluded in March of this year provides for a further reduction from 15mg to 13mg in the average tar yield of cigarettes over the next four years.

The link between deaths from coronary heart disease and smoking is more complex, since smoking is only one of the risk factors involved. New work in this field, fostered by the independent scientific committee on smoking and health at the cardiovascular research unit at Dundee, is due to start on 1 December 1984.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he will make available for the purpose of further investigations or studies into which constituents in tobacco are the greatest contributor to coronary heart disease.

Mr. John Patten: Under the tobacco product modification agreement the tobacco industry has already provided £3 million for independent research proposed by the independent scientific committee on smoking and health into this and other aspects of the effects of modified tobacco products. The industry has recently agreed to make up to a further £1 million a year available over the next four years for this purpose.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what sectors will benefit most from the additional £700 million which he has promised to spend on the National Health Service in the next financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend has announced that the Government will spend an extra £700 million on the NHS in Great Britain in 1985-86 compared with 1984-85. This total includes additional revenue and capital spending for health authorities and additional spending on family practitioner services and the centrally financed services.

The largest additional amount is for health authorities' revenue, which in England will increase by £500 million compared with 1984-85 and is £80 million higher than the planned expenditure in the last public expenditure White Paper. This is a cash increase of 5½ per cent., 1 per cent. more than forecast inflation. Health authorities will also have available to them the benefits of their cost improvement programmes on which we are looking for further progress. They will be required to meet all their costs including all pay and price increases from within these resources. In future, the Government do not intend to increase cash limits for additional pay or price increases.

With these additional resources, we expect health authorities to continue to improve services and to reduce waiting lists.

Fluoridation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the investigation being conducted by the Medical Research Council into the findings of the report by Japanese researchers on fluoridation to be completed.

Mr. John Patten: The investigation by the Medical Research Council is part of a programme of research which has been commissioned by the Department. Some of the work has been completed and we anticipate that most of the remaining results will be available early in the new year.

Drugs (Generic Prescribing)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to allow doctors to prescribe drugs on the prescribed list if there is no suitable generic substitute.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The consultations which I am undertaking with the medical profession and other interested parties are designed to ensure that, within the categories of drugs to be included in the limited list prescribers will be able to choose from an adequate range of alternative generic drugs to meet their patients' needs.

Newcastle Computer Dispute

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the social security uprating has been affected by the dispute at his Department's Newcastle central office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I am glad to report that, despite this deplorable strike, Newcastle central office has successfully completed the issue of 7 million new front covers for pension books, and has also issued either order books containing the new rates or new front covers to all recipients of child benefit paid by order book. Arrangements have also been made for the new rates to be paid to beneficiaries paid by automated credit transfer and, where appropriate, to pensioners living overseas. Together with the work carried out by DHSS local offices and North Fylde central office to uprate supplementary pensions and other benefits including war pensions, mobility allowance and attendance allowance, this means that virtually all social security beneficiaries are receiving their uprated increase on time, and will receive as planned any Christmas bonus to which they are entitled.

This performance in delivering the uprating compares well with previous years. To have carried out this uprating in addition to the ongoing work of the Department represents a tremendous achievement by our staff working at Newcastle central office, at North Fylde and in DHSS local offices throughout the country. I should like to pay tribute to them for their efforts and dedication. We are grateful also to the post offices and sub-post offices which have helped us with the emergency arrangements.

So far as the Newcastle dispute itself is concerned, I am pleased to say that the members of two of three unions involved have returned to work today. I would once again urge those members of the CPSA who are still on strike to reconsider their position on the fair and reasonable offer we have made.

NHS (Ancillary Services)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the fall in the percentage of contracting out of ancillary services in the National Health Service between 1978-79 and 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 388]: Throughout the period 1978-79 to 1983-84 the proportion of ancillary services contracted out was very small and changes during that period have no particular significance. As health authorities set about the programmes of competitive tendering, called for in our circular HC(83)18, we expect savings to be secured in the provision of ancillary services, and resources to be released for the development of patient care services. This is the objective of the policy. We also expect that authorities will make greater use of contractors as a result of tendering since they will be required to do so when a contractor is able to do the work to the standard required at a better price than the in-house service. These developments will take several years to work through and will not begin to show in the accounts until 1984-85.

Spectacles (Retailers)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will seek powers to prohibit advertising by unqualified retailers of spectacles until such time as qualified and registered opticians are legally entitled to advertise.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1984, c. 389]: No. Restrictions on advertising by registered opticians are imposed in rules made by the General Optical Council, on which registered opticians are strongly represented. However if the GOC agrees to changes recently put to it by the Privy Council, these restrictions could be swiftly removed to the benefit of both the public and the profession.

Competition from alternative suppliers should have a significant impact on the price paid by the public for glasses. It would be absurd to deny the public information about the availability of glasses from new suppliers.

ENERGY

Mining Research and Development Establishment, Bretby

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the Mining Research and Development Establishment at Bretby.

Mr. David Hunt: Research and development is an essential part of a healthy technologically based industry and I therefore welcomed the opportunity to visit the Mining Research and Development Establishment to see at first hand the work which it is doing to improve the working conditions of miners and to ensure that the country obtains maximum benefit from its massive investment in advanced mining equipment. I was greatly impressed by the quality of the work that I saw and feel that there are important opportunities for applying the results of the work widely in the industry in the future.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many pits were (a) working normally, (b) producing some coal, (c) had men reporting for work and (d) had no men reporting for work (i) at the end of March, (ii) at 31 October and (iii) at the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand from the National Coal Board that the information requested is as follows:

	Working normally	Producing some coal	Some men working	No men working
30 March	38	4	4	130
31 October	45	10	25	94
29 November	46	18	83	27

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the monthly average output of coal during the present dispute; and what was the average output for 1983.

Mr. David Hunt: The average monthly coal production from all United Kingdom sources during 1983 was 9·9 million tonnes. The monthly average in the months April to September 1984 was 3 million tonnes.

South Wales Electricity Board (Report)

Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what response has been made by the South Wales electricity board to the report on the board by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission which was published earlier in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received the initial response of the South Wales electricity board to the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission published on 29 February. It gives the board's comments on the commission's findings and describes the actions it is taking to meet the recommendations. Copies of the board's response have been placed in the Library of the House.

I welcome the commission's findings that the board is not pursuing any course of conduct against the public interest, that the board's financial, accounting and budgeting activities are efficiently managed and that the board has taken a vigorous approach to streamlining its management structure in recent years. While the commission questioned SWALEB's record in containing its added costs over the past decade as a whole, it recognised that in recent years the board had made considerable progress in this area and that its added costs declined in 1982-83. This improvement continued in 1983-84 in the results declared after the publication of the commission's report.

The commission noted a number of areas where improvements in the board's performance might be achieved, and the board has responded positively to the suggestions. I particularly welcome the assurance that board members will play an increasingly active role in defining corporate strategy through the formulation of quantified short and medium-term objectives. This is an issue which is relevant throughout the industry and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will shortly be offering advice and guidance on their role to part-time area board members.

I am also pleased that in response to other recommendations the board has established an audit committee chaired by one of its part-time members and has responded constructively to the commission's proposal that sufficient investment work should be put out to tender to enable effective comparisons to be made between in-house and private contractors' work. Action on these lines should make an important contribution to maintaining and improving efficiency and competitiveness.

In conclusions 39 and 40 the commission called for separate accounts and the establishment of financial targets for appliance retailing and contracting in order to demonstrate that the board continues to compete fairly with the private sector in these activities and that there is no cross-subsidy from the main electricity account. In agreement with the Electricity Council I announced in July measures applying to all boards which fully meet the commission's concerns and should help boards to demonstrate that they are trading fairly and profitably in these activities. In respect of the commission's conclusions on SWALEB's appliance repair business, I am glad to note that the board has taken firm action aimed at eliminating losses by 1984-85 and that financial information will continue to be provided on the progress of this activity.

The board indicated in its response that it is actively considering and implementing many other detailed recommendations made by the commission. I expect to make a further statement in due course when I have received the board's final response and report on actions taken. The commission's report also raises a number of issues which have a bearing on the efficiency of the electricity supply industry as a whole. The Electricity Council will be pursuing these points with the aim of ensuring that decisions by the area boards take full account of relevant industry-wide considerations.

WALES

Hyperbaric Oxygen

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the centres in Welsh hospitals where hyperbaric oxygen for the effective treatment of carbon monoxide intoxication is available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Singleton hospital, Swansea, is the only hospital in Wales to have a hyperbaric oxygen chamber.

Internal Drainage Districts

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many internal drainage districts there are in Wales; and how many of these are administered by internal drainage boards, and how many are managed by the Welsh water authority, for each year for which data are available since 1974.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Number of internal drainage districts in Wales

	1979	1979-84
Number in Wales	15	14
Administered by boards	4	3
Administered by the Welsh Water Authority	11	11

Two of the districts administered by internal drainage boards straddle the border with England.

Prior to 1978 the Minister of Agriculture was responsible for land drainage matters in Wales.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many monitoring visits have been paid to employers running the youth training scheme since the inception of the scheme in Tameside and Stockport.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The precise information is not available. All 1983-84 schemes in the local authority districts of Tameside and Stockport have been visited and assessed. The programme of visits to 1984-85 schemes is currently under way.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many parents of young people killed on the youth training scheme since April 1983 have received a payment from the Manpower Services Commission in lieu of industrial death benefit; and what the payment was in each case.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since April 1983 the parents of four young people killed either on the youth opportunities programme or the youth training scheme have been paid the equivalent of industrial death benefit. In each case a payment of £78 was made.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment how the sum of £78 paid by the Manpower Services Commission to the parents of George McCormack, killed on a youth training scheme in West Lothian on 27 July, was calculated; whether he has any intention of increasing the amount awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Community Programme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on the community programme schemes in the Stockport and Tameside districts, respectively; and within these numbers how many are being supervised by local authorities and how many by others.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not available in the form requested. On 31 October 1,848 people were employed on community programme projects funded from the Manchester east area office of the Manpower Services Commission, which includes the Stockport and Tameside districts. Of these, 1,450 were working on projects administered by local authorities and the remaining 398 on projects administered by voluntary organisations and other sponsors.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the effect that recent changes in the community programme regulations are having on Merseyside Improvements Limited: if he intends to discuss the matter with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission and representatives of the company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We have not received any representation about the effect on Merseyside Improvements Ltd. of the recent changes to the community programme rules, which my right hon. Friend announced on 30 July at columns 121-122. However, representations have been made both to the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission and to this Department about the basis on which Merseyside Improvements Ltd may continue to receive community programme funding. These representations are currently being considered and we have at present no plans to initiate discussions.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will specify the numbers of male and female unemployed persons, expressed in total and separately, registered for each of the unemployment benefit offices in the Greater London area, at (a) May 1979, (b) the most recent convenient date; and if he will express the change in the totals between (a) and (b) as a percentage increase or decrease.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information for jobcentre areas for the dates requested is available in the House of Commons Library. However, the current figures are not directly comparable with those for 1979, mainly because of the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many males aged 45 years and over were unemployed for 12 months and more in May 1979, how many are currently unemployed; if he will give the figures for the west midlands; and what is the percentage of the work force in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is available in the House of Commons Library. The current figures are not directly comparable with those for 1979, mainly because of the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Employment if it is the intention as from 1 March 1985 to harmonise the minimum redundancy payments in Great Britain with the European Economic Community minimum payments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Computers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the current Metropolitan police review of its operational requirement for a computerised crime reporting system has considered the matter of private computers being used or replaced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he proposes to review the use within the force of privately owned computers.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has made of the effect on costs, detection rates and police manpower of the use of computers by police forces; and if he will, in particular, identify the advantages and disadvantages, respectively, in particular categories of work.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department has studied various aspects of police computer systems, in collaboration with the forces concerned. The costs and benefits of such systems vary according to the forces' requirements. The potential advantages include easy access to data; the ability of search databases rapidly; greater ease of transfer of data within a force; a reduction in manual records; automatic production of documents, and improved management information. An analysis of the effects of introducing a computerised criminal information system, including consideration of the effect on the detection rate, may be found in the summary report of the evaluation of the Thames Valley computer system, issued under cover of Home Office circular No. 10/1984, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. the effects on police manpower of introducing a computer are frequently difficult to identify because of accompanying organisational changes, but in principle the use of computers offers the opportunity to deploy manpower more effectively, and to save manpower engaged on the compilation and maintenance of paper records.

These potential benefits have to be set against the considerable costs of computer systems and the Department will shortly be issuing further guidance to chief officers of police and police authorities on the considerations to be taken into account in order to ensure that value for money is obtained.

International Youth Year

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Office what contribution his Department intends to make towards International Youth Year.

Mr. Waddington: The Department will continue to make grants to organisations which encourage young people to involve themselves in constructive voluntary activities.

Television (Concessionary Licences)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give any instructions that his Department has issued to the national television licence records office concerning the handling of concessionary television licence applications;

(2) what are the criteria under the national television licensing records office's concessionary television licence scheme for pensioners to qualify for concessionary licences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The national TV licence records office issues the special accommodation for residential care television licence in respect of residential care accommodation for retirement pensioners, physically disabled people and mentally disordered people in accordance with the conditions of eligibility laid down in the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcast Licence Charges and Exemption) Regulations 1984. The Home Office does not issue formal general instructions, except that in all cases where entitlement is in doubt the records office must seek advice from the Home Office, on whose behalf these and other television licences are issued.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the extension to the concessionary television licence scheme entitlement over the last 15 years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A concessionary television licence for old people's homes and certain sheltered housing schemes for pensioners has existed since 1969. Under the original rules of eligibility sheltered housing schemes could qualify only if they comprised groups of dwellings provided specially for retired persons of pensionable age under specified housing legislation and some communal accommodation or facility was also provided within the curtilage of the group of dwellings. The rules were modified in April 1978 so that the communal accommodation or facilities no longer had to be within the curtilage of the dwellings. With effect from 1 September 1984 the conditions of eligibility were extended further to rationalise the way the rules applied to old people's sheltered housing provided by housing associations, and to enable physically disabled and mentally disordered persons in residential homes and sheltered housing schemes to qualify for the concession on the same terms as retirement pensioners.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the United Kingdom are now entitled under the concessionary television licence scheme to claim a concessionary licence; and how many people currently receive licences under the scheme.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no accurate figures for the number of people in the kinds of residential homes and sheltered housing schemes which qualify for the accommodation for residential care licence, but we believe that some 568,000 people benefit from the concession.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the national television licence records office takes to supervise the operation of the concessionary television licence scheme by local authorities; and if he is satisfied that all pensioners are fully aware of any entitlement they might have to a concessionary television licence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Local authorities and other applicants for the accommodation for residential care licence must provide full details of the accommodation in respect of which they claim the concessionary licence and confirm when the licence is renewed annually that the circumstances are unchanged. The national TV licence records office recently issued a leaflet to all local authorities explaining the conditions of eligibility, and we have no reason to believe that retired or disabled people in qualifying accommodation are not aware of their entitlement.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reasons for the proposal by Sheffield city council for a warden service for pensioners in suitably converted houses not entitling the pensioners covered by the scheme for the 5p concessionary licence; and what is the precise definition of a warden used by his Department.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The conditions of eligibility for the accommodation for residential care licence require that accommodation provided specially for retired or disabled people must have some communal accommodation or facility provided in association with it. A warden service can generally be accepted as a communal facility for qualifying purposes, but each application for the concessionary licence must be dealt with on its merits, taking into account all relevant factors. There is therefore no precise definition of what constitutes a warden service for the purposes of the regulations governing entitlement to the concessionary licence, but to be acceptable a warden would be expected to make regular visits to the people under his or her care and to provide appropriate services in response to their needs. The proposals put forward by Sheffield city council did not fulfil these criteria.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many staff are employed at the national television records office to deal with applications for, and inquiries about, the concessionary television licence scheme; and how many applications they dealt with in each of the years from 1979 to 1983;

(2) how many applications for concessionary television licences by pensioners were rejected in each of the years from 1979 to 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: One person is concerned exclusively with accommodation for residential care licences and a further eight deal with the concessionary licence and other television licensing matters. The number of applications dealt with from 1979 to 1983 and the number of applications rejected were as follows:

	Dealt with	Rejected
1979	1,510	29
1980	1,277	20
1981	1,180	22
1982	1,109	19
1983	1,578	30

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consideration the Department has given to the abolition of the television licence charge for all pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 13 November at column 204.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many probation areas facilities are now available to enable a court to sentence a young person of 16 years to community service; and when it is expected that such facilities will be available in all areas.

Mr. Mellor: Community service orders may be made in respect of 16-year-old offenders in 47 probation areas. Facilities in the remaining nine areas are expected to become available by 1 April 1985.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the appropriate chief constable as to how many people have been interviewed in connection with the vandalism of National Coal Board property at Cadeby;

(2) if he will call for a report from the appropriate chief constable as to how many people have been charged in connection with the vandalism of National Coal Board property at Cadeby.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of South Yorkshire tells me that 21 people have been interviewed and eight adults have been charged with offences of burgulary or criminal damage. Additionally, one juvenile has been reported for process by way of summons for burglary.

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been committed for trial to the Crown court for offences arising out of the mining dispute: and how many have so far been dealt with.

Mr. Mellor: According to information supplied to my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, the Crown court has been notified of the committal of 165 defendants in cases identified as directly arising out of the mining dispute and has dealt with 31 of them.

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people, to the latest availalble date, have been arrested and charged with offences arising out of the mining dispute; and how many cases have now been dealt with by the courts.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Between 13 March and 27 November inclusive, 8,394 arrests were made in connection with the miners' dispute. For the number of charges and cases dealt with by the courts between 13 March and 20 November inclusive, the latest period for which figures are available centrally, I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 22 November at column 242.

Leicester

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the electoral registration officer for the city of Leicester as to the turnout for each ward and polling district box for the local elections in May 1983 and 1984 and the general election in June 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that some of this information has already been given to my hon. Friend by the acting returning officer, who would be happy to give further information if requested. If my hon. Friend has some particular electoral problem in mind, I should be pleased to hear from him.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the crime rates and clear-up rates in the Metropolitan police area in each quarter since March 1979; what is the crime rate and clear-up rate in total and for each standard category of crime in each Metropolitan police district in each quarter in 1983 and to date; and if he will give the establishment and numbers of police actually on duty in each Metropolitan police district in each quarter in 1983 and to date.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Didcot (Police Accommodation)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Oxfordshire about the arrangements which have been made to provide accommodation for (a) police and (b) police horses in or near Didcot power station.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Thames valley tells me that no such arrangements have been made.

Mr. Mohammed Siddique

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Mr. Mohammed Siddique was interviewed by the governor of Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, the deputy governor of the prison or anyone else on the staff at the prison before 4 November in connection with his wish to grow a beard and told that he must shave.

Mr. Mellor: Permission has been given to Mr. Siddique to grow a beard, and I shall write to the hon. Member about how his application was dealt with.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Mohammed Siddique applied to the governor of Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, for permission to grow a beard.

Mr. David Mellor: On the afternoon of Friday 9 November.

Longmoor

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire police as to why Mrs. Tessa Babcock and her 13-year-old daughter Zoe were handed over by police guarding Longmoor base to soldiers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any of the people detained at Longmoor camp firing range were subsequently charged.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of Hampshire tells me that nobody who was detained at Longmoor camp firing range has yet been charged, although the police are considering the possibility of bringing prosecutions, by way of summons, in some cases.

Parking (Fines)

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any intention of increasing the fixed penalty parking fine of £10 for large vehicles.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have at present no plans to do so.

Food Hygiene Regulations (Enforcement)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to extend to prisons, prison hospitals and remand centres the powers of entry of environmental health officers and their subsequent powers of enforcement in relation to breaches of food hygiene regulations.

Mr. Mellor: No. The primary responsibility for supervising hygiene standards in prison department establishments rests with the medical officers based at each establishment who may call on the advice of environmental health officers as required. We see no need to alter these arrangements.

Prisons (Repatriation)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further progress has been made in the discussions by his Department and the Government of Gibraltar on the repatriation of persons from United Kingdom prisons to the Gibraltar prison in order to complete their sentences.

Mr. Mellor: The Government of Gibraltar have indicated that they wish to enter into prisoner transfer arrangements with the United Kingdom. The terms of the Order in Council necessary for this purpose have yet to be settled.

Arab Visitors

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will list those countries which are members of the League of Arab States, of which any passport holders may enter the United Kingdom without also obtaining a visa;

(2) whether he will outline his powers available to prevent a visit to the United Kingdom by any person purporting to hold a passport issued by a member country of the League of Arab States which would not also require an accompanying visa and whose presence is not considered by him to be conducive to the public good.

Mr. Waddington: The countries whose nationals require visas for the United Kingdom are shown in the appendix to the Statement of Changes in the Immigration Rules (HC 169). Any person, whether a visa national or not, who is subject to control under the Immigration Act 1971 requires the leave of an immigration officer to enter the United Kingdom. Any passenger subject to control except the wife and child under 18 of a person settled in the United Kingdom may be refused leave to enter on the ground that his exclusion is conducive to the public good.

Yasser Arafat

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received, either directly or through third parties, any request by or on behalf of Yasser Arafat for a visa to enter the United Kingdom during the month of December; and whether he will ensure that any such request is refused, in the interests of security and public order.

Mr. Waddington: An inquiry has been made about the possibility of Mr. Arafat's coming to the United Kingdom in connection with the publication of a biography of him. But no application has been made for a visa and no decision on Mr. Arafat's admission has therefore been taken.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Citizens' Advice Bureaux

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Scottish Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux concerning Government grants towards citizens' advice bureaux; and how existing Government funding in Scotland compares with that in England and Wales.

Mr. Fletcher: I have received written representations from the Scottish Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and I met its chairman and other representatives on 17 July last to discuss the level of its grant-aid.

In 1984-85, the limit of grant-in-aid to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux in England and Wales is £6·4 million. For Scotland the figure is £700,000.

Properties for Sale (Descriptions)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation to prevent estate agents giving misleading descriptions of properties for sale.

Mr. Fletcher: I see no need at present for new legislation of this kind. However, I am keeping the position under review in conjunction with the Director General of Fair Trading.

Telecommunications (Advisory Committee)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to appoint the English advisory committee on telecommunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: We expect to make appointments to this body shortly.

Manufactures

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the United Kingdom market for manufactures was taken by the six original European Economic Community members in 1972 and 1983, respectively.

Mr. Channon: In 1983 the six original members of the European Community supplied approximately 15 per cent. of the United Kingdom market for the products of manufacturing industry. The corresponding figure for 1975—the earliest year for which directly comparable information is available—was 8·5 per cent.

BT Share Issue

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rates of commission have been agreed by his Department for the British Telecom share issue with the City institutions involved; and if he will detail any rates which are higher than those agreed for previous Government issues, and give reasons for the difference.

Mr. Fletcher: The rates of commissions payable to City institutions are set out in part IV, section 13, of the prospectus. They are as follows:

to the United Kingdom underwriters, 0·375 per cent. on the United Kingdom portion of the offer; to the Bank of England, 1·25 per cent. on the overseas portion;
to priority applicants, 1·5 per cent. on their placing shares and 1·25 per cent. on their commitment shares;
to certain stockbrokers, 0·125 per cent. on applications from priority applicants introduced by them;
to Swiss Bank Corporation International Limited, 1·25 per cent. on the shares comprised in the application together with a selling concession of 1·25 per cent. on the shares in respect of which its application is accepted.

Commissions paid in past privatisations have varied according to the circumstances. Underwriting and broking commissions taken together have been up to 0·5 per cent. Because the structure of the British Telecom offer is quite different from that of any previous privatisation, it is not possible to make direct comparisons with the rates of commission paid in previous cases.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what will be the total cost to the Government of the British Telecom share issue; how much of it will be payments to City institutions; and how much of that will be to stockbrokers.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 27 November.

EC (Industrial Aid)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on state aids to industry within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

United States (Exports)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out in the Official Report the level of exports to the United States of America from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the countries of the European Economic Community in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The figures, in both national currencies and United States dollars, are in the table. They show substantial increases in exports to the United States both by the United Kingdom and comparable countries in the Community.

Export Intelligence Service

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost of the export intelligence service (a) to public funds and (b) to subscribers in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon' The computerised export intelligence service (EIS) is the principal means by which the British Overseas Trade Board conveys to exporters information about export opportunities overseas. An independent consultants' survey estimated that about £1,000 million of United Kingdom firms' annual export sales followed directly from information provided to EIS subscribers.

Firms subscribing to the EIS selective notice service pay 35p for each notice sent to them. The Daily Gazette, which contains all the information issued on any one day costs £500 per annum.

Figures of EIS operational costs and earnings in the past five years are as follows:

	Operational Costs £000s	Earnings £000s
1979-80	1,948	523
1980-81	2,088	511
1981-82	2,159	492
1982-83	1,997	442

Privatisation

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further plans he has for privatising publicly-owned enterprises; and if he will publish a list of any such proposals and of the proposed dates of implementation.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend plans to return to the private sector as many as possible of the publicly-owned enterprises for which he is responsible.

The privatisation of British Telecom will be completed very shortly. British Shipbuilders has embarked on the sale of all its warship building interests, aiming to make substsantial progress by 31 March 1985 and for completion by 31 March 1986. One part of BL Jaguar, has already been successfully returned to the private sector; our objective is that all parts of BL should be so returned. Further privatisation within BL will be one of the subjects covered in the 1985 corporate plan which we expect to receive shortly.

The British Steel Corporation has a continuing programme of disposal of its non-mainstream business and the creation of joint venture companies with the private sector. Our aim is to restore BSC's bulk steel business to profitability with a view to its return to the private sector in due course.

The British Technology Group will continue to dispose of its equity investments as soon as commercially practicable.

We aim to return Rolls-Royce to profitability with a view to its privatisation within the lifetime of this Parliament. We have no immediate plans for the privatisation of the Post Office's activities.

Restrictive Trade Practices Law

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will conduct a review of British restrictive practices law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The restrictive trade practices legislation was extensively reviewed in the Green Paper "A Review of Restrictive Trade Practices Policy" (Cmnd. 7512) which concluded that the legislation had been generally effective. I continue to keep the legislation under review, and I am willing to consider proposals to amend it.

Companies (Legal Safeguards)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from private companies asking for further legal remedies to be made available to them to safeguard themselves from predatory pricing and collusive behaviour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I have received no recent representations of this nature. The Restrictive Trade Practices Act gives private companies remedies against collusive agreements that have not duly been furnished to the Office of Fair Trading. Specific instances of predatory pricing may be investigated under the Fair Trading Act 1973 or the Competition Act 1980 and, if found to be contrary to the public interest, may be prohibited.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a general direction to the Post Office, under section 62 of the British Telecommunications Act 1981, to refrain from its major programme of closing Crown and sub-post offices in view of its obligations under section 59(2)(b) of the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Insolvency Law Review

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government have reached a decision concerning the recommendation of the review committee on insolvency law and practice, chaired by Sir Kenneth Cork, that the public utilities, on the insolvency of a customer, should be restrained from threatening to cut off supplies unless the outstanding debt is paid in full.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government have now considered this recommendation of the review committee and has decided that the major monopoly utilities, which provide services which are essential to the conduct of all businesses, should not be able to secure more favourable treatment than other creditors on the insolvency of a customer by threatening to discontinue supplies. It is intended that the necessary legislative provisions will be introduced into the forthcoming Insolvency Bill in the course of its passage through Parliament.

SCOTLAND

Employment Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has information from the 1983 Scottish school leavers survey or other sources on success in obtaining first employment by social class.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The following table shows, for each social class, the percentage of school leavers from session 1982-83 in different categories of post-school activity in October 1983.

Rape and Sexual Assault

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what type of sentence has been passed on those persons convicted of rape and sexual assault in Scotland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ancram: The types of sentence imposed on persons against whom charges of rape, assault with intent to rape and indecent assault—including attempts, and aiding and abetting—were proved in each of the last three years are as follows:

Scotland

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions for rape and sexual assault in Scotland have resulted in (a) convictions and (b) acquittals in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ancram: The outcome of proceedings against persons charged with rape, assault with intent to rape and indecent assault in the last five years was as follows:

Scotland Persons

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of rape and sexual assault have been reported to the police in Scotland for each of the last five years; and, of these, how many cases reported have led to prosecutions.

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available exactly in the form requested. The numbers of crimes of rape, assault with intent to rape and indecent assault recorded by the police in the years 1979 to 1983 were as follows:

Scotland Crimes

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983

Timber-framed Houses (Report)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement with regard to the progress of the report by the Building Research Establishment into the incidence and effect of cavity wall insulation in timber-framed houses.

Mr. Ancram: The Building Research Establishment expects to publish its report early in the new year. It will take the form of a BRE information paper giving guidance to building surveyors to help them to assess the risk of damp in individual properties.

Building Control

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the outcome of his consultation on the future of building control in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: In October of last year I issued a consultative paper which sought views on a range of proposals to improve the building control system in Scotland. I am grateful for the many thoughtful responses from a broad range of interests. The Government's decision to review this system was widely welcomed and general support was given to the principal objectives of the review. I have given careful consideration to all the views expressed and decided to proceed with the proposals with certain modifications as outlined in a statement which I have today placed in the Library of the House.

Students' Allowances Scheme

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he proposes to make to the students' allowances scheme in Scotland in session 1985-86.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy not to bring about a reduction in the student grant in real terms nor abolish the minimum grant nor increase parental contribution nor extend the parental contribution to tuition fees for Scottish students.

Mr. Younger: The main rates of grant for Scottish-domiciled students will be increased by around 3 per cent. in session 1985-86 and the parental contribution scale will be adjusted upwards in line with earnings. The parental contribution from those in the middle and upper reaches of the scale will also be increased, subject to a maximum contribution of £4,000 per family. The minimum award will be discontinued and the parental contribution from those best able to pay will be extended to tuition fees.

These changes are in line with changes already announced for England and Wales. Residual incomes of less than £8,100 will attract no parental contribution; residual incomes above that figure will be assessed so that the next £2,200 (£8,100 to £10,300) will attract contributions at the rate of £1 in £7, the next £4,700 (£10,300 to £15,000) at the rate of £1 in £5, and any residual income above £15,000 at the rate of £1 in £4. For those families with more than one award holder there will be a maximum parental contribution of £4,000.

The system of repayment of students' travelling expenses for students who are Scottish residents will remain unchanged.

It is my intention that a substantial proportion of the savings from these changes should be redeployed to strengthen and expand the provision of technological courses, and to allow priority to be given to electrical and electronic engineering and related disciplines.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Houses

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses are kept vacant for their occupiers while the occupiers are in prison; and whether he will introduce legislation to prevent this happening in the future.

Sir George Young: This information is not available. The management and allocation of council housing is a matter for the local authorities to which it belongs. It is a condition of a secure tenancy under section 28 of the Housing Act 1980 that the tenant occupies the dwelling as his only or principal home. It is for the courts to interpret the meaning of this provision.

Rates

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to abolish rates on business premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Structure Plans

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his decision on proposed alterations to the north-east Hampshire structure plans.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Proposed modifications to the alteration to the north-east Hampshire structure plan will be published when my right hon. Friend has completed his consideration of the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public. Following that publication there will be a period for objections and representations to be made before the final decision is taken.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all grants made by his Department to voluntary organisations, giving both the recipient and the amount, together with the date a grant was first made.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Grants in 1984-85 to voluntary bodies, other than housing associations and excluding grants made by statutory bodies associated with the Department, are as follows:

6. Urban Programme
The contribution from central Government to voluntary bodies under the urban programme is estimated at approximately £51 million in 1984-85; this includes contributions from the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Education and Science.

* Provisional.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which London local authorities would gain and which would lose from his proposals that the collective funding of voluntary bodies should be met by contributions based on population rather than rateable value; and what would be the percentage change in the contribution for each authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Housing (Approved Warranty Scheme)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress of negotiations for an approved warranty scheme for homes covered by the Housing Defects Act.

Sir George Young: The National House Building Council is doing further detailed work in order to reach a decision on the arrangements referred to by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley) on 12 November at column 133.

Water Authorities

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the effect on each water authority of the autumn statement's changes in loan repayments.

Mr. MacFarlane: In 1985-86 the water authorities net borrowing and other external finance will be limited to £203 million, of which £20 million is for the Welsh water authority. English water authorities are still being consulted on the allocation of external finance to individual authorities, but only the Thames water authority will be expected to repay outstanding loans.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many new appointments he estimates will be created in other public sector bodies as a consequence of his approval to abolish the Merseyside county council; and if he will make a statement.

(2) how many employees of the Merseyside county council can expect to be made redundant as a result of his proposal to abolish the metropolitan counties; what the cost will be in terms of compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The numbers, in each case, will depend on detailed decisions to be taken by successor bodies. The explanatory memorandum to the Local Government Bill contains an overall estimate of its effects on public service manpower and the cost of redundancy compensation. I cannot, at this stage, make worthwhile estimates at the level of individual metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the annual savings to the ratepayers of Merseyside of abolition of the Merseyside county council; how much his proposals are likely to save each domestic and each industrial ratepayer within the county; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: We estimate that the overall rationalisation savings arising from abolition of the metropolitan counties will be £50 million annually. On average, this represents about 3 per cent. of MCCs' rate fund current expenditure, which is equivalent to a reduction of about 6 per cent. in the total MCC precepts. Further savings are expected to arise as successor authorities carry out services more economically.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is proposing to collect information which will enable him to monitor the staff numbers and costs arising from his Department's work arising from the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Sir George Young: I have already arranged for the information given in my hon. Friend's reply of 28 November to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) to be updated regularly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is proposing to make amendments to his Department's MINIS system of management control in order to monitor the costs of abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Sir George Young: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 19 Conservative London borough leaders known to him to support the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: The Conservative leaders of the following London borough councils have expressed their support for the abolition of the GLC, and their belief that there is no need for an elected upper tier authority for London after the GLC is abolished:

Barnet
Bexley

Brent
Bromley
Croydon
Ealing
Enfield
Hammersmith and Fulham
Harrow
Havering
Hillingdon
Kensington and Chelsea
Kingston upon Thames
Merton
Redbridge
Sutton
Waltham Forest
Wandsworth
Westminster

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, what he intends to do with the council's own art collection.

Sir George Young: Property of the Greater London council required by successor bodies in connection with their functions or that belongs with other property transferred under the Bill, will be appropriately transferred at abolition by order under clause 92. Property not so transferred will vest initially in the London residuary body under clause 59.

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage the rate levied by the Yorkshire water authority is to increase in 1985-86; and to what extent any increase is (a) in line with departmental policy and (b) as a result of departmental guidelines or directions.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright) on 26 November 1984, at column 395.

Rate Demands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many supporting statements of rate demands will be published in an individual inner London borough in 1986-87; and if he will indicate which authorities will be responsible for publishing these statements, assuming the implementation of his current proposals for the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have already announced that the new Inner London education authority will be required to provide certain information direct to ratepayers in respect of its expenditure and precept for 1986-87 and future years. We are discussing with the local authority associations the information which rating authorities will be required to provide to ratepayers with rate demands concerning their own and their other precepting bodies' expenditure, in accordance with section 14 of the Rates Act 1984.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the authorities which in their 1984-85 supporting statements of rate demands did not give details of the total rate change which results from grant changes as suggested in the code of practice on publication on rate demands and supporting information by local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not monitored centrally.

Rate Support Grant (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the equalisation arrangements between inner and outer London in the London arrangements element of the rate support grant; and on what assumed levels of spending they are based.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to annex L to the "Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1984-85", a copy of which is in the Library.

Rates

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in estimating any savings arising from implementation of the Rates Act, he will be taking into account the additional costs of leafleting and advertising by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost of the advertisements and leaflet produced to inform the general public about the rate limitation provisions in the Rates Act 1984 was £418,630 and was found from within the Department's existing budget. We estimate that the savings from the level of expenditure which the rate limited authorities would otherwise have been spending in 1985-86 is £400 million compared with the expenditure levels set.

Grant-related Expenditure (Reviews)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which service grant-related expenditures are being reviewed for 1986-87, and what are the reasons underlying the reviews for each service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Except in the case of personal social services, where a long-term view is in progress, no decisions have yet been made on which service GREs to review for 1986-87. This will be the subject of consultations with the local authority associations early in the new year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what maximum percentage increase between provisional and final expenditure targets has occurred for individual local authorities in England between 1981-82 and 1984-85.

Mr. Waldegrave: 67·7 per cent. for East Cambridgeshire district council in 1983-84.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the capital expenditure of local authorities in London for each major service for each of the years 1978-79 to 1982-83;

(2) what the reduction, measured in 1984-85 prices, has been in the level of local authority capital expenditure in London and the rest of England, respectively, between the years 1978-79 and 1982-83.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these questions shortly.

GLC (Net Revenue Expenditure)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide an analysis of the Greater London council's 1984-85 budgeted net revenue expenditure broken down by service for each service to be transferred from the Greater London council to the London boroughs and the other bodies including the Fire Board, the Thames water authority, the London Planning Commission, the Thamesmead Trust, the Historic Building Commission, the Lee Valley Regional Park Authority, the residuary body, the Sports Council, the Arts Council, the Inner London education authority, the shire counties, and the shire districts.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Housing Associations (Grants)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to increase the grant limits for improvement for sale schemes by housing associations.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend laid the Housing Association Grant (Disposal of Dwellings) Order 1984, under section 130 of the Housing Act 1980, today. This increases the amount of grant which may be paid to a registered housing association under section 29 of the Housing Act 1974 where the association carries out work of repair, improvement or conversion prior to sale to £12,500 in Greater London and Glasgow and to £9,500 elsewhere. The new limits follow the findings of a review of the improvement for sale scheme carried out in conjunction with the Housing Corporation. They will enable schemes to proceed in the worst stress areas, and it is in these areas that housing associations' activities should be concentrated.

PRIME MINISTER

Minister Without Portfolio

Q41. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister what are the specific duties of the Minister without Portfolio, the right hon. Lord Young of Graffham, relating to unemployment matters.

The Prime Minister: I have asked my noble Friend to give immediate attention to a number of areas in pursuing his remit to promote policies for the growth of enterprise and the creation of jobs. These areas are policy towards small firms, measures to increase competition, the reduction of controls and regulations and the co-ordination of policies to promote the education, training and employment of 14 to 18-year-olds. My hon. Friend will also pursue other matters within his general remit either at my request or on his own initiative.

NCB (Chairman)

Q54. Mr. Bidwell asked the Prime Minister if she will dismiss the chairman of the National Coal Board.

The Prime Minister: No.

Basingstoke

Q72. Mr. Hunter asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Basingstoke.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

USA (President)

Q111. Mr. Kilfedder asked the Prime Minister if she will invite the President of the United States to visit Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Dr. Mawhinney asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 29 November.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 29 November.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be meeting President Mitterrand in Paris this evening and shall attend a dinner to be given by the President at the Elysee.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister how many letters she has received in the last month about overseas aid; and what is the viewpoint expressed in most of the letters.

The Prime Minister: In the last month I have received about 7,000 such letters. The majority referred to the need for emergency aid in sub-Saharan Africa; many also expressed the hope that the level of the aid programme would not be reduced.

Secretary of State for Energy (Speech)

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if the speech given by the Secretary of State for Energy on 20 November on unemployment represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 27 November 1984 at column 776.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of her letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow concerning records of signals from HMS Conqueror.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Dear Mr. Dalyell,

In your Supplementary Question on 20th November, you asked whether "all signals to and from HMS Conqueror had been retained, in any form, other than those which were in the so-called missing log book?" I undertook to give you a specific reply after having checked this point.

During the Falklands conflict, the Flag Officer Submarines, in accordance with the Queen's Regulations for the Royal Navy, kept a "War Diary" recording policy, planning, and events to facilitate subsequent official analysis of the campaign. This diary is classified. It gives details of all important signals sent between Flag Officer Submarines and the submarines involved in the conflict, including the time of despatch and a synopsis of the contents of each.

Yours sincerely,
Margaret Thatcher

TRANSPORT

Road Surfaces (Grip Standards)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to increase the standards for grip on road surfaces.

Mrs. Chalker: The standards of grip of new road surfaces are specified by highway authorities in their road construction and maintenance contracts, having regard to their assessments of the traffic conditions and situations likely to occur. It would not be appropriate to regulate these specifications by legislation.

Rear Fog Warning Lights

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department has given to motorists in relation to the correct use of rear fog warning lights on motor vehicles.

Mrs. Chalker: Publicity about the correct use of rear fog lights has been issued in the form of a TV filler film, radio announcements and feature articles. Guidance is now included in the "Highway Code", which advises motorists that rear fog lights should be used only when visibility is seriously reduced, and not simply because it is dark, or raining, or misty. This advice will shortly be amended to explain that for visibility to be seriously reduced it would generally need to be less than 100 metres. A small leaflet setting out the important points about the use of lights, including guidance about rear fog lights, is being prepared for issue to all vehicle owners with their annual tax reminders, starting early next year.

Roads

Mr. Loftbouse asked the Secretary of State for Transport what change in costs has occurred to date from the transfer of the design and supervision of construction of trunk roads and motorways from the local authority-based road construction units to private consultants.

Mrs. Chalker: The costs of transferring RCU work to consultants are as follows:

1. Payment to local authorities in respect of early closure of the sub-units, which will probably amount to about £9 million. Some of these costs would almost certainly have had to be incurred at a later stage as the need for design work reduced in some of the sub-units.
2. Payments to consultants for familiarisation with partly prepared schemes—£1 million.

The changing pattern of work within the road programme means that it is not possible to make a comparison between actual expenditure on consultants' fees and the costs which might have been incurred if it had been possible to continue the RCU organisation for longer, if the need for change in the organisation had been met in some other way.

Engineering Staff (Recruitment)

Mr. Loftbouse asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many additional engineering staff have been and are to be engaged by his Department in the recently publicised recruitment drive; and how many of these are required for the purpose of administering the highways and transportation functions within each metropolitan county area under the proposals contained in Cmnd. 9063.

Mrs. Chalker: The Civil Service Commission regularly recruits junior professional civil engineers for my Department to fill vacancies caused by internal promotions and natural wastage. Nine such engineers have been engaged since autumn 1983.

In addition, the Civil Service Commission is currently holding an open competition to recruit grade I professional civil engineers which, in due course, should result in some 15 engineers joining the Department.

None of these recruits is earmarked for any function relating to proposals in Cmnd. 9063; they are all needed to fill vacancies caused by natural wastage.

Lorry Ban (London)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received on the subject of the proposed Greater London council ban on inner city lorries at nights and during weekends.

Mrs. Chalker: I have received copies of over 2,000 of the much larger total of letters sent to the GLC expressing grave concern. In many cases the writers press my right hon. Friend to use his powers, if the GLC should decide to go ahead with its ban, to ensure that a properly constituted public inquiry is first held. I would expect full details and analysis of the representations to form an integral part of any report made by GLC officials to the transport committee as an aid to its deliberations.

Those who have written have included all types and sizes of businesses and shops, and range from major construction firms to a pop group. It is clear that the present GLC proposals and methods of administration envisaged have created widespread alarm among those who provide London's basic services.

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to whether the Greater London council is to hold a public inquiry into its proposed ban on heavy lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that the GLC transport committee will be meeting on Wednesday 12 December to consider the massive response to consultation and the many hundreds of calls for a public inquiry. I cannot anticipate what decision it will then reach.

However, we have made clear our view that for a major London-wide proposal of this magnitude a properly constituted public inquiry would provide a well established method of assessment.

Aircraft Noise (Gatwick)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the arrangements for monitoring aircraft noise at Gatwick airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes, but I will continue to seek improvements.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be making public the latest survey on aircraft noise at Gatwick airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As soon as it is received by my Department, which I hope will be by early February.

Pesticides (Aerial Spraying)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his powers to prohibit aerial spraying of pesticides from named places or areas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The controls over aerial crop spraying are exercised by the Civil Aviation Authority under article 40 of the Air Navigation Order 1980. In particular, the authority requires that aerial sprayers maintain minimum distances from houses, congested areas, and sensitive areas such as schools, hospitals, children's playgrounds and stables. Operators are also required to consult the Nature Conservancy Council if they intend to spray within three-quarters nautical mile of a national nature reserve or site of special scientific interest, and to give advance warning to others in the area.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, he will discuss the number of aircraft engaged in aerial application of pesticides, since June this year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The aerial application of pesticides is one of the topics on which I consult the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority as necessary. The chairman's assurances about the enforcement of the controls on aerial crop spraying to which my hon. Friend and colleague the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport referred in his statement on crop spraying on 31 July, at columns 209-10, were the result of such consultations.

Merseyside (Visit)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his visit to Merseyside on Friday 23 November.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on Wednesday 28 November at column 478.

Chemicals (Road Transport)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied that current regulations regarding the labelling and transportation of chemicals by road transport are adequate to ensure the safety of those involved in both the collection and delivery process and members of the general public; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The transport of dangerous chemicals in road tankers is covered by the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981. I consider that these provisions are adequate, but I am always prepared to consider proposals to improve them.

The Health and Safety Commission is in the final stages of consultation on proposals to extend control to all other methods of carrying dangerous substances by road. I hope to make new regulations next year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNESCO

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (i) Commonwealth countries, (ii) European Economic Community countries and (iii) other countries have made representations that the United Kingdom (a) should leave and (b) should remain a member of United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Raison: Exchanges between Governments are confidential, but the Government have kept closely in touch about the reform of UNESCO with a large number of Governments, including those in the Commonwealth and the European Community, during 1984. None wished the United Kingdom to leave UNESCO, but all said they shared our desire for reform and recognised the United Kingdom's right to decide what was best for its own interests. We shall reconsider our position towards the end of next year in the light of progress made towards reform.

Chile

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom representative voted on 26 November on the proposal for a $125 million loan to Chile from the Inter-American Development Bank.

Mr. Raison: The project was considered by the executive board of the Inter-American Development Bank on 29 November. The Inter-American Development Bank executive director who represents Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom was mandated to vote in favour.

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom representative voted on 21 November on the proposals for a $35·7 million loan to Chile from the Inter-American Development Bank.

Mr. Raison: The Inter-American Development Bank executive director who represents Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom, voted in favour.

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what outstanding proposals for loans or projects for Chile will be considered before the end of 1984 by the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank, or the International Development Association.

Mr. Raison: The only project proposals which are likely to be considered before the end of 1984 are as follows:

1. Inter-American Development Bank
   Industrial recovery programme: US$130 million; Hydrocarbon exploration, adaptation of refineries and development of gas in Magallunes: US$48 million;
2. The World Bank (IBRD)
   Agricultural services and credit: US$56 million; Public sector housing: US$80 million;
3. International Development Association
   None.

World Bank

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the executive director appointed by the United Kingdom supports the decision by the World Bank to quadruple the funds made available by the World Bank for population projects.

Mr. Raison: The United Kingdom executive director represents Her Majesty's Government's views to the World Bank board. We support the World Bank's intention to increase its funding for population projects.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Prosperous Plain area has not been considered as a possible site on St. Helena for an airfield.

Mr. Raison: This location was apparently ruled out in an examination of potential airfield sites by the Civil Aviation Authority in 1973 because of the presence of a diplomatic wireless service station. Its suitability is now being re-examined.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about present communications to St. Helena as a result of the recent fire on the RMS St. Helena.

Mr. Raison: It is expected that the RMS St. Helena will resume service on a scheduled northbound voyage in mid-December. In the meantime, special arrangements have been made for passengers and for mail booked on the November/December southbound voyage to travel by air to Ascension Island, and onward to St. Helena by an MOD-chartered vessel, the Sir Percivale Another vessel has been chartered to carry necessary supplies, including holiday season requirements.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Armagh Gaol (Strip Searches)

18. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the searching of woman prisoners in Armagh gaol.

Mr. Scott: Strip searches are a necessary part of maintaining prison security. The procedures used in Northern Ireland are the same as those which have been used for many years in comparable prisons in Great Britain and elsewhere. The need for and frequency of searches are kept under close review. The number conducted each month has fallen substantially over the last two years.

Constitutional Matters (Public Opinion)

19. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what method he uses to assess the state of opinion on constitutional matters amongst the electorate of Northern Ireland; and how often he updates his soundings.

Mr. Hurd: The people of Northern Ireland have regular opportunities at elections to express their views clearly on constitutional matters. The principal means of assessing opinion is to listen to the political parties, with which I keep in close touch, and which according to the strength of their electoral support, best articulate the views of the community.

Kilbrandon Inquiry

20. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which parts of the report of the Kilbrandon inquiry he finds acceptable and which unacceptable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As long as a majority of people in Northern Ireland wish to remain part of the United Kingdom, proposals which affect that constitutional status cannot be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government. For the inquiry's proposals to work, they must be acceptable to both communities in Northern Ireland. I found the analysis in the report interesting and stimulating.

Constitutional Talks

21. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on his talks with political parties in the Province.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude).

High Technology Development

22. Mr. Molyneaux asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will outline his plans for the provision of high technology development in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The Government have introduced comprehensive programmes for training, technical advice and investment. Of particular importance is the development of a science park near Antrim to cater for high technology industries and research and development.

Comprehensive Education

23. Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has plans to extend comprehensive education provision in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: No.

Security

24. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security of the Province.

28. Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) earlier today.

25. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions on cross-border security co-operation he has recently had; and what discussions he is currently conducting with the authorities in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hurd: I had discussions on a wide range of matters when I met the Irish Republic's Minister for Foreign Affairs on 25 October. I was also glad to meet the Irish Minister for Justice on that occasion. I met the Irish Minister for Foreign Affairs again during the meeting between my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach on 18 and 19 November. I look forward to continuing discussions with members of the Irish Government on matters of common concern, including security co-operation.

NHS (Management and Financial Control)

26. Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money will be released for patient and client care by the implementation of the new proposals for management and financial control in the Health and Social Services.

Mr. Chris Patten: Health and Social Services boards are currently required to realise annually efficiency savings of 0·5 per cent. of revenue budgets, or around £2·4 million from measures designed to improve management and financial control. In addition, the Department of Health and Social Services and boards are pursuing various initiatives designed to improve efficiency and cost-effectiveness, but the expected benefits may not be capable of reliable measurement in money terms.

Milk Quotas

27. Rev. Ian Paisley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is able to give an assurance that sufficient extra allocations under the milk quota system will be available to enable all those dairy farmers in Northern Ireland allocated new or extra quotas by milk quota panels and tribunals finally to receive such allocations.

Dr. Boyson: Total quota needs cannot be assessed until all cases have been finalised and the volume of quota which will be finally bought up is known.

Grammar Schools (North Down)

29. Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase the number of grammar school places in North Down.

Mr. Scott: It is a matter for the South Eastern education and library board to ensure that there are sufficient secondary school places available to offer all pupils educational opportunities in accordance with their age, aptitude and ability.

Housing Executive (Prefabricated Buildings)

30. Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects that the Housing Executive will be ready to announce its scheme and timetable for dealing with its Orlit and other similar houses.

Mr. Chris Patten: I am advised by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that proposals will be announced as soon as possible on an estate-by-estate basis, following consultations with tenant groups; the first of a series of proposals will be considered by the board of the executive within the next few weeks. Of the types of prefabricated reinforced concrete house examined by the Building Research Establishment, only Orlits are found in Northern Ireland.

Gas Pipeline

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current situation with regard to the proposed supply of gas to the Province by pipeline from Kinsale.

Dr. Boyson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South East (Mr. Nellist), earlier today.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Under-25s (Benefits)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young claimants are likely to be affected by restrictions on benefits paid to under-25s who leave home while they are unemployed to live elsewhere; and what is his Department's estimate of the financial savings made through this change.

Mr. Newton: At the end of 1983 about 37,000 people aged 25 and under were being paid supplementary benefit as boarders and the number is likely to have increased since then. We expect fewer young people to receive payment as boarders and to be paid for shorter periods as a result of proposals for change in the payment of board and lodging that my right hon. Friend announced earlier today.

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Supplementary Benefit Policy Inspectorate has investigated board and lodging payments since November 1983.

Mr. Newton: The Social Security Policy Inspectorate is currently studying this subject.

Housing Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate figures showing the numbers of people receiving housing benefits, showing the rate rebate recipients separately from those receiving rent and rate rebates, and distinguishing between certificated and standard benefit payments.

Mr. Whitney: Housing benefit statistics do not routinely distinguish rate rebate-only cases from those receiving a rate rebate and a rent rebate or allowance. It is, however, estimated that as at autumn 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, the information requested is broadly as follows:

Recipients	Standard housing benefit	Certificated housing benefit
Rent rebate and rate rebate	1,720	1,870
Rent allowance and rate rebate	330	540
Rate rebate only	1,600	600

School Leavers (Benefits)

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend Department of Health and Social Security regulations so as to allow school leavers, who are signing on for supplementary benefit for the first time, to receive benefit payment from the same starting day, regardless of their surname initial letter.

Mr. Whitney: No. The payment arrangements for school leavers are similar to those for other supplementary benefit claimants and changes in these arrangements would not be justified at a time when a review of the supplementary benefit scheme is in progress.

Family Practitioner Services

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recent decision to allow increases in spending on family practitioner services to fall below the level of inflation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Full allowance has been made for the forecast rate of inflation in the amount we plan to spend next year on the family practitioner services. We have been able to restrict the growth in spending by the action we announced recently to reduce expenditure on drugs through tighter controls on drug company profits and limitations on the use of some of the less important drugs. The ending next year of the general supply of NHS glasses, except to those at present exempt from charges, will also reduce expenditure. Even with these reductions, we still expect to spend £100 million more than was planned in the last expenditure White Paper.

Old People's Homes

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private old people's homes there are in the United Kingdom which accommodate people financed by his Department; what is the average cost per person; and whether he is getting value for money in using such homes.

Mr. Newton: The most recent provisional figures for Great Britain indicate that at December 1983 there were 23,000 supplementary pensioners in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes who were claiming supplementary benefit as boarders to help them meet the home's charge. The average supplementary benefit payment was £75·25. Information on the number of homes concerned is not available.

I also refer the hon. Member to proposals published for consultation by my right hon. Friend today designed to improve the arrangements under which such payments are made.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families were given payments by local authorities towards funeral expenses during 1983; and at what average level and what overall cost.

Mr. Newton: Local authorities have no specific powers to make payments to families towards the cost of funerals but they have a duty to arrange for the burial or cremation of a body where no suitable arrangements have been made. Information is not held centrally on the number and cost of such burials.

Personal and Occupational Pensions

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the Government's policy regarding the role of personal and occupational pensions schemes in augmenting the state retirement pension provision; and if he has any estimates on savings to public funds resulting from the existence of private sector pension schemes.

Mr. Newton: Our consultative proposals for a new system of personal pensions emphasise the need to ensure that occupational pension schemes continue to play a vital role in retirement provision. Personal pensions will expand the scope of private provision and give employees more choice in the way they save for their old age.

Private pensions save public expenditure to the extent that they reduce reliance on means-tested benefits. No estimates of such savings are available. However, published estimates produced for my right hon. Friend's inquiry into provision for retirement show that occupational pensions are currently estimated to account for 22 per cent. of pensioners' total gross income compared with 15 per cent. in 1951. The share of pensioners' income derived from all State benefits has risen from 42 per cent. to 60 per cent. over the same period.

Constant Attendance Allowance

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce measures to reduce from six to three months the gap between being able to claim for constant attendance allowance and the onset of the illness or condition requiring that degree of care and attention.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 14 February at column 162.

National Insurance Contributions

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the saving in the 1985-86 financial year of abolishing the ceiling on national insurance contributions for (a) the employed, (b) the self-employed and (c) employers.

Mr. Whitney: If the upper earnings limit for class 1 contributions and the upper profits limit for class 4 contributions were to be abolished in 1985-86—but the ceiling retained for the contracted-out rebate — the additional contribution revenue would be:

(a) £620 million from employees.
(b) £75 million from self-employed.
(c) £720 million from employers.

These figures are on the same assumption as Cmnd. 9386.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the Government have any plans to carry out or fund any research into the incidence of cancer among farmers, farm workers and residents in areas of high pesticide use;

(2) if he will seek to assess the incidence of ear, nose, throat and other cancers in areas with high rates of agrochemical use.

Mr. John Patten: The research needs of the Department in this field are met by the Medical Research Council, which is the main Government-funded body supporting medical research from its grant-in-aid under the Science Vote of the Department of Education and Science.

The MRC environmental epidemiology unit at Southampton is investigating the possibilities of research in this field and is keeping the Department informed.

Our medical advisers are aware of a survey of Swedish agricultural workers in which it was found that the risk for most types of cancer of contracting the disease was lower than the respective national average. In some cases, the diminution of risk was statistically significant. For less than a quarter of the cancers, the risk was slightly greater than the national average.

In view of the work being carried out by the Medical Research Council and the reassuring results of the Swedish survey, further studies at present would seem unnecessary.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the procedures he will follow in appointing members of family practitioner committees; and whether he will publish lists of nominations received and the biographical details of both those appointed and those rejected.

Mr. John Patten: We shall normally appoint a chairman and 30 members to each family practitioner committee. Those committees relating to more than four district health authorities may have more members. Fifteen appointments are being made from nominations submitted by local representative committees of the family practitioner professions in the area. Four appointments each will be made from district health and local authority nominations. The remaining seven places will be filled from nominations provided by a wide range of organisations and from individuals. We shall appoint the people we consider best suited for the job. A measure of continuity is desirable. Prospective members must have an interest in primary health care and financial, legal, management and personnel experience is also being sought.

Chairmen and members will be asked to provide some biographical details for each family practitioner committee to publish locally. Approximately 7,000 nominations have been received; the details in them were supplied in confidence and it would be discourteous to publish them without the permission of the people concerned. Such permission could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the estimated savings from the changes made regarding the payment of family income supplement; how many families will be affected; what will be the effect on their real incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the family income supplement uprating change made this November. The change was made because FIS awards, once made, continue for a year regardless of any change in the recipient's circumstances, including increases in income. In view of this, we concluded that it was anomalous that awards should be uprated during their currency, especially because the result of doing so involves increasing benefit for many families whose circumstances would not justify it at the time.

The FIS savings from the change are estimated at about £10 million. Some 210,000 families were receiving FIS in November and we expect that about 10,000 will be able, under transitional arrangements, to take full advantage of the new levels if they so wish. The difference between the FIS received by the remainder and that which would have been received if awards had been increased in line with previous practice depends upon a number of factors, including the length of time an award has to run after the uprating date (27 November), the number of children in a family and the amount of family income. The estimated average amount involved is £2·40 weekly or £55 in total over the remaining period of the award. Previous estimates indicate that about one half of FIS recipients receive rent and rates rebates and in these cases the average total amount involved would be £37 because of the knock-on effect of those benefits on FIS. Some families will also be receiving supplementary benefit and, because the amount of FIS is taken into account in assessing that benefit, they will suffer no loss during the period they are receiving it.

Medical Consultants (Unemployment)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of consultant medical practitioners in each of the regional health authorities in England and Wales who have been registered as unemployed for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available.

Clatterbridge Hospital

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the funding of the Mersey regional health authority is sufficient to meet the needs of the centre for radiotherapy at Clatterbridge hospital; what representations he has received about this centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is for regional health authorities to assess priorities within their regions and to allocate resources accordingly. Mersey region envisages a major expansion of services at Clatterbridge with additional equipment and capital investment. A thorough review of all aspects of the centre is under way including staffing levels, prospective accommodation needs and the management of the treatment of patients.

We have received a number of letters from hon. Members.

RHAs (General Managers)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria he applies when considering a recommended appointment to the position of general manager in regional health authorities.

Mr. John Patten: Our guidance to health authorities specifies that we shall wish to satisfy ourselves that each regional general manager has the capacity to undertake the general management function.

Health Authorities (Members)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when, further to the answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 116, he will write to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras about biographical details of members of health authorities.

Mr. John Patten: I wrote to the hon. Member on 28 November.

Federation Dentaire Internationale

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Britain is a member of the Federation Dentaire Internationale.

Mr. John Patten: The Federation Dentaire Internationale is a federation of national dental associations of which the British Dental Association, as distinct from the British Government, is an active member.

Social Security Reviews

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much time he expects to allow for public discussion between the publication of the results and conclusions of the social security review and any necessary legislation being brought before the House;

(2) if he will ensure that no steps are taken to implement the recommendations of the social security review where legislation is not required until they have been debated in the House.

Mr. Newton: These are matters for consideration in formulating the Government's conclusions and proposals. Any recommendations which affected the nature, scope or levels of benefits, the conditions of eligibility and the rules of entitlement would require amending legislation before they could be implemented, and this would be subject to the normal parliamentary scrutiny.

Blindness Allowance

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department last had consultations with organisations acting for blind people about a blindness allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I last met a delegation representing the Royal National Institute for the Blind, the National Federation of the Blind and the National League of the Blind and Disabled on 13 November. My right hon. Friend and I previously met these organisations in January, and there was a subsequent meeting with officials of the Department in May. On the question of the introduction of a blindness allowance, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) on 22 October at column 514.

Essential Drugs Policies

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what encouragement the British Government give to countries implementing essential drugs policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: As mentioned in my right hon. and learned Friend's speech to the World Health Assembly on 9 May 1984, the British Government assist less developed countries by offering practical training in the National Health Service and the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry to medicines control inspectors. This leads to the improvement of the systems of ordering, stocking and distributing drugs down to hospitals, regions and outstation dispensaries. We also provide quality assurance for exports through the World Health Organisation certification scheme.

The Overseas Development Administration is always willing to consider requests from developing countries in receipt of aid for help with the implementation of the World Health Organisation's action programme for essential drugs.

NHS (Food Hygiene)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to amend the Food Act 1984 so as to extend to hospitals and other National Health Service establishments the powers of entry of environmental health officers and their subsequent powers of enforcement in relation to breaches of food hygiene regulations.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to make an order under section 133 of the Food Act 1984 to provide that the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970 should apply to National Health Service premises.

It is the Department's policy that the standards of food hygiene in hospitals should comply with those laid down in the regulations and that health authorities should provide open access to local authority environmental health officers to visit, inspect and report on catering departments and food handling areas. Departmental guidance to these authorities provides that the recommendations of the EHOs should immediately be considered for appropriate action. We are not aware of any evidence to suggest that these arrangements are not working well.

NHS (Ancillary Services)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the standard of provision of ancillary services in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Census (Ethnic Question)

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response the Government propose to make to the Home Affairs Committee report on an ethnic question in the census.

Mr. Fowler: The Government's reply to the second report from the Home Affairs Committee is published today — Cmnd. 9238. The Government welcome this report and accept that the Committee has made a good case in principle for the inclusion of an ethnic question, but it will necessarily be several years before final decisions can be taken about what questions are to be included in the next census. As I announced in the House on 14 July 1983 at column 450 census planning will proceed on the assumption that the next census will be held in 1991. In the meantime, valuable information about the numbers and circumstances of the ethnic minorities will continue to be available from other sources. A decision on whether to supplement information derived from these sources with national data from an ethnic question in the census will depend on practical issues and in particular, as the Committee recognises, on the public acceptability of such a question. This will need to be tested well in advance. Accordingly, the Government have decided to invite the registrars general to carry out whatever tests are necessary to see if a reliable and publicly acceptable census question on ethnic origin can be developed for inclusion in the 1991 census if that is the wish of the Government of the day.

NATIONAL FINANCE

RIBA (Correspondence)

31. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reply he sent to the Royal Institute of British Architects about resources for building construction in answer to its letter of 31 October.

Mr. Peter Rees: I have written to the Royal Institute of British Architects explaining that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is prepared to meet the Group of Eight to discuss their particular concerns about the local authority capital controls system. If a meeting is arranged, I shall hope to attend it.

Scientific Research Capital Allowance

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the last fiscal year, what is the cost to the Exchequer of the scientific research capital allowance.

Mr. Moore: The cost is tentatively estimated to be £350 million.

Capital Outflow

Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the approximate outflow of capital from the United Kingdom since May 1979.

Mr. Peter Rees: The net outflow of investment and other capital transactions between the second quarters of 1979 and 1984 was £17 billion.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Skinner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the real value of the pound sterling compared with its value in May 1979.

Mr. Peter Rees: There is no unique measure of real exchange rates. The one used in the following table is calculated from the sterling exchange rate index and GDP deflators in domestic and competitors' economies, which have a relatively broad coverage of price movements.

	£ real exchange rate (1980 = 100)*
1979 Second Quarter	82
1984 Second Quarter (latest)	84
Percentage change	+2·4

* Competitors' price movements are a weighted average of prices in other major OECD countries; the weights are as in the IMF's multilateral exchange rate model.

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what deflator has been used in paragraph 2.27 of the Autumn Statement 1984 to produce the real terms reduction of about 3 per cent.

Mr. Peter Rees: The cost terms reduction is calculated by reference to the GDP deflator assumption in paragraph 1.60 of the Autumn Statement.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the totals of local authority relevant current expenditure in 1984-85, plans and budgets, referred to in paragraph 2.27 of the Autumn Statement 1984, showing the figures (a) in 1984-85 definitions, comparable with table 2.18.1 of Cmnd. 9143-II, and (b) in 1985-86 definitions, comparable with the figure of £25·5 billion in paragraph 2.27.

Mr. Peter Rees: The 1984-85 figures are as follows:

	Plans (Cmnd. 9143)	Budgets
England	20,389	21,451
Scotland	2,737	2,869
Wales	1,253	1,274
Great Britain	24,379	25,592

The 1985-86 figures have been adjusted to take account of the transfer of certain functions away from local authority responsibility. So, to put 1984-85 figures on to the same definition, adjustments need to be made for these transfers.

First, a deduction has to be made from plans and budgets to reflect the creation of London Regional Transport; secondly, a deduction has to be made to reflect the transfer to the Manpower Services Commission of funding for some aspects of non-advanced further education in England and Wales; and, thirdly, a deduction has to be made from Scottish provision to reflect the transfer of financial responsibility for two further education colleges from local authorities to the Secretary of State.

After making the estimated adjustments necessary to put the 1984-85 figures on to this definition, the figures are as follows:

	Plans	Budgets
England	20,204	21,195
Scotland	2,727	2,859
Wales	1,250	1,271
Great Britain	24,181	25,323

Local authorities are paying the national insurance surcharge at 1 per cent. in 1984-85: they will not pay it in 1985-86. After further adjustment for NIS abolition, the Great Britain figures for 1984-85 become £24·0 billion (plans) and £25·15 billion (budgets). These compare with the Autumn Statement figure of £25·5 billion for 1985-86.

£1 Coin and Note

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received (a) in favour of keeping the £1 note and (b) in favour of keeping the £1 coin since his Autumn Statement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: About 750 letters have been received in the Treasury since the Autumn Statement. Most of them criticise the size and design of the coin, but are not necessarily against the withdrawal of the note. Some 30 letters so far received favour the Government's action.

Personal Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the saving if (a) all tax reliefs and (b) personal tax allowances were set against the standard rate of tax only;

(2) if he will construct an index, with 1978-79 equalling 100, of the changes in the level of income tax and national insurance contributions for each subsequent year for a taxpayer on (a) two thirds, (b) three quarters, (c) average, (d) twice, (e) five times and (f) 10 times average earnings for households where the taxpayer is (i) married and (ii) married with two children, assuming in all cases that the wife is in paid employment and earning the average part-time wage received by women;

(3) if he will publish for 1983-84 and 1984-85 the following information for (i) a single person, (ii) a married man without children, (iii) a married man with two children aged under 11 years, (iv) a married man with four children (a) the tax threshold at current prices, (b) the tax threshold at 1949-50 prices (index 1949-50 equals 100), (c) the tax threshold as a percentage of average manual earnings, (d) tax-free income at current prices, (e) tax-free income at 1949-50 prices (index 1949-50 equals 100), (f) tax-free income as a percentage of average income, (g) break-even point at current prices, (h) break-even point at 1949-50 prices (index 1949-50 equals 100) and (i) break-even point as a percentage of average manual earnings, in the light of the latest information on earnings levels;

(4) if he will publish a table in the Official Report giving his latest estimates for 1984-85 of the following information for a single man, a married man and a married man with two children in each case, a man on two thirds average earnings, 75 per cent. average earnings, 100 per cent. average earnings, 200 per cent. average earnings and 500 per cent. average earnings (a) gross earnings, (b) income tax payable, (c) (b) as a percentage of (a), (d) national insurance contributions, (e) (d) as a percentage of (a), (f) child benefit, (g) (f) as a percentage of (a), (h) net earnings, (i) (h) as a percentage of (a), (j) indirect taxes, and (k) (j) as a percentage of (a) at 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Chile

Dame Judith Hart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals for financial assistance to Chile will be considered by the International Monetary Fund before the end of 1984.

Mr. Lawson: I understand that the executive board of the International Monetary Fund is to consider a waiver of the performance criteria for Chile's current standby arrangement on 7 December.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage share of (a) employment, (b) exports and (c) gross domestic product coming from manufacturing industry in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the United States of America and (iii) West Germany in 1960, 1970, 1975, 1979, 1980, 1982 and 1983.

Mr. Channon: I have been asked to reply.

Data on consistent and comparable definitions are not readily obtainable. The available information is as follows.

Milk

Mr. Kennedy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he expects to accrue to the Consolidated Fund as a result of the introduction and operation of the milk supplementary levy (outgoers) scheme from capital gains tax payments.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 23 November 1984, c. 294]: I regret that information upon which to base an estimate of the capital gains tax yield from payments under the scheme is not available. To the extent to which capital gains tax eventually applies, the yield will depend upon the reliefs available; for example, the annual exempt amount, retirement relief and so on.

Mortgages (Tax Relief)

Mr. McTaggart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual cost of tax relief on mortgage interest in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 270]: The latest estimates are as follows. Figures for 1982-83 and later years are provisional.

Mortgage interest tax relief

	Total cost £ million
	Scotland	United Kingdom
1980-81	120	1,960
1981-82	120	2,050
1982-83	130	2,150
*1983-84	165	2,750
*1984-85	210	3,500

* Includes the cost of relief in respect of mortgages previously under the option mortgage scheme.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average subsidy per owner-occupier through tax relief on mortgage interest in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 270]: The average cost of mortgage interest tax relief per owner-occupier in 1984-85 is estimated to be about £270 both in Scotland and in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will update the statistics given in tables 5 and 6 and chart 1 of the "Survey of Personal Incomes 1979-80" for all the subsequent financial years for which statistics are available.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 271]: The tables are as follows. Figures for 1982-83 are based on provisional results from the survey of that year. The information required for chart 1 is included in table 5.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil Survey

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how the work of the soil survey of England and Wales has been financed;

(2) when he will announce his decision about the future of the soil survey of England and Wales.

Mrs. Fenner: The soil survey is the responsibility of the Agricultural and Food Research Council. My Ministry currently pays for the work—£1·9 million in 1983-84—and it is this funding which is being reviewed. We will announce our decision about future funding as soon as possible after we have considered the views of the AFRC and the Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food.

Butter

Mr. Wareing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to permit the special sale of butter from surplus stocks, available in the United Kingdom, in the new year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The Community has made provision for the sale of 39,200 tonnes of butter from United Kingdom intervention stocks for direct consumption. This butter is being made available to the trade during the period 16 November to 31 January. The implementation of this scheme was announced in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 13 November 1984, at column 166, and the detailed provisions for application in the United Kingdom are contained in the Butter (EEC Special Sale) Regulations which were laid before Parliament on the same day.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many environmental health officers are employed in his Department.

Mr. Jopling: None, but my Department maintains close working contacts with environmental health officers employed by the Department of Health and Social Security.

Pesticides

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to screen all pesticides for efficacy; and if he will arrange for the screening of all pesticides already cleared but not approved.

Mrs. Fenner: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. John) on Monday 19 November 1984 at column 77. The screening of pesticides cleared for safety but not approved for efficacy will be undertaken over a period of time taking account of the importance of the case and available resources.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will study the mechanisms under the United States Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act for disclosure to the public of data resulting from environmental health and safety tests submitted by manufacturers to gain registration of a pesticide, with a view to introducing an equivalent system into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: We are aware of the provisions of this legislation. The treatment of data submitted by manufacturers seeking approval of pesticides under future United Kingdom arrangements will be the subject of consultation as regulations to implement part III of the Food and Environment Protection Bill are prepared.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take, under the Food and Environment Protection Bill [Lords], to inform the public when approval of a pesticide is withdrawn on environmental, health or safety grounds.

Mrs. Fenner: Ministers intend to announce the withdrawal of pesticides in the same manner as they will announce their approval—by entry in the London and Regional Gazettes, and, as in the recent case of DDT, by press notice, where appropriate.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to require hazard warning information to be included in pesticide advertisements and on manufacturers' labels.

Mrs. Fenner: Hazard warnings are required as an integral part of existing pesticide labelling requirements. These requirements will become statutory when the proposed legislation is implemented.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to seek to make it illegal to sell, offer for sale or distribute for sale or harvest food or food crops contaminated with a pesticide which has not been cleared or approved under the pesticides safety precautions scheme, or its replacement, for use on that crop.

Mrs. Fenner: The Food and Environment Protection Bill will give powers to make regulations to (a) control the import, sale, supply and use of pesticides and (b) seize or dispose of anything treated with any pesticide which contravenes these conditions. Ministers intend to make use of these powers by means of implementing regulations, which will be the subject of wide-ranging public consultation during 1985.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposals in the Food and Environment Protection Bill [Lords] to control advertising of pesticides.

Mrs. Fenner: The powers afforded by clause 15(1)(c) would be sufficiently wide to permit Ministers to control the advertising of pesticides if at any time they considered it necessary.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those pesticides registered for use in the United States of America, and cleared under the pesticides safety precaution scheme in the United Kingdom, for which manufacturers' test data are available from the United States but not from the Government or industry in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: No. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government intend to set legal limits to residues in specified fruit and vegetables in compliance with EEC directive 76/895.

Mrs. Fenner: Directive 76/895, as amended, fixing maximum limits for pesticide residues on fruit and vegetables, has been implemented in the United Kingdom by administrative means. Powers to set legal limits will be provided by the Food and Environment Protection Bill, and the timing and extent ot their implementation will be the subject of a full public consultation.

Internal Drainage Districts

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many internal drainage districts there are in England; and how many of these are administered by internal drainage boards, and how many are managed by water authorities, for each year for which data are available since 1974.

Mrs. Fenner: This information is given in the table below:

Year	Total Number of IDDs	Managed by a water authority	Administered by IDBs
1974	321	44	277
1975	314	44	270
1976	314	44	257
1977	292	35	249
1978	284	35	242
1979	265	35	238
1980	261	23	234
1981	252	23	233
1982	251	18	231
1983	249	18	228
1984	246	18	227
November 1984	244	17	227

Notes:

(1) The Lower Wye IDD and Powysland IDD, which are included in these figures, are situated partly in England and partly in Wales.

(2) Prior to the Transfer of Functions (Wales) (No. 1) Order 1978 the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food had responsibility for internal drainage districts (IDDs) in Wales; therefore, figures for 1974 to 1977 include IDDs in Wales.

Land Drainage Schemes (Severn-Trent)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department part-funded a study commissioned by Severn-Trent water authority and carried out by Silsoe college on the rate of uptake of land drainage schemes carried out by the Severn-Trent water authority; what where its findings; and if he will arrange for a copy of the study report to be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department contributed towards the cost of the Severn/Trent water authority's study to obtain access to its findings. A paper on the report was presented by the Severn/Trent water authority and Silsoe college at the annual conference of river engineers in July 1984. A copy of that paper is being placed in the Library. The full report is the property of the Severn-Trent water authority.

Aspartame

Mr. Dykes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in view of the observations made by the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee in its report on the review of sweeteners in food and the current level of use of aspartame in aqueous solutions, he will arrange for a review of its use to be undertaken as soon as possible.

Mrs. Fenner: Between the publication of the report and the making of the Sweeteners in Food Regulations 1983 the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee, together with the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, examined representations for the use of aspartame in soft drinks and recommended that it was safe and suitable for this purpose.

A review of the use of all sweeteners will be undertaken in accordance with the recommendations in the report.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will announce the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowance for 1985.

Mr. Jopling: The annual review of economic conditions in the less favoured areas has now been completed.

As far as the severely disadvantaged areas are concerned—that is, those which have had less favoured areas status in the past—I am glad to announce that, despite the pressure on public expenditure, we are proposing to maintain the allowances at their present levels.

This year, for the first time, we have also had to consider the rates to be paid in the disadvantaged areas —that is, those marginal land areas which were given LFA status for the first time in February of this year. So far as these are concerned, my colleagues and I are proposing that the rates for 1985 should be £22·25 per eligible cow and £2·12 per eligible ewe. Payments in these areas will also be subject to certain overall maxima—of £45 per hectare and nine ewes per hectare — which recognise that the land concerned is less handicapped than in the existing LFA but also the need to discourage overstocking, in the interests of conservation and good husbandry. We estimate that these payments will bring an extra £4·5 million to the marginal areas, and this additional new expenditure is provided for in the Estimates laid before the House.

Draft regulations embodying these proposals are being laid before the House today and they have also been notified to the European Commission, as required by the appropriate EC directive.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Law of the Sea

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what benefits will be lost to the United Kingdom if the United Kingdom fails to register under the preparatory investment protection resolution of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Rifkind: I am not aware of any United Kingdom entity with deep seabed mining interests which wishes to take advantage of the deep seabed regime presently proposed under the United Nations law of the sea convention.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (i) Commonwealth countries, (ii) European Economic Community countries, and (iii) other European countries apart from the United Kingdom do not support the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Rifkind: Seven other Commonwealth countries have not signed the United Nations law of the sea convention: Botswana, Brunei, Kiribati, Malawi, St. Kitts and Nevis, Tonga and Western Samoa. In the European Community, the Federal Republic of Germany has announced that it will not sign. Italy has not signed. Both Belgium and Luxembourg have announced that they intend signature. Elsewhere in Europe, Albania, the Holy See, Liechtenstein, San Marino, Spain and Turkey have not signed the convention.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will recommend that Her Majesty's Government should accede to the United Nations convention on the law of the sea before the deadline of 9 December;

(2) which aspects of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea are still unacceptable to Her Majesty's Government; what progress has been made in the last 12 months to resolve such difficulties; and what progress he expects to make in the future;

(3) if he will make a statement on the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 9 November, at column 41, to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Mr. Skeet).

Warsaw Pact (Talks)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to hold talks with his counterparts in Warsaw pact countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Within the next year my right hon. and learned Friend plans to hold talks with several of his Warsaw pact counterparts either in their capitals or in London. My right hon. and learned Friend looks forward to receiving Mr. Gromyko in London next year. We believe that such meetings are an important contribution to the development of better relations between East and West.

Mr. John Sprange

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State or Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Berlin legal authorities consulted him before proceeding with the prosecution of Mr. John Sprange in connection with the flying of a hot air balloon.

Mr. Luce: No. As is required by the law applicable in Berlin and as indicated in my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affair's reply to the hon. Member of 26 November, at column 384, the Berlin prosecutor applied to the Allied Kommandatura Berlin for authorisation for the German courts to exercise jurisdiction in this case.

Tristan da Cunha

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State or Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what exports there are from Tristan da Cunha; and where are their markets.

Mr. Luce: The main exports are crawfish and stamps. Crawfish are exported by Tristan Investments Ltd. Marketing is the company's responsibility, but I understand its main markets are at present the United States, France and Japan. The stamp market is worldwide.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State or Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who designed the wind-powered electricity generator that was blown down on Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Luce: Windmatic a/s of Denmark.

Wirebird

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 384, if the evidence of expert visitors that the wirebird, endemic to St. Helena, is not a threatened species, has been published.

Mr. Luce: Yes, in a variety of articles in ornithological journals.

Mr. Yasser Arafat

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State or Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during Her Majesty's ambassador to Tunisia's meeting with Yasser Arafat in September, any discussion took place regarding a possible visit by Mr. Arafat to the United Kingdom; and whether, in the course of that meeting, Mr. Adams reminded Mr. Arafat of Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the recognition of Israel and the abandonment of terrorism by Al-Fatah.

Mr. Luce: Her Majesty's ambassador at Tunis saw Mr. Arafat in mid-September, in accordance with previous practice, for a general introductory talk. We do not disclose details of matters discussed on such occasions.

DEFENCE

HMS Conqueror

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet received the report of the board of inquiry into the loss of the control room log of HMS Conqueror; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: In my answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 13 November, I undertook to consider making a statement to the House when the report of the board of inquiry, convened by the Commander-in-Chief Fleet on 25 October, to inquire into the apparent disappearance of HMS Conqueror's control room logs for the period April to September 1982, was available and had been considered by the commander-in-chief and the Ministry of Defence.

I have already made it clear that it is not our normal practice to publish reports of boards of inquiry which are not courts of law. Nevertheless, I believe that the House would wish to have as much information on this matter as is possible.

I regret to announce that our inquiries so far have failed to locate the missing logs or to identify a proven explanation for their disappearance. It is clear that the logs were compiled and probably remained on board the submarine until October or November 1982. The submarine returned to Devonport on 5 November 1982 to prepare for a refit, which started on 17 January 1983. It has not been possible to establish with certainty that the logs were not transferred to the submarine refit complex at Devonport when the submarine started her refit. However, this is considered unlikely.

There are several possible causes for the loss. Loss in transit between the submarine and the Ministry of Defence records office at Hayes, mishandling at Hayes and dispatch to an incorrect address are all considered to be unlikely. Indeed, there is no proof that the logs ever left HMS Conqueror. Before the ship's company moved out of the submarine for the refit, a considerable amount of material, which was no longer required, was placed in bags and incinerated in Devonport dockyard. The possibility that the logs were inadvertently destroyed at this time cannot be ruled out. They could also have been mishandled and put in an unmarked or incorrectly addressed envelope or left in a locker which has since been disposed of; deliberately and unlawfully destroyed, although there is no evidence to suggest this; or removed as souvenirs or for their assumed political or financial value.

I have referred the matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions and I understand that he has asked the Metropolitan police to conduct an investigation.

A specially constituted team will be carrying out further searches for the logs; and in the future the records office at Hayes will maintain a record of all control room logs received. It is clear from the board of inquiry's report that the proper procedures for the custody and disposal of confidential control room logs had not been followed in HMS Conqueror for many months, including the period between March and October 1982 covered by the missing logs. Although the logs for the immediately preceding and following periods have been located, this failure no doubt contributed to the loss of the documents for the intervening six months, as well as to the failure to discover the loss earlier. Disciplinary action against those responsible for breaches of the regulations will be considered when the further investigations to which I have referred have been completed. Meanwhile, action is being taken to clarify the regulations.

In view of the investigations which are still proceeding I cannot give any more information at this stage. A further statement will be made to the House when the investigations have been concluded.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since April 1982 on which disciplinary action was taken against an officer or crew member of HMS Conqueror; and for what reason.

Mr. Stanley: On the information readily available, since April 1982 no offences have occurred which warranted detention or other serious punishment. A number of minor offences attracted lesser disciplinary action.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence why he has referred the diary of an officer of HMS Conqueror to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Heseltine: A copy of a diary which apparently was kept by a member of the crew of HMS Conqueror is in the possession of my Department. The diary contains classified information and it appears that its contents have been communicated to persons not authorised to receive such information. This constitutes a prima facie breach of the Official Secrets Acts. In the circumstances of this case my Department considered that it was a matter for reference to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Marine Engineering Equipment (Technical Publications)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Defence if a final decision has now been made to contract out to the private sector the responsibility for the procurement of technical publications for marine engineering equipment and systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since the reply given to my hon. Friend on 1 August, at column 279, invitations to tender for this task have been issued to a wide range of firms. A detailed examination of the tenders is planned to begin in the new year. It will, therefore, be some months yet before a final decision can be taken.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the West German Government about the lessons for the United Kingdom of the West German Tornado lost flying in the vicinity of Radio Free Europe in Bavaria.

Mr. Lee: As I told the hon. Gentleman on 1 August, at columns 282-82, and 9 November, at column 44, there is a continual exchange of flight safety information among the three nations which operate the aircraft.

Porton Down (Animal Experiments)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether non-human primates are currently being bred at, or specifically for use at, the chemical research establishment at Porton Down, or have been so bred during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Yes, non-human primates are bred at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, for use in experiments at the establishment. On rare occasions primates have also been purchased from reputable suppliers. All experiments with living animals conducted at the Chemical Defence Establishment comply fully with the requirements of the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876, including the requirement to obtain the special permission of the Home Secretary for the use of primates in such experiments.

Departmental Land (Access)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been agreed with local police governing their access to land owned by his Department.

Mr. Stanley: The access of civil police to defence land is not governed by general administrative arrangements. Civil police officers may enter defence land if this is agreed by my Department, or otherwise under authority given by common or statute law.

Land and Air Concept

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether exchange visits have taken place between British officers developing the land and air concept and the officers of the American Army's training and doctrine command.

Mr. Stanley: The concept of operations in question is under development by NORTHAG, which is a NATO headquarters. I cannot say what contacts its international staff have.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the development of the land and air concept will necessitate a revision of the British Army's tactical manual.

Mr. Stanley: No. Our tactical doctrine is continually being evolved. Naturally this is reflected in the manual which supports it.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the development of the operational concept for land and air operations in the central region is part of the follow-on force attack plan.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the concept being developed by General Sir Nigel Bagnall, Commander Northern Army Group, under the title land and air battle is similar to the airland battle concept of the United States Army;

(2) if he will precisely define the differences between the land air concept and the airland concept of the United States Army.

Mr. Stanley: Airland battle is the United States Army's, not NATO's, agreed tactical doctrine designed to meet any contingency worldwide. The concept of operations which General Bagnall is developing in his NATO capacity as commander, northern army group is concerned with the defence of his command within the agreed strategy of forward defence and flexible response.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether concepts parallel to the land and air concept under development with Northern Army Group and 2nd Allied Tactical Air Force are being developed for other sections of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's command structure.

Mr. Stanley: NATO commanders keep their concepts of operation, which are their plans for accomplishing their missions, under review in the light of developments in the warsaw pact threat and in NATO capabilities. These concepts vary according to the differing natures of their commands.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the month and year the development of the land and air concept of operations for Northern Army Group and 2nd Allied Tactical Air Force was authorised.

Mr. Stanley: The NORTHAG concept of operations was introduced following the adoption by NATO of its strategy of forward defence and flexible response in 1967. It is the responsibility of NATO commanders to be continually developing their concept of operations to meet their operational responsibilities.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will define the relationship between the follow-on force attack concept and the land and air concept being developed by Northern Army Group and 2nd Allied Tactical Air Force;

(2) whether he will make a statement on the land and air concept being developed by the British Army and the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Stanley: In his NATO capacity, the commander of the Northern Army Group is developing a revised concept of operations which should ensure a more effective defence of his command within the principles of NATO's agreed strategy of forward defence and flexible response. It does not relate to follow on forces attack which is a long-term planning guideline.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procurement decisions are associated with the development of the land and air concept under development by the Northern Army Group and 2nd Allied Tactical Air Force.

Mr. Butler: No such decisions arise at this stage.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the land and air concept being developed by British forces includes any contingency for the use of nuclear artillery and surface to surface missiles;

(2) whether any nuclear option is included in the land and air concept being developed by Northern Army Group and 2nd Allied Tactical Air Force.

Mr. Stanley: The revised concept of operations being developed by NATO's Northern Army Group will not alter the role of nuclear weapons within NATO's strategy of forward defence and flexible response.

Policy Changes

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish, as a matter of urgency, a White Paper detailing the changes currently under development in British defence policy.

Mr. Stanley: No. My right hon. Friend will be publishing his "Statement on the Defence Estimates" next year in the normal way.

Army Tactical Manual

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a revision of the British Army's tactical manual is in progress.

Mr. Stanley: Yes. A complete revision has been under way for over two years.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the most recently revised version of the British Army's basic tactical manual was issued.

Mr. Stanley: The latest complete revision of the British Army's basic tactical manual was issued between 1968 and 1979.

WINTEX '85

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether WINTEX '85 is a NATO exercise;

(2) whether WINTEX '85 will have a nuclear phase;

(3) whether WINTEX '85 will have a chemical phase;

(4) what is the purpose of the WINTEX '85 exercise;

(5) whether WINTEX '85 will involve the exercise of the National Command authority in the United Kingdom;

(6) what will be the date and duration of the WINTEX '85 exercise;

(7) whether any novel features will be included in the WINTEX '85 exercise;

(8) whether WINTEX '85 will involve local authorities in civil defence planning at (a) county level and (b) district level;

(9) whether WINTEX '85 will simulate the closure of essential service routes to the general public;

(10) whether WINTEX '85 will simulate the internment of subversives;

(11) whether WINTEX '85 will involve the simulated use of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stanley: Exercise WINTEX-CIMEX 85 is the eighth of a series of NATO-wide command post exercises conducted by Alliance members. It will take place from 26 February to 13 March 1985. Its objective will be to test military command and control procedures and to exercise Alliance authorities in procedures intended for use in times of international tension and war. To ensure that procedures across the whole spectrum of a crisis are practised a nuclear consultation phase is always included. In the United Kingdom, Government Departments will be participating, but not local authorities. Details of the scenario for the exercise and the play itself are classified, but are based upon NATO's deterrence strategy. As in previous exercises, the full spectrum of NATO's procedures and plans for crisis management will be tested.

General Belgrano

Mr. Tam Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how long it was before HMS Conqueror's sighting of the General Belgrano was relayed to the task force from Northwood;

(2) at what time the request from Admiral Woodward that the General Belgrano be sunk was received by Northwood;

(3) how long the elapse of time was between the drafting of the sighting report by HMS Conqueror on 1 May 1982 and its receipt by Northwood; and whether there were any communications difficulties between HMS Conqueror and Northwood.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Navy (Boards of Inquiry)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many boards of inquiry have been authorised by the Commander in Chief Fleet in 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively; and if he will list them.

Mr. Stanley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Naval Log Books

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if (a) the control room log for April-May 1982 and (b) the signals log for April-May 1982 of HMS Splendid are available to him;

(2) if (a) the control room log, (b) the signals log and (c) the captain's account of HMS Splendid have been seen by (i) Ministers and (ii) any officials of his Department since the end of the Falklands conflict.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 335]: HMS Splendid's control room log for April-May 1982 and her commanding officer's narrative account for that period are available and have been seen by officials but not by Ministers. On the signals log, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy logs, other than signal logs, are routinely destroyed.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1984, c. 335]: Such information that is readily available will be included in the letter which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said he would send to the hon. Member in his reply on 22 November 1984, at column 227.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Proceedings

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what is the policy of the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the continuation of criminal proceedings within his oversight in cases where a material prosecution witness has died.

The Attorney-General: In the event that, during the course of proceedings conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions, a prosecution witness dies, it is the practice of the director to review the case and assess whether the remaining evidence remains sufficient. In cases where the director considers that the evidence is now insufficient to sustain the charge, the proceedings are abandoned.

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General whether he was consulted by the Director of Public Prosecutions before the Director decided to withdraw proceedings in Cardiff magistrates' court on 5 November against a man for rape following the death of the alleged victim of the attack.

The Attorney-General: No. In the case to which the hon. Member refers, the effect of the death of the complainant was to render the prosecution evidence insufficient to establish certain essential elements of the alleged offence. There was no other course open to the Director of Public Prosecutions save to withdraw the charge. There was no reason for him to consult me.

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what is the policy of the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the continuation of proceedings within his oversight in cases of rape where the alleged victim (a) dies before the case comes to trial or (b) otherwise becomes unfit, unable or unwilling to give evidence.

The Attorney-General: The handling of a case of rape in which the complainant dies while proceedings are pending does not differ from that of any other case in which a material prosecution witness had died. I therefore refer the hon. Member to my answer to question No. 113.

In cases where the complainant is temporarily unfit or unable to give evidence an adjournment will usually be sought. Where the unfitness or disability is likely to be permanent or of such duration that a postponement cannot be obtained, the director will review the evidence in the same manner as if the witness were dead.

In circumstances where a complainant is simply unwilling to give evidence, her attendance may be compelled provided she is within the jurisdiction. But only in exceptional circumstances would the director seek to compel the complainant to testify against her will.

Fraud Trials (Reforms)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Law Society's proposed reforms for fraud trials.

The Attorney-General: I assume that the hon. Member's question refers to the evidence given by the Law Society to the committee chaired by the Lord Roskill to consider what improvements can be made in the procedures which govern fraud trials. I myself have submitted evidence to that committee. Consideration of that evidence is a matter for members of the committee and it would not be appropriate for me to pass comment on the evidence of another individual or organisation.

Coroners' Courts (Legal Aid)

Mr. Telezki asked the Attorney-General whether he will make legal aid available in coroners' courts to representatives of the deceased.

The Solicitor-General: Subject to financial eligibility, legal advice and assistance is already available to representatives of the deceased, on any question of English law which may arise in relation to a case in a coroner's court. There are no plans to provide representation by way of legal aid.

WALES

School Leaving Rate

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the school leaving rate at 16 years of age among Welsh pupils and the number, expressed as a percentage, entering colleges of further and higher education, at the latest available date.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Sixty-five per cent. of the pupils in maintained and independent schools in Wales aged 15 at the beginning of the academic year 1982-83, had left by the end of that academic year. The number of 16-year-old students enrolling at maintained colleges of further and higher education in Wales at the beginning of the academic year 1983-84, expressed as a percentage of the 28,990 pupils of that age leaving Welsh schools during the previous academic year, was 50 per cent. This includes full-time, sandwich and part-time day students.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the estimates for spending on home improvement grants by each district council in Wales for 1984-85 indicating, in each case, the potential under or overspend on original estimates (a) in cash terms and (b) in percentage terms.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following table compares district council's original estimates of expenditure on improvement grants in 1984-85, as submitted in April 1984, with their most recent forecast:

Local authorities estimates for spending on improvement grants in 1984/85—April's forecast compared with October's

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many applications for home improvement grants are currently waiting to be processed by district councils in Wales; and how many of these cases involve disabled persons.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 30 September 1984, there were about 69,000 renovation grants awaiting processing. Local authorities do not separately identify grant applications for the disabled on the returns they make to the Department.

Housing (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what amount, in cash and percentage terms, of capital spending by local authorities in Wales, is put aside annually for spending in respect of housing and alterations and adaptations for the disabled; what is the estimate for 1984-85; and what is the average amount set aside for this purpose by local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not collected centrally.

District Councils (Capital Spending)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average amount, in cash and percentage terms, by which district councils in Wales will under or over-spend their capital spending estimates for 1984-85 at present rates of spending.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: District council's most recent forecast of gross capital expenditure counting against the national cash limit is £16·3 million (6·0 per cent.) below the budget figures submitted in April 1984. This represents an average of £440,000 per district. It is likely that the final expenditure figure for 1984-85 will be lower because of the slippage normally associated with capital programmes.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated capital spending budget for Rhymney Valley district council for 1984-85; by what amounts in cash and percentage terms, respectively, the budget is under or over spending limits; and how Rhymney Valley's under or over-spend compares with equivalent figures for the national cash limits for capital spending in Wales for 1984-85.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: Rhymney Valley's budgeted prescribed capital expenditure for 1984-85, as reported in April 1984, was £5·5 million. The authority's legal spending limit is broadly equal to the sum of its capital allocation and the prescribed proportion of capital receipts accruing in 1984-85 or available receipts accumulated in earlier years. This is estimated to be £8·2 million. The budget was, therefore, £2·7 million, or 33 per cent., below the spending limit.

The comparison of expenditure with the national cash limit for Wales is not the same as that for individual authorities. The national cash limit is based on gross expenditure for the year less receipts accruing in the year and takes no account of receipts accumulated in earlier years. In 1984-85 the local authority cash limit for Wales is £237 million. Local authorities budgeted net capital expenditure was £325 million, which is £88 million, or 37 per cent. above the national cash limit.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total estimated spending on housing improvement grants by district councils in Wales for 1984-85; and how this compares with the total for 1983-84 in real and cost terms.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest local authority forecast of expenditure on housing improvement grants in Wales in 1984-85 is £81·7 million. This compares with £109·3 million in 1983-84 (£114·5 million in 1984-85 prices).

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Leeward Islands Air Transport

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will support Leeward Islands Air Transport in its desire to order British Aerospace Super 748 aircraft instead of the French aircraft insisted upon by the European Economic Community.

Mr. Raison: I have made it clear to the development comissioner, Mr. Pisani, that the Government of the Caribbean, who own Leeward Islands Air Transport, would prefer the Super 748 and that the United Kingdom expects the procurement rules of the Lomé convention to be fully and fairly applied in this case. I understand that the Caribbean authorities have not yet formally responded to the European Commission's latest communication on the choice of aircraft. There can be no question of United Kingdom aid while negotiations with the European Community are continuing.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all grants made by his Department to voluntary organisations, giving both the recipient and the amount, together with the date a grant was first made.

Mr. Raison: I would refer my hon. Friend to the face of the Main and Revised Estimates for Overseas Aid 1984-85, Class II, 8, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Ethiopia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the work of the Royal Air Force Hercules on famine relief in Ethiopia; and how long he now expects that work to continue.

Mr. Raison: These aircraft and their crews are doing a magnificent job and I expect them to continue at least until the end of January.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Flooding (Wakefield)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not yet replied to the letters of 24 August and 15 October from the city of Wakefield metropolitan district council concerning the report by his Department on the general question of flooding in the city of Wakefield.

Mr. Mellor: A reply was sent on 14 November.

Sentencing Policy

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is now taking to consult those involved in the criminal justice system on the proposal to provide a power to suspend a sentence of youth custody.

Mr. Mellor: In September the Department wrote to a number of interested bodies seeking their views on the suggestion that the sentence of youth custody should be capable of being suspended in whole or in part. My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering the comments that have been received.

Intermittent Custody

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many written responses he has received to the Green Paper on intermittent custody; and when he expects to be able to publish an evaluation of such responses.

Mr. Mellor: We have received or noted over 40 written responses to the Green Paper, including a number of letters to the press and articles commenting publicly upon it. We have no plans to publish an evaluation of the responses as such, but are giving them careful consideration.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has anything to add to the answer of 22 November to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, column 392, about proposals made by the Equal Opportunities Commission for legislative changes.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that proposals for amending the law on sex equality, originally submitted in 1981 and revised in 1982, no longer represent the commission's current thinking and that they will be replaced by new proposals, which we expect to receive next year.

THE ARTS

Repertory Theatres

Mrs. Renée Short asked the parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what level of funding has been allocated to repertory theatres of similar size to the Royal Exchange Theatre in Manchester during the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

West German Farmers (VAT Rebate)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a note explaining how the rebate of value added tax to West German farmers is expected to operate; and whether, and to what extent, the rebate discriminates against imports.

Mr. Hayhoe: In the context of the common agricultural policy, Agriculture Ministers agreed in March to the dismantling of monetary compensatory amounts and the payment of special aid, in compensation, to farmers in the Federal Republic of Germany, through the harmonised VAT system. To give it effect the Commission has made a proposal for a 20th VAT directive enabling the Federal Republic to pay this special aid in derogation from the provisions of the sixth VAT directive. The special aid is not a VAT rebate and the draft directive would require farmers to show it separately from any VAT, both on their invoices and in their accounts. The special aid would be charged by farmers to their taxable customers who may treat it as deductible input tax. The payment of this special aid should not therefore be reflected in prices to final consumers and thus should not discriminate against imports.

Newspapers, Periodicals and Books (VAT)

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has had as to the rates of value added tax on (a) newspapers, (b) periodicals and (c) books in each European Community state.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following is the latest available information:

	Newspapers per cent.	Periodicals per cent.	Books per cent.
Belgium	0, 6*	0, 6	6
Denmark	0†	0, 22	22
France	2·1‡	2·1, 4, 7‖	7

Ireland	23¶	23	0
Italy	0	0, 2, 18•	2
Luxembourg	6	6	6
Netherlands	5	5	5

* 0 per cent. for newspapers and magazines appearing at least 50 times a year.

† 0 per cent. for newspapers and similar publications published at least once a month.

‡ Daily newspapers and similar publications.

‖ 2·1 per cent. for national political weeklies. 7 per cent. for trade and technical magazines. 4 per cent. for most non-technical and non-trade magazines of general interest to the public — a concession that is due to expire on 31 December 1984, after which the rate will be 7 per cent.

¶ The rate for daily and weekly newspapers will be 18 per cent. from 1 March 1985.

• 0 per cent. for periodicals and other publications registered as such if the price does not exceed 8,000 lire—about £3·50; 2 per cent. for periodicals with a primarily political, trade union, cultural, religious or sporting nature; 18 per cent. for others.

National Health Service

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product is spent on the National Health Service; and how this compares with 1979.

Mr. Peter Rees: The United Kingdom spent 5·6 per cent. of the gross domestic product on the National Health Service in 1983. The corresponding figure for 1979 was 4·8 per cent.

Married Women

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss to the economy of the death of a married woman with two children, her age at death being in the ranges 20 to 30 years, 31 to 40 years, 41 to 50 years and 51 to 60 years, respectively.

Mr. Moore: The losses to the economy arising from the death of a married woman with children depend upon what her future net earnings would have been, and upon the costs of replacing the services which she would have provided to her family. These would both depend upon the circumstances of the particular family.

Pensions

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek powers to tax lump sum superannuation benefits; what representations he has received on the subject; how many have been favourable and how many unfavourable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report giving his latest estimates for 1984-85 of the following information for a single man, a married man and a married man with two children in each case, a man on two-thirds average earnings, 75 per cent. average earnings, 100 per cent. average earnings, 200 per cent. average earnings and 500 per cent. average earnings (a) gross earnings, (b) income tax payable, (c) (b) as a percentage of (a), (d) national insurance contributions, (e) (d) as a percentage of (a), (f) child benefit, (g) (f) as a percentage of (a), (h) net earnings, (i) (h) as a percentage of (a), (j) indirect taxes, and (k) (j) as a percentage of (a) at 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 29 November 1984, c. 579]: The information is in the table. Indirect tax payments cannot be reliably estimated below 75 per cent. or above 150, per cent. of average earnings and are not shown for households outside this range. The average gross earnings figure is for all full time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence and assumes an increase over 1983-84 of 7½ per cent. in line with the underlying rate of increase assumed by the Government Actuary in his recent report.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian MacGregor

Mr. Leighton asked the Prime Minister what remuneration has been paid to Mr. Ian MacGregor at both British Steel and the National Coal Board; and what productivity-linked bonuses have been paid to Lazard Fréres.

The Prime Minister: The British Steel Corporation's annual report and accounts for 1980-81 to 1983-84 record the following total emoluments of Mr. MacGregor as chairman of the BSC:

1980-81 (nine months)	37,864
1981-82	51,750
1982-83	51,960
1983-84 (five months)	22,187

Mr. MacGregor currently recives £5,500 per annum as a part-time member of the BSC Board and £59,325 per annum as the remununeration due to him as chairman of the National Coal Board.

A fixed sum of £675,000 was paid to Lazard Fréres of New York in 1980 for the release of Mr. MacGregor to serve as chairman of BSC. Two performance related payments are due to be made next year, after BSC's results to end March 1985 are known. A payment of £1,500,000 was also made to Lazard Fréres in 1983 at the time of Mr. MacGregor's appointment to the NCB but this agreement does not include any productivity-related bonuses.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services (Exhibition)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to bus services from the Bus and Coach Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Ridley: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 3 to 7 December.

Ticking Train Alert (Stratford)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the ticking train alert at Stratford, East London, on 15 November concerning nuclear fuel flask transportation.

Mr. David Mitchell: CEGB experts attended Temple Mills goods yard on 15 November after ticking was reported coming from a nuclear flask wagon. The noise was found to be due to a monitoring instrument which had been inadvertently left under the wagon cover and was responding normally to background radiation. After removal of the instrument the flask, which was being returned empty from Sellafield, continued on its journey. There was no danger at any time to workers or members of the public.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport by what method and how long it took, for the Central Electricity Generating Board physicist to arrive at the scene of the ticking train alert at Stratford, East London, on 15 November.

Mr. David Mitchell: Questions about the detailed operation of the emergency procedures should be addressed to the CEGB. However I understand that in this case it was swiftly recognised that the circumstances did not constitute an emergency and it was then about an hour before the experts arrived on the scene.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when a decision is to be announced on the proposed M11 link road.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope it will be possible to announce a decision in the spring.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the recommendations of the inspector on the inquiry into the proposed M11 link road.

Mrs. Chalker: The inspector's report will be made available in accordance with the Highways (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1976 at the time the decision is announced.

Stepping Hill Link, Stockport

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about progress in planning Stepping Hill link, Stockport; and what is the planned date for the commencement of construction.

Mrs. Chalker: A single carriageway all-purpose link to the A6 at Stepping Hill will form part of our proposals for the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass. Plans of these new roads, and of related measures to restrain traffic on the present A6 through the centre of Hazel Grove, will be displayed locally on 12, 13 and 15 December. I am writing to my hon. Friend about the details.

It seems unlikely that construction could start before the end of 1987.

Road Construction (Environmental Damage)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport, whether any compensation is available from his Department, in addition to that provided by the highway authority, for all environmental damage caused by road construction for all roads where any part of the funding emanates from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Compensation entitlements under the Land Compensation Act 1973 arising from road construction works are met directly and in full by the highway authority who carried out the works. Where such compensation is payable by a local highway authority in respect of works funded in whole or in part by my Department, the authority receive appropriate reimbursement.

National Bus Company

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport, how he proposes to restructure the National Bus Company before privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have asked the Board of NBC to consider how the local operating companies should be restructured to compete fairly on deregulation and to report to me on that and on options for privatisation. In asking the board to do this, I have made it clear that, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation, it is the Government's prime objective to achieve deregulation on terms of fair competition.

The next step for NBC is therefore to restructure the local companies so that they can compete fairly on deregulation, without assuming that they will be privatised before that time; though the Government would be glad to see proposals for privatisation under the existing legislation. On deregulation the companies must be able not only to compete fairly and effectively with other operators, but also to do so without cross-subsidy within NBC. I have asked the board to consider whether the policy they have successfully applied to Western National and Midland Red of breaking existing subsidiaries down into smaller units should be extended to other large operating subsidiaries.

The steps to secure fair competition will not, however, dictate the pattern of sale; that will be for the market to decide.

The objectives which the Government wish NBC to pursue under the new regime are as follows:

to handle privatisation so as to increase sustained competition, which is of primary importance; to proceed as rapidly as possible, compatible with this and with the legislation;
to dispose of NBC operations as going concerns so far as possible;
to offer managers/employees opportunities to acquire the whole or at least a stake in the undertakings for which they work; with due regard to the other objectives, to maximise the overall proceeds to the Exchequer.

ENERGY

Domestic Gas and Electricity (Disconnections)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the number of disconnections of (a) gas and (b) electricity supplies in England and Wales in each of the last five years to the latest available date.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the industries themselves. I have asked the chairmen of the British Gas Corporation and the Electricity Council to provide the information direct to the Hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

Life Expectancy

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department possesses on life expectancy by social class.

Mr. John MacKay: Information on standardised mortality ratios by social class, age and sex is published in the booklet "Occupational Mortality 1969-73", a copy of which is in the Library. Similar information for 1979-83 will be published in due course.

Student Awards

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the 1985-86 level of awards for students pursuing courses of further education.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Malone) and the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan), yesterday.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Meals

Mr. McCusker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the amount of subsidy paid per annum to provide school meals in Northern Ireland;

(2) how many boarding pupils there are in schools in Northern Ireland;

(3) what is the estimated cost per annum of subsidising the cost of midday meals to boarding pupils in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: Estimated net recurrent expenditure on the provision of school meals in the financial year 1984-85 is £22·5 million. There, were 2,366 boarding pupils in the 1982-83 school year; it is estimated that it would cost approximately £120,000 per year to subsidise their midday meals.

International Youth Year

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial and other support his Department has given to the Northern Ireland International Youth Year secretariat.

Mr. Scott: Financial assistance to the Northern Ireland co-ordinating committee for International Youth Year amounts to £145,000, of which £57,000 has already been paid.

ENVIRONMENT

Generalised Needs Index

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measure the generalised needs index provides (a) of the total extent of housing requirements and (b) the relative extent of need (i) between regions and (ii) between individual local authorities.

Sir George Young: Full details of the generalised needs index data used for the 1984-85 housing investment programme allocations, at both regional and individual local authority level, are available in the Library.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the house condition survey in 1986 will be carried out by the public or the private sector.

Sir George Young: It is premature at this stage to decide detailed arrangements for the next "English House Condition Survey".

Conservation (Oil Exploration)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the need to safeguard the environment of rural areas especially sensitive to development from disturbances caused as a result of the exploration for hydrocarbons.

Mr. Macfarlane: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) on 28 November at column 925-26.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make a further statement about the estimated savings which will result from the proposed abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Savings will result from abolition in two ways—

—elimination of a whole layer of local government in the metropolitan areas, thus ending unnecessary duplication —the more efficient and economical provision of those services transferred to successor authorities.

Abolition will provide arrangements which are easier for the public to understand, and remove sources of administrative conflict and tension. The resultant savings, after allowing for some transitional costs, will flow naturally from abolition. But savings are not the Government's primary objective in introducing this reform. The case for abolition rests on the provision of a more local, more accountable system of local government in the metropolitan areas.

The ultimate extent of the savings to be achieved will result from decisions yet to be taken by the successor authorities in the light of their eventual analysis of the current policies and management practices of the GLC and the MCCs.

The following estimates, like any assessment made at this stage of the likely savings to result from abolition, necessarily rest upon the information currently available to the Department and upon assumptions about the eventual decisions of the successor authorities affecting both administrative arrangements and spending policies.

Rationalisation savings

Savings will result from the removal of an unnecessary layer of government. The GLC (excluding ILEA) and the MCCs (excluding the police) at present employ directly some 60,000 people on a full-time equivalent basis. Almost half of this number will be transferred enbloc to the new authorities. Many of the remainder who are employed directly on providing other services will receive job offers from the boroughs and districts by 1 April 1986. However, there are areas where the existence of shared responsibilities leads to duplication, and provides scope for substantial savings. Such areas include planning, a major function which is currently provided at both upper and lower tier levels. As the lower tier authorities already have planning departments, it is reasonable to assume that they would not require the services of all the staff now employed by the GLC or the MCCs. Further substantial saving of staff is expected to result from the transfer of responsibility for highways where, in general successor authorities are already partly equipped to take on this function.

Furthermore, the Government consider that there will be savings in central administrative services, such as secretariat support, finance, and personal management. Although successor authorities either jointly or separately, will doubtless recruit some of these staff, particularly those providing specialist support on central purchasing or computing, economies have been assumed in central services.

In total, the savings estimated to arise from such rationalisation processes are based on an assumed reduction of about 9,000 posts. Using a cost multiplier which allows for factors such as accommodation as well as pay, this gross saving amounts to £128 million per annum. This, however, must be offset by the staff needed for continuing functions which may initially be transferred to the residuary bodies, leaving a net reduction of 8,000 posts in local government as a whole.

A further 900 staff will be required by non-departmental bodies. A small number of staff will be required by Government Departments: these will be accommodated within planned manpower totals.

Therefore the estimated net annual saving arising from rationalisation alone will be of the order of £100 million from 1986-87 onwards. This figure divides broadly equally between the GLC and the combined MCCs.

As stated earlier, the estimates of savings relating to staff reductions incorporate an element which reflects accommodation requirements. There will, however, be further proceeds from sales of surplus property owned by the abolition authorities. It is not yet possible to estimate what this could amount to, though the amount is likely to be considerable.

Transitional costs

In the initial years after abolition there will be certain transitional costs falling on the ratepayers in the metropolitan areas. These costs will fall most heavily in 1986-87. The principal component will be compensation to staff made redundant, estimated at £40 million in the first year after abolition. Some allowance must also be made for temporary costs arising from the process of organisational change. Even after taking all these elements into account, however, the Government expect net administrative savings to be made in 1986-87, in addition to which certain early policy savings are bound to be secured.

Policy Savings

The Government are confident that further savings will be achieved through economies and greater efficiency in the way in which successor authorities manage the services they will inherit, even though no comprehensive estimate of these savings can be made at this juncture. Much will depend on decisions yet to be taken by those authorities.

All of the Government's expectations of savings take account of discussions with members and officers of those lower tier authorities who are co-operating with the Government in preparing for abolition. It is the lower tier authorities who will be running the services after abolition and who are best placed to judge the economies that can be made.

The existing arrangements governing local government finance, which apply to successor authorities, will continue to apply pressures for economy. Moreover, the precepts of the new joint authorities and ILEA will be controlled by the Government for the first three years after abolition. There is also provision for manpower control.

The abolition authorities in aggregate are budgeting to overspend in relation to their targets by £432 million or 26 per cent. this year; and to overspend in relation to their grant related expenditure assessments by £601 million or 40 per cent. GREs are Government's assessments of the cost to local authorities of providing a common standard of service. The comparable figures for all authorities are 4 per cent. over target and 8 per cent. over GREs. These comparisons indicate the very considerable scope for economy which exists in the GLC and MCCs.

The GLC in particular has a reputation for needless extravagance. It has expanded the number of its committees and panels since 1981 from 30 to 59. One of these new committees — the women's committee — currently has a budget of over £9 million, three times the budget for the Equal Opportunities Commission — and the record of unnecessary grants given by this and other committees to their political allies is well documented. A further example of extravagance is the GLC's propaganda budget of £10 million, which alone is greater than the entire budgets of the cities of Oxford or Durham.

Against this background the Government have looked at the potential savings which might result from the reduction of discretionary spending under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 following the abolition of the GLC and MCC's.

The successor authorities will need substantially to increase their spending in order to provide continuing support to worthwhile voluntary and industrial development projects; they will do this both individually and under the proposed new arrangements for collective grant-giving to the voluntary sector in clause 46 of the Bill. But even allowing for this the Government estimate that annual savings of the order of £20 million could be made in Section 137 spending by eliminating extravagant and wasteful expenditure.

The GLC and MCCs have also been increasing their staff at a time when their responsibilities are diminishing. Allowing for housing transfers, the GLC's staff had increased by 1,000 or 5 per cent. between June 1981 and June 1984. A further increase of 900 has been approved since June. Greater Manchester county council has increased staff by 8 per cent. since 1981, and West Midlands county council by 6 per cent. since 1982.

The scope for major policy savings is clearly substantial. Economies are there to be made to the lasting benefit of ratepayers in the metropolitan areas. Although abolition is not being proposed solely in order to secure those benefits, the Government believe that successor authorities will prove significantly more economical as they reflect more positively and closely the concerns of their electors and ratepayers.

Drinking Water (Acidic Deposition)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he is making of the effect on drinking water of acidic deposition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Many water sources are naturally acidic and therefore water undertakers monitor and correct excess acidity as a matter of routine. So the Department has not commissioned any study relating specifically to the effect on drinking water of acidic deposition. But we have commissioned research (to a value of about £1·3 million in 1984-85) into the effects of acid deposition on lakes and streams, and on the natural life there.

The Broads

Mr. Ryder asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to apply section 41 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act to the Broads.

Mr. Waldegrave: Letters are being sent out today inviting comments from representatives of farming, landowning and conservation interests as well as the local authorities concerned with the Broads. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

GLC (Shire Horses)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council, what he intends to do with the councils shire horses.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 November at c. 59.

Merseyside County Council

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Conservative members of the Merseyside county council have made representations to him opposing his plans to abolish that council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Conservative group as a whole and individual Conservative members of the council have made a variety of representations on different aspects of our proposals.

South-West England (Flood Warning)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the flood danger early warning system in south-west England; and if he will make a statement on the lack of advance warning of the floods experienced along the north Devon coastline on the afternoon and evening of Friday 23 November.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

We are always willing to look at proposals for improving flood warning systems. We understand that on 23 November the warning of flooding was given to residents as early as possible. It is the responsibility of the South-West water authority to provide early warning of flooding along the north Devon coastline.

Dog Licensing

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultative document on dog licensing.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1984, c. 516]: I have today placed copies of the consultation document on dog licensing in the Vote Office.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Citizens Band Radio

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects British citizens band owners to be able to use a common European frequency.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have stated their intention of adopting in due course the recommendation of the Conference of European Posts and Telecommunications which provides for common European frequencies for FM CB. There is a need to clear the recommended band of its existing users and the Department is consulting manufacturing, trading and user interests. These consultations are likely to take some time but when they are completed I shall be in a position to announce when the CEPT frequencies will become available for CB in this country.

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of citizens band licences that have now been issued.

Mr. Trippier: About 570,000 new CB licences have been issued since the launch of the service in November 1981, and of these some 200,000 were valid at the end of October 1984.

Co-operative Development Agencies

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to provide matching funds for co-operative development agencies to enable them also to obtain grants from the European Economic Community social fund.

Mr. Trippier: While the Government fully support the development of the co-operative sector and have recently extended the funding of the national Co-operative Development Agency for a further six years, we have no plans to fund local co-operative development agencies. Many of these organisations, which have no formal links with the national agency, are funded by local authorities. Where such public funding exists it is possible that it could be quoted as matching public authority support for applications to the European Social Fund in respect of particular training courses that agencies may run, provided all the fund's criteria for eligibility are met.

EC Development Fund

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the criteria governing the eligibility of private firms for grants from the European Regional development fund.

Mr. Trippier: Private firms can qualify for aid under different sections of the European regional development fund.

Under the steel, shipbuilding and textile programmes drawn up under the specific Community measures section, aid is available to firms located in the eligible areas which employ less than 200 people and are engaged in manufacturing or certain services sectors. Firms in the steel, shipbuilding and textile and clothing industries are excluded unless they are diversifying into new activities.

Under Articles 17 to 23 of the new ERDF regulation, aid may be awarded in respect of private sector industrial investment projects in 'aided areas' which satisfy the criteria and receive regional aid from the Government. In this case the ERDF receipts are not passed on to the company in addition to the United Kingdom regional aid (which is already the minimum required to enable the project to proceed) but retained by the Government as a partial repayment of its own aid, which is thus at a higher overall level than would otherwise be possible.

In very limited circumstances a private firm may qualify for aid from the project financing section of the fund in respect of infrastructure projects but only if it is responsible for such infrastructure in the same way as a public authority.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Parental Contributions

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his recent decision to require certain parents of students in higher education to contribute towards tuition fees.

Mr. Brooke: Parents were last required to contribute towards tuition fees in the academic year 1976-77. The decision to revert to the previous arrangements and to require some parents to contribute towards the designated tuition fee forms part of the Government's policy to introduce a more progressive parental contribution scale and to bring about savings in awards expenditure in order to release resources for other priorities in higher education. All home students, irrespective of their parents' income, will continue to benefit from a significant subsidy (over £2,500 to more than £7,000, depending upon the course) from public funds in respect of the full cost of tuition fees.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the National Union of Students about the number of students who do not receive their full parental contribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Non-payment of parental contributions is referred to in the NUS submission on student grants for 1985-86. Evidence from the NUS Survey of undergraduate income and expenditure suggests that non-payment is less widespread than a decade ago.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department issues any guidelines on the use of animal experiments and dissection as part of the school curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department has issued advice on the care and maintenance of living animals in schools; the use of such animals is normally restricted to observation of behaviour and growth and to husbandry. There are educational grounds for the inclusion of a limited amount of dissection, frequently using abattoir material, in biology courses in secondary schools, but the Department has published no guidance on this matter.

Soil Surveys

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many surveys have been undertaken by the Soil Survey of England and Wales teams in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

	Number of surveys undertaken and published as maps
1979	9
1980	20
1981	17
1982	7
1983	14
1984	10

In addition, the Soil Survey has conducted a number of exercises which have not resulted in the publication of maps, including the national soil inventory, the national lowland peat inventory, a saline soil survey in north Kent and many farm and other detailed surveys.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many people have been working full or part-time for the Soil Survey of England and Wales each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is as follows:

At 1 October	Number of staff (full-time equivalents)
1979	74½
1980	75
1981	72
1982	67½
1983	72½
1984	68½

Tuition Fees (Higher Education)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many parents are estimated to have to pay tuition fees for courses of higher education, in the light of his announcement of 12 November.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many parents will be affected by the recent proposal to charge them tuition fees for higher education for the academic year 1985-86.

Mr. Brooke: We estimate that the parents of about 70,000 students will be assessed to contribute towards part or all of the designated tuition fee.

Education Authorities (Guidance)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will issue guidance to local education authorities about including on their primary schools' curricula education about dangers involved in alcohol, solvents, tobacco and drugs.

Mr. Dunn: It is for individual schools and local education authorities to determine the content of health education elements of the curriculum in the light of their own circumstances. The Department has given advice on alcohol, smoking and drugs, including discussion of approaches which may appropriately be adopted with young children, in its publication "Health Education in Schools" and on solvent misuse in its "Safety in Education" bulletin issued in June. The Department is urgently considering what further assistance may be given to local education authorities in the context of the Government's overall policy for tackling drug misuse among young people.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all grants made by his Department to voluntary organisations giving both the recipient and the amount, together with the date a grant was first made.

Mr. Brooke: Details of grants made by the Department in 1983-84 to bodies other than local education authorities for educational services under the Education (Grant) Regulations 1983 are listed in table 21 of the Department's annual report 1983 a copy of which is in the Library. Details of grants towards the headquarters expenditure of national voluntary youth organisations under Section 20(1)(b) of the regulations in 1983-84 were included in my reply to the question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 13 November 1984 at columns 195-98. In addition, grants were given to the following national associations under regulation 19 of the regulations:

Organisation	Financial Year 1983-84 £
National Union of Townswomen's Guilds	12,000
National Federation of Women's Institutes	15,600
Workers' Educational Association HQ	45,200
National Council of YMCAs	10,200
British Theatre Association	13,500
Educational Centres Association	17,600
National Housewives Register	5,000
National Association of Women's Clubs	26,500

Organisation	Financial Year 1983-84 £
National Federation of Community Organisations	21,000
National Institute of Adult Continuing Education	79,000
Pre-retirement Association	75,000
British Chess Federation	32,000

Schools (Staffing Levels)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if staffing levels in schools reflect the need for teachers to have skills in such subjects as computer and micro-technology.

Mr. Dunn: Teachers acquire skills in these subjects through in-service training, as well as by their own efforts. School staffing levels reflect the need for teachers to have time for such training. Under the micro-electronics in education programme 55,000 teachers have so far received various forms of training in the new technology.

Soil Survey

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent the work of the soil survey of England and Wales is duplicated; and by which organisations.

Mrs. Fenner: I have been asked to reply.

The Soil Survey of England and Wales is responsible for national soils inventory work, and has recently completed mapping the soils of the country at a scale of 1:250,000. About one-quarter of the country has been surveyed at larger scales, up to 1:25,000.

More detailed information on the soils within specific areas is needed by a number of other organisations for a variety of purposes. Surveys to provide such information are undertaken by the Soil Survey, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, institutes of the Natural Environment Research Council, and private organisations.

The Soil Survey also undertakes detailed research on soil, which supplements studies made by other research organisations.

EMPLOYMENT

Manpower Services Commission (Chairman's Salary)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the salary paid to the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission for the financial year 1983-84; what is the salary to be paid to the current chairman for the financial year 1984-85; and if he will express this as a percentage increase on the salary paid in 1983-84.

Mr. King: The salary of the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission for the financial year 1983-84 was £40,145·82. On the basis of the salaries authorised following the Top Salary Review Body's latest recommendation, the corresponding figure for the 1984-85 financial year would have been £44,644·17. This represents an increase of 11·2 per cent. over the 1983-84 total. The current chairman, Mr. Bryan Nicholson, was appointed on 22 October 1984 on secondment from Rank Xerox Limited for a three year term. It has been agreed that Rank Xerox will be reimbursed for his services on the basis of the authorised salary rates for the appointment.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the amount of levy paid to the Construction Industry Training Board by small and medium sized building firms with an annual payroll of between (a) £30,000 and £59,999, (b) £60,000 and £89,999, (c) £90,000 and £119,999 and (d) £120,000 and £149,999; and what was the annual training grant received back as a percentage of all levy by each payroll group.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have asked the Construction Industry Training Board to provide this information in the form requested and I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible. I shall also place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Community Programme

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will increase the funding of the community programme so that every person who is long-term unemployed and every person under 25 years who has been unemployed for six months may be offered a place on the community programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. I recognise and share the hon. Member's concern for the problems of long-term unemployed people. But there remain some areas in London and the south-east which have not yet filled even those places already available under the current community programme. I would therefore urge the hon. Member to use his influence to try to persuade the small minority of local authorities and trade unions which now oppose the community programme on ideological grounds to adopt a more constructive approach so that the places for which funds are available can be taken up by long-term unemployed people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has made to the European Economic Community about measures to reduce the surplus production and consequent expense of disposal and storage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have consistently urged in the Council of Ministers the continuing need to restrain CAP prices, and to apply the Council's agreement on guarantee thresholds, as the best ways of containing CAP costs and bringing about a bettter balance between supply and demand. The Community has agreed on a financial guideline for agriculture designed to control the growth of CAP spending, and we shall be pressing for its effective application in next year's CAP price fixing negotiations.

Milk Quotas

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the revised closing date for the collection of the first super levy instalments for milk production in Great Britain.

Mr. MacGregor: 50 per cent. of any levy payable on wholesale deliveries during the period 2 April-30 September is due to be collected by 14 December. The remaining 50 per cent. is due to be collected by 15 May 1985. Levy on direct sales for the period 2 April 1984-31 March 1985 is due to be collected by 31 July 1985.

Wheat Prices

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will compare the price of wheat for export, free on board, in the United Kingdom, France, the United States of America (Gulf of Mexico), Canada (St. Lawrence), Australia and Argentina.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following table for the latest date for which all prices are readily available.

Export prices for selected wheats—9 November 1984*

	$/tonne
United Kingdom
Feed wheat fob East Coast	137
France
Not available†
United States of America
Hard Red Winter (ord.) fob Gulf	153

* Prices relate to wheats of different qualities and are not therefore directly comparable.

† The latest available quote for fob Rouen is 139 $/tonne quoted on 21 September 1984.

Soil Survey

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many teams the Soil Survey of England and Wales has had in operation in each year since 1979; and where these teams have been based.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that 17 teams have been in operation in each year since 1979 and that these teams have been based at the following locations:

Harrogate, North Yorkshire
Beverley, Humberside
Penrith, Cumbria (1)
Newcastle-upon-Tyne (2)
Cambridge
Norwich, Norfolk
Shardlow, Derbyshire
Lincoln
Wolverhampton
Wellesbourne, Warwickshire
Farnham, Surrey
Maidstone, Kent
Bristol
Exeter
Dorchester, Dorset
Aberystwyth
Mold, Clwyd
Swansea (3)

Notes:

(1) Closed during 1984.
(2) Opened in 1982.
(3) Closed in 1981.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to issue guidelines or a code of conduct for local government officers who also engage in running, as owners or managers, private residential or nursing homes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The conditions of service for local authority staff are a matter for local authorities and central Government has no part in negotiating them. When inspecting residential care or nursing homes, I would expect local and health authorities inspectors to consider whether the managers have sufficient time to devote to the supervision of the home.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all grants made by his Department to voluntary organisations, giving both the recipient and the amount, together with the date a grant was first made.

Mr. John Patten: For a list of voluntary organisations which received grants in 1983-84 and the amounts received, I refer to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cummock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 22 June at column 316-20 and the amendment of the printing error at the end of the Official Report of 26 June. The additional information requested could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Opportunities for Volunteering

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what his plans are for the future of the opportunities for volunteering scheme.

Mr. John Patten: The opportunities for volunteering scheme has proved successful at enabling volunteers to make a contribution to the health and welfare of their fellow citizens. There may nevertheless be ways in which both the administration and the targetting of the scheme could be amended to make it even more effective.

For instance, one part of the scheme could be directed particularly to harnessing the energy and enthusiasm of young people, especially those without jobs.

I have today, therefore, issued a consultation paper seeking comments on a number of points that need to be settled before the scheme is placed on a long term basis from April 1986. Copies of the paper will be distributed by the voluntary organisations who act as agents in the scheme through their networks in the voluntary sector. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

In the meantime, as my right hon. Friend announced on 5 October, the fourth stage of the scheme will run in its present form from April 1985 to March 1986.

Health Authorities

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those health authorities which, in the period since the first of the 28 private contracts listed in his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 967, was entered into have decided that in-house provision is most cost-effective, giving in each case the category of ancillary service, the health authority and the hospital involved;

(2) if he will list the private contracts entered into by health authorities since the last named in his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 967, giving in each case the category of ancillary service, the health authority, the hospital and the contractor involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have not been collecting centrally the results of all competitive tenders, but we are aware of the following cases in addition to those listed in my reply on 30 October at c. 967.

Health Authority	Hospital	Contractor or in-house
Domestic
Frenchay	Hanham Hall	In-house

Acidic Deposition

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies he is making on the effects of acidic deposition on skin, eyes and respiratory systems.

Mr. John Patten: None. There is no reason to anticipate effects from acidic deposition occurring in the United Kingdom on skin, eyes and respiratory systems. However, I understand that claims of such effects elsewhere are under investigation by the World Health Organisation. Our medical advisers will be considering the results of that investigation.

Mineral Deposits (Health Effects)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what evidence he has about the effects of deposits of lead, zinc, copper and cadmium on health; and what studies he is making about them.

Mr. John Patten: It is believed that all mining of these metals in the United Kingdom has ceased. Waste from past operations can still pose potential problems, but detailed investigation of an exceptionally contaminated site has already confirmed the absence of current health effects, and further work is not contemplated.

Perinatal Deaths

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change there has been in the rate of perinatal deaths in England in social class IV since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information is given in the table:

England: perinatal mortality: Rate per 1,000 total births

	Social Class (Legitimate births only) IV*
1981	13·1
1983†	12·2
Change	−0·9

* Live births by social class are estimated from a 10 per cent. sample.
† Provisional.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what change there has been in the perinatal mortality rate in the west midlands in social classes III, IV and V since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Policy Studies Institute (Working Paper)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish his comments on the Policy Studies Institute working paper C.

Mr. Newton: It would not be appropriate to publish comments on a draft paper of this kind.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish working paper C as soon as he receives a reply to his comments from the Policy Studies Institute.

Mr. Newton: When we receive a reply from the Policy Studies Institute to our comments on draft working paper

C, we shall consider any material which they may wish to publish in addition to the working papers already published.

Maternity Allowance

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what date women who successfully claimed maternity allowance were informed of the new conditions regarding dependent husbands.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to him on 31 October at column 1096. The Department will continue to send the special letter about the new conditions for claiming an increase for a dependent husband to all successful claimants to maternity allowance until such time as the revised maternity benefit claim form is available in the new year.

Social Security Advisory Committee (Reports)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the Social Security Advisory Committee's reports listed in his reply of 25 October, Official Report, column 726-8, to the hon. Member for Oldham, West were not implemented in whole or in part.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been damaged by whooping cough vaccine in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Special Hospitals (Riot Shields)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the specific training in the use of physical restraint recently begun at Broadmoor hospital will include training in the use of riot shields;

(2) if there has been any training involving the use of riot shields at any of the special hospitals.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost to the National Health Service of treating a woman suffering from invasive cancer of the cervix.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available. The cost will vary according to the treatment required by each woman.

Hypothermia

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died of hypothermia (a) on Merseyside and (b) in Liverpool in each of the past five years to the latest date.

Mr. John Patten: The table shows the number of deaths with mention of hypothermia, among residents of Merseyside metropolitan county and Liverpool metropolitan county districts, in 1979 to 1984.

Numbers of deaths with mention of hypothermia in Merseyside Metropolitan County and Liverpool Metropolitan County District

Year	Merseyside	Liverpool
1979	43	27
1980	20	14
1981	22	12
1982	42	26
1983	20	11
1984*	13	5

* The figures for 1984 are for January to August only.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he is satisfied with the liaison between staff in local offices of his Department, local authority social service departments and voluntary agencies concerning the surveillance of recipients of benefit considered to be at risk from hypothermia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will issue guidelines to all local offices of his Department concerning the surveillance of benefit recipients considered at risk from hypothermia in the current winter;

(3) what guidelines he issues to local offices concerning supplementary benefit payments in connection with fuel bills on the danger to persons who may be at risk from hypothermia following the disconnections of electricity supplies.

Mr. Whitney: Guidance on the payment of heating additions to people receiving supplementary benefit is in paragraphs 4021-4362 of the S Manual, a copy of which is in the Library. In April 1982 the Department and the fuel industries issued a joint statement of intent to help protect supplementary benefit recipients from having their fuel supplies disconnected. This statement and instructions to local office staff are in paragraphs 9209, 9236 and Appendix 9 of the S Manual. In addition, visiting officers are instructed to contact the local authority social services department, voluntary welfare organisations, or others as appropriate if it appears that a claimant may be in danger of hypothermia.

We are satisfied with the existing instructions and with the liaison between our local office staff and other agencies. If we experience exceptionally severe weather, further instructions and publicity on extra help with heating bills will be issued.

Psychiatric Patients (Tranquillisers)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people who have been admitted to mental hospitals had been taking tranquillisers for more than one year for each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally.

Dysentery (Disinfectant)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to arrange for bulk supplies of disinfectant to be made available to the public in the event of a serious and large-scale outbreak of dysentery.

Mr. John Patten: Control of infectious diseases, including dysentery, is for medical officers for environmental health. Where they consider it appropriate, they can arrange for the disinfection of articles following an outbreak of disease.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now declare a 200-mile fisheries limit around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: This possibility remains under careful consideration. It raises a number of complex issues. No decisions have yet been taken.

Hong Kong (British Dependent Territories Citizens)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Orpington on 26 November, Official Report, column 383, if he will identify the 6,000 British dependent territories citizens in Hong Kong whom he believes the Chinese Government may not consider to be Chinese compatriots in terms of the Chinese memorandum attached to the draft agreement with the Government of the Chinese Republic, giving the expressed reason for their exclusion from the category of Chinese compatriots.

Mr. Luce: The British dependent territories citizens to whom my hon. Friend refers are people not of Chinese ethnic origin. I would reiterate the point that this is a matter for the Chinese Government.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what will be the status in terms of the British Nationality Act 1981 of British dependent territories citizens in Hong Kong who will lose their citizenship on 1 July 1997 and who will not be considered to be Chinese compatriots in the terms of the Chinese memorandum attached to the draft agreement with the Government of China;

(2) if he intends to propose legislation to define the status to be retained by British dependent territories citizens in Hong Kong after 1 July 1997; and in what way that status will differ from existing categories of citizenship.

Mr. Luce: Proposals for amendment of the British Nationality Act 1981 will be put before the House in due course. Subject to parliamentary approval, on 1 July 1997 all persons who were on 30 June 1997 British dependent territories citizens by virtue of a connection with Hong Kong will, whether or not they are Chinese compatriots in terms of the Chinese memorandum, be eligible to retain an appropriate status under the British Nationality Act, provided that they hold or are included in a British passport issued before that date, except that persons born on or after 1 January 1997 but before 1 July 1997 may obtain or be included in such a passport up to 31 December 1997. The new status proposed will be similar to the present BDTC status, but will not carry the right to transmissibility by descent.

Hong Kong (Overseas Civil Service)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made for the payment of lump sum compensation to pensionable members of Her Majesty's Overseas Civil Service in Hong Kong who feel obliged to leave that service before normal retirement age when Hong Kong is transferred to the sovereignty of the Chinese Republic.

Mr. Luce: No such arrangements have yet been made.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council of 26 to 28 November.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. and learned Friend represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council which met in Brussels from 26-28 November. I was also present.

In the context of enlargement, Ministers discussed reform of the internal wine regime, fisheries, certain detailed aspects of the Portuguese negotiations, Spanish agriculture and Spanish industrial tariff transition. Ministerial negotiations with Spain and Portugal were held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council. Enlargement issues will be further discussed at the European Council on 3-4 December.

Following its meeting with the European Parliament on 21 November, the Council discussed the text on budget discipline. The substance of the text has already been agreed. We made it clear that we would not be in a position to seek the approval of the House for implementation of the inter-governmental agreement on supplementary financing for 1984 until the text on budget discipline has been formally adopted.

The Council declared its concern and disappointment that the United States has rejected the Community's terms for negotiating restraints on steel pipe and tube exports, fully reserving its rights under the GATT. It agreed to denounce the 1982 EC-US exchange of letters on these exports.

Ministers agreed that the committee of Permanent Representatives should consider further Vice-President Davignon's request for an exchange of letters on science and technology co-operation with the Japanese.

The Council agreed the generalised scheme of preferences for 1985, subject to a British parliamentary scrutiny reserve which has since been lifted.

Ministers considered the Commission's proposals for integrated Mediterranean programmes. No agreement was reached on this issue which will be discussed at the European Council in Dublin on 3-4 December.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. Heads of State and Government will meet at the European Council in Dublin on 3-4 December. At present nine meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for December. In addition,

Community Ministers will meet with their African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) colleagues in Lomé on 8 December to sign the third Lomé convention.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 3 and 4 December to continue its discussions on total allowable catches (TACs) and quotas for 1985 and relations with Norway.

The Environment Council is due to meet on 6 December to discuss a range of proposals on environmental matters especially the proposed directives dealing with air pollution from large combustion plants, the reduction of the lead content of petrol and the control of vehicle emissions.

The Economic and Finance Council is expected to meet on 10 December to consider the annual report on the economic situation in the Community; the proposed Commission mandate for negotiation of an OECD sector agreement on export credits for aircraft; a possible Commission mandate for further discussions within the OECD consensus group on tied aid credits; a progress report on negotiations on the proposed non-life insurance services directive; and measures to strengthen the European monetary system, including convergence and surveillance procedures, progress on financial integration and the development of the public and private ecu. Ministers may also consider a compromise proposal concerning tax exemptions for travellers, for small private consignments, and for fuel in tanks of commercial vehicles.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 10-11 December to consider agricultural structures, including aids for investment in agricultural holdings, measures for forestry and the protection of the environment. The Council will also discuss beef imports from third countries under GATT; the collection of the milk supplementary levy; and wine reform including vineyard planting, production rules for sparkling wine and the compulsory declaration of alcoholic strength on a number of alcoholic drinks.

The Transport Council will meet on 11-12 December, when it is expected to continue its discussions on the harmonisation of lorry weights and dimensions; road haulage quotas; a proposed regulation on road safety; railway co-operation; and infrastructure support. Ministers will also consider a progress report on a timetable for the harmonisation and liberalisation of inland transport; Community policy on civil aviation and on shipping; and proposals on drivers' hours, summertime and hired vehicles.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council is due to meet on 13 December to consider the draft resolution on long-term unemployment; a draft recommendation on positive action for women; a draft proposal for a third programme for the exchange of young workers; a draft directive on industrial noise; and a draft decision on Community action to combat poverty. Ministers are expected to be given a progress report on the draft "Vredeling" directive and may also consider future regional priorities for the European social fund.

The Foreign Affairs Council is expected to meet on 17-18 December to consider any follow-up action needed after the Dublin Council; and to prepare its position on outstanding points in the negotiations with Spain and Portugal. The Council will review the Community's position in the light of the United States decision to impose unilaterally a 5·9 per cent. market share ceiling on Community exports of pipe and tubes; will consider duty-free newsprint quota arrangements for 1985; and will discuss Community relations with Cyprus in preparation for the EC-Cyprus Association Council which is due to take place at some time during these two days.

The Internal Market Council is due to meet on 18 December to discuss the draft directive on the right of establishment of pharmacists to resolve outstanding problems affecting certain member states. The Council may also discuss the proposal for a single administrative document for goods traffic; the standardisation of manufactured products; product liability and a draft directive on co-ordination of laws relating to self-employed commercial agents. Ministers may consider progress reports on the EC draft bankruptcy convention, on proposals for a unit trusts directive and on the draft regulation to establish a European Economic Interest Grouping.

The Research Council is expected to meet on 19 December to discuss proposed research and development programmes in fusion, radioactive waste, reactor safety, radiation protection and non-nuclear energy. Ministers will also discuss biotechnology research, basic research in industrial technology (BRITE) and proposals for a video communications project.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 68

SESSION 1984-85

19th November—30th November 1984

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speakers rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading 'Speaker'.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of the volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
